GOD'S OWN PECULIAR TREASURE.

Malachi, Revised Version.

Lord! Thy peculiar treasure
Thou makest them to be
Who find their chiefest pleasure
In glorifying Thee.
Thine own peculiar treasure
Thou makest them to be.

For Thou dost hear from heaven
Thy children while they walk Together morn and even,
And of Thy mercies talk.
Thine own peculiar treasure
Thou makest them to be.

God-loving and God-fearing,
In brotherhood they dwell,
While, one another cheering,
Thy faithfulness they tell.
Thine own peculiar treasure
Thou makest them to be.

For all who bear Thy semblance
And venerate Thy name,
The Book of Thy remembrance
Will crown with holy fame.
Thine own peculiar treasure
Thou makest them to be.

Items for Lady Readers.

QUEEN MARGHERITA OF ITALY.

The Queen, a handsome, gracious lady, forms an important element in any consideration of the power represented by the Quirinal. She has the reputation of being the best-dressed lady in Europe, and that title alone is sufficient to endear her to half the population of the country, that is to say, to the female half. Beauty is always a power, and rarely is its influence felt to such a degree as when it adorns royalty. Perhaps it would be more true to say that "charm" is the special quality by which Queen Margaret of Savoy fascinates so many of those who see her or who are brought within the circle of the Italian court. As a wife and a mother her character is spotless. It has not been always possible for her to maintain this high character, of which she herself is so resplendent an example, in the court over which she reigns; but she has striven hard to do so. Her piety and devotion have been praised by those who were not given to such practices, and that has been detrimental in some degree to her influence. At one period of her reign she was credited with the endeavor to bridge over, by her piety and by her marked attention and respect to the clergy she met in her drives, the gulf existing between the Quirinal and the Vatican. If such was even her intention or hope, she has long since seen its folly. Her friends no longer talk of her piety and devotion. Her talents are considerable. She talks several languages with correctness and facility, among them, German, English and French are particularly well spoken. She is an omnivorous reader of English works, and she is well acquainted with the modern novelists of the higher type. Among her other accomplishments is that of music, which she renders with taste and feeling, especially in singing. She is a constant attendant at the orchestral concert, where the best classical music is performed, and her presence is assured at every new opera or when a new prima donna revives one of the older and more melodious masterpieces of Italian music. Though insisting on the rigid observance of the etiquette with which she should be received, she is all womanly when one of her attendants or one who has served her well happens to fall ill. When the Marquis of Villamarina, who lived in the Quirinal and was a friend of Queen Margaret, became ill and died the Queen attended him like a hired nurse; in fact, her devotedness on this occasion won the admiration of the nursing sisters who were called in to attend the dying man.—Rome Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

Things Useful.

Orange Loaf Cake.—Beat the yolks of six eggs to a cream, with half a pound of powdered sugar and two ounces of softened butter. Add the grated rind and pulp of three oranges. Take the pulp out with a spoon, saving all the juice and rejecting the core and seeds. Sift together half a pound of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder, and stir into the cake alternately with the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Pour quickly into well-greased tins and bake in a moderate oven. This is nice baked in little pans of fancy shapes, and when done dip them in orange icing.

Orange Icing.—From a five-cent baker's loaf of stale bread cut off all the crust, and grate or crumble the inside as fine as possible. Pour over it one quart of boiling milk, add a quarter of a pound of butter and the same of sugar Let it stand until cold. Then add the grated rind of one, and the pulp and juice of two large oranges and six eggs beaten light. Pour into a buttered dish and bake one hour. Serve hot or cold.

The eyes should always be wiped toward the nose, as it presses out the fine lines from the corners. Every woman has heard of the virtues of rain water for the complexion, but it is hard to procure this in our city-supplied houses. A substitute is to keep a pitcher of warm water for toilet use in which lemon, orange or cucumber peel is allowed to soak. Water so impregnated, it is said, imparts a healthy glow and really freshens the complexion, while it softens the skin.

Crokonole Patties—Make a very stiff mush of Indian meal, and when cool enough to handle mix in the following: To each pint of mush have one teacupful of ham, one of finely chopped cabbage, and half a cupful each of minced onions and finely chopped pickles—cucumbers are best—with red pepper and salt to taste. Mix thoroughly, and roll into balls slightly flattened with the hand, dip in egg and roll in cracker, not bread crumbs, as the bread does not give it the crispness that the crackers do. Fry in hot lard, and place on paper for a few minutes before serving. These are excellent hot, and nice cold for tea, lunch or for school children.

COLD BOILING WATER.

At High Altitudes It Is Not Hot Enough to Cook Potatoes.

"Cold boiling water, indeed! Boiling water is the hottest kind of thing. Don't I know? Haven't I scalded my fingers more than once with water from that tea kettle?"

James is right, and yet he is wrong. Boiling water is not always very hot water, in spite of his painful experience.

This is the way it happens.

When water boils ordinarily it is because great heat has separated the tiny particles of the water, forcing upward and outward in lively bubbles the air which is contained in them. This is done in spite of the downward pressure of the atmosphere. After the water has become hot enough to boil it can get no hotter, because the air escapes as fast as it is sufficiently heated to do so.

There are places on the earth where the pressure of the atmosphere upon the water is so slight that it requires but little heat to push apart the particles and set free the air bubbles, which are confined in the water, so it begins to boil before it becomes very hot. It ought hardly to be called cold water, perhaps, but it is certainly far from being as hot as ordinary boiling water. This state of things is found on all high mountain tops, as the atmosphere grows weaker and its pressure less as one ascends.

A gentleman traveling at a great elevation in the Andes mountains put some potatoes in a pot of water over a hot fire, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat. The water began to boil almost immediately, but the potatoes did not cook. All the afternoon and all night the water bubbled and boiled, but still the potatoes were not cooked. The boiling water was not hot enough.

A Bible for a Pistol.

"See, mother, see what I have brought you!" exclaimed a young Brazilian, holding up to view a well-bound, gilt-edged book. "Antonio Marques told me that the priest ordered him to burn it, but he did not like to destroy so good a book, and was afraid to displease the priest by keeping it, so I offered to trade my old double-barrelled pistol for it. I thought you might like to have the book, for they say it is all about religion, and you are so religious. It might be of use when you go to repeat your prayers for people who are dying."

The mother took the book from her son's hands, and slowly reading the title, "A Santa Biblia," said: "Ah! this is good; this is the 'Rule of Life.' I am glad to have it." Then beginning at the first of Genesis, she glanced over several chapters until she reached the tenth. "Yes, you are right, my son, here is just the kind of prayer I want. Here is a long list of names, and as they are all in the Bible, they must all be of saints, and some of them will surely help the poor creatures."

The youth frequently found his mother with the book before her when he came in from his work, and had he taken the trouble to look over her shoulder, he would have found her always reading the tenth chapter of Genesis.

The woman, who had a fame of knowing by heart a great many prayers, was often sent for to go even long distances to repeat them for the hope and comfort of the dying; and she was faithfully trying to master the long names so as to say them off glibly to serve as a prayer.

One day, as they sat taking their noonday coffee, a messenger came from a neighboring plantation, begging her to go at once to see a young girl who was very ill. With book in hand she set out, and arriving at the house, a sad though not unusual sight met her eyes. A girl of about fifteen lay upon the bed, her beautiful black eyes looking strangely bright in contrast with the pale features. The parents and sisters, instead of caring for her, were wringing their hands and wildly crying out: "She is dying! She is dead!" The sick girl feebly stretched out a wasted hand, gasping: "They say that I am dying; teach me quickly how to die; tell me, what must I do?" The old woman gently shook her hand, and in a soothing voice, said: "Don't be nervous, dear; if you will repeat after me the Pater Noster, the Ave Maria, the prayer to St. Joseph, and the rest, and then a prayer that I have learned from this good book, you need not be afraid."

A sight never to be forgotten by one who knows that there is but one "name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved," was this death-bed scene. The old woman, in clear tones, rapidly repeated among other things: "Shem, Ham, Japheth, Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan," and so on through the long list. The dying girl vainly tried to follow her as her voice grew fainter and fainter, for she was with all her failing strength, clinging to this false hope, as she passed out into eternity.

Some years later the young man who had gotten the Bible in such a curious way married, and left the old house to live at the wife's homestead. One evening, as the old father sat in his usual place reading, the husband said: "Anninha, what is that book your father is always reading?"

"That," she replied, is the Bible. He often tells me about what he reads, and it is very interesting. I wish I could read it for myself; but it is a French book, and I can only read Portuguese."

"If it is called the "Holy Bible," said he "then my mother has it in Portuguese, for I gave it to her long ago. I never read it myself, but she used to learn things out of it for prayers. They never sounded very interesting to me."

"Could you get it for me, Jose?" she asked.

"Yes, I will go over and ask mother for it to-morrow," promised he.

When the wife got the Bible, she carried it to her father, who was much pleased to find this favorite book in his native tongue, and, opening it at the New Testament, he began to read aloud. The young couple listened, and soon grew so interested that they begged him to go on, till they kept him reading late into the night. Deeply touched by the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," they began to read for themselves. Soon they learned that pardon and peace had already been purchased for them, and that what God required of them was not penances and a bondage to fear through life, and masses and agonies of purgatory after death, but child-like faith and loving obedience—that godliness which gives promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come.

The son's first wish was to have his mother learn the good news, so he carried back the Bible, saying: "Why, mother, you never got the best out of this book! You only looked for something to die by, and it is full of good words to live by, as well. Let me read you some."

"No, my son," responded she, "I got what I wanted out of the book, and that is enough for me. I do not care to look for more."

"But, mother," pleaded he, "you would be so much happier if you knew the true way to live and to die."

"Hush, Jose, said the mother indignantly. "Do you dare to hint that I, who have taught so many how to die, do not know myself? Let me alone, and do not trouble me any more about the book."

The man went back to his wife troubled and disappointed. The more they studied the book, however, the better they understood that it was God's Spirit who had opened their eyes, and to him they must look to perform the same miracle upon their mother, that blind one leading the blind, and for this they are still daily watching and praying."—Children's Work for Children.

A Little Gentleman.

The very first snow of the season had come—just enough to slide on without going in over your boots.

It was a sunny December day, and Ted and Mamie were out on the terrace all ready for fun.

Mamie wore her blue hood and red mittens. Her eyes matched the hood, and her cheeks matched the mittens. She wanted the first slide down the terrace.

"O, please let me, Teddy?" she begged in a happy flutter.

"No," said Ted; "I'm going to slide first, 'cause I'm the oldest. 'Sides, it's my sled."

"Then you're a mean boy," said Mamie.

"Say much, and I'll slide all the time," answered Ted, coolly.

Wasn't it a pity that a quarrel should cloud the beautiful bright day? Mamma thought so. She had opened the window to get a handful of fresh snow, and she heard it all.

"Ted! Mamie!" mamma called. "I'm going to give Tony and Cleo a bath. Don't you want to see?"

They came, hanging back a little.

"O, yes!" cried Mamie.

It was yet one of her delights to watch the new canaries bathe.

Ted didn't say anything—he didn't care much about such fun himself—but but he looked on while mamma took off the cage bottom and set the cage over a glass dish full of water on the oil cloth mat.

Tony hopped to the lower perch with an eager flutter, and dipped his yellow bill in the water. Then all at once he seemed to remember something. He looked up at Cleo.

"Chip! chip! chip!" he said.

Cleo understood.

"Che up!" she answered softly.

Then down she came, and into the water she went, while Tony stood by and sung as if he meant to burst his little throat.

When Cleo finished her bath he took his, scattering the water drops like rain.

Mamma looked at Teddy.

"What do you think of it?" she asked, with a twinkle.

"I think Tony's a little gentleman," answered Ted promptly. "And I'm going to be one too. You can slide first, Mamie."

"No, you can," said Mamie.

It was to see who shouldn't be first this time! But Teddy conquered.—Sunshine.

A Feathered Hero.

"H-e, he, r-o, ro, hero," sang Francie, one morning, as she came tripping to mamma with brush and comb, to have her hair brushed and braided for school, and thinking of her spelling-lesson she had learned the evening before.

"Papa, what is a hero?" she asked.

"Why, Francie, I thought you knew," said her elder sister, Minnie, who was busy gathering up her books and putting them into the satchel.

"Well, daughter, tell her what a hero is, if you know," said papa.

"Why, a hero is a famous soldier, who has won many great battles," said Minnie, confidently.

"Such a one is, no doubt, a hero," said papa; "but I think we can find heroes nearer home if we look for them."

Just at that moment a loud cry was heard from the little girl. "Owch! mamma; you do hurt so," she exclaimed; and, truly, the golden hair was in a terrible tangle. It took all the good mamma's patience and loving care to get the bright little head into proper shape without another outcry.

"When you come home," said papa, "I will introduce you to a hero." With the usual good-by kisses and a handful of pretty flowers, gathered as they passthrough the yard, the two children went their way to school.

In the afternoon, while mamma was busy with the dinner, in rushed the children, hot and tired with their long walk. Minnie began at once to help set the table; but Francie went straight to the sideboard, saying, "O mamma! I am so hungry; I want a biscuit or a teacake." She looked until she found what she wanted. She began munching and asking questions about a wee little white chicken that was cuddled down in a corner of a small box near the fireplace.

After dinner papa called the little girl to him, as he sat near the fireplace. He showed her the little white chicken which mamma had found in the barnyard, with its poor little leg broken, where the colt had stepped on it. She had bound up the broken leg and given the poor thing some food, and put it in the box. There it was, twittering away such a merry, cheerful little song of thanksgiving that no one would have believed it was suffering from a hurt that would have been so terrible a thing to a human being.

"Here is my hero," said papa; and he told the little girl about the accident, and how much suffering it must have caused. He showed her how bravely the little fellow bore all the pain. Instead of crying out he was trying as hard as he could to make his kind benefactor understand his gratitude by singing a sweet, cheerful little song. And then he told her that all those who bravely bore pain or trouble of any kind, and tried to be cheerful and contented, even when they were suffering, were really heroes, like the little white chicken.

Francie thought of her outcries in the morning, when the dear, patient mamma did but pull her hair a little with the brush; and of her impatience when she came home from school hungry, and could not wait even a minute for dinner to be ready. She felt quite ashamed that a poor, little, broken-legged chicken should be more of a hero than a little girl seven years old, who went to school and could read and spell.

Minnie stood by in silence, and she, too, felt that to be a hero one did not have to be a soldier and fight battles—except, perhaps, silent battles with her too impatient temperament. Both the children resolved to be in future more like the little white chicken.—Francie's Papa, in Our Little Ones.

SALT-RHEUM; FLESH CRACKED OPEN AND BLED!

Miss LOTTIE CLARK, River Falls, Pierce County, Wisconsin, writes: "It gives me pleasure to express my faith in the virtue of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Having suffered for three years from salt-rheum, and after having been unsuccessfully treated by a good physician, I began the use of the 'Discovery.' The humor was in my hands. I was obliged to keep a covering on them for months at a time, changing the covering morning and night. The stinging, burning and itching sensation would be so intense that at times it seemed as if I would go crazy. When I bent the fingers, the flesh would crack open and bleed. It is impossible for me to describe the intense pain and suffering which I endured night and day. After taking six bottles of the "Discovery" I was entirely cured.

I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enough." Sold by Dealers.

SAY SOES.

Mr. Frederick Cowen, the composer, gave evidence of his musical talent at a remarkably early age. He was a little fellow of six and hardly out of the nursery, when he wrote his first waltz.

Street-car drivers and others who are constantly exposed to all kinds of weather, and cannot find time to lay by should ever bear in mind this plain fact that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cures coughs and colds. It is unequaled.

The heavy, driving rains often carry away from the barnyard a deep stream of valuable fertilizing material, which is irretrievably lost. This may be prevented by keeping the yard well scraped up, and the contents carried promptly to the fields, and spread. There they are safe from leaching and waste, and there they will do the most good.

TO DOWN SPOOKS.

A wealthy bachelor declared that a horried hag had glared at him through the night. His friends laughed at him but he insisted that the house was haunted. He grew ill, complaining of extreme heaviness in the stomach, his appetite failed, he grew sallow, emaciated and despondent, believing he was going to die, the spook being a warning, and declared he could hear funeral bells ringing in his ears, and even hinted at suicide. A friend induced him to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and he rapidly grew well, spooks and all his distressing symptoms disappearing. A torpid liver and dyspepsia caused his suffering and the medicine cured both. The "Discovery" is the only remedy for biliousness and indigestion, or dyspepsia, so certain in its curative action as to warrant its sale on trial. A guarantee, in print, wraps every bottle.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation, biliousness and derangements of stomach, liver and bowels.

Let anyone who has an attack of lockjaw take a small quantity of turpentine warm it, and pour it on the wound, no matter where the wound is, and relief will follow in less than a minute. Nothing better can be applied to a severe cut or bruise than cold turpentine; it will give certain relief almost instantly.

To stop retching take half a wineglassful of pure lemon-juice, mix with it just sufficient salt of tartar to destroy the acidity. Give a teaspoonful of this frequently till the retching ceases.

"You say Smith leads a dual life?" "Yes, he's a bull on the Stock Exchange and a bear at home."

If a man wants to work hard with his brain he must sleep and eat well His food should contain as far as possible large quantities of the substances of which the brain is composed—namely, fat, salts, and phosphorous. To effect this partake plentifully of fat and lean meat, eggs, and the cereals.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Makes Delicious Lemonade.

A teaspoonful added to a glass of hot or cold water, and sweetened to the taste, will be found refreshing and invigorating.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Phillips Brooks:

When we ask why such a man was taken, we must answer that in the universe of God there are no mistakes; that death is but the breaking away of the last cloud, and the letting of the life out to its completion.

Christian Secretary:

The great purpose of preaching the gospel is to help people heavenward, not to sow doubts in their minds. The minister is to preach the truth, and do it with the demonstration of the Spirit. Then he will have conversions.

F. W. Farrar, D. D.:

Little self-denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favorite temptations—these are the silent threads of gold which, when woven together, gleam out so brightly in the pattern of life that God approves.

The Presbyterian:

The Church is greatly dependent upon her rising ministry for her future peace and prosperity. She will be molded and affected by the piety, the soundness of faith, the ability and spirituality of the preaching of the young ministers who are yearly sent out to man her pulpits and to fill positions of influence in her communion.

Lutheran World:

The creed-smasher is not making much headway. Indeed, those unsophisticated brethren who thought to rip things up in a day have found their undertaking a hard one. When the Church began to study history it was soon discovered that the same kind of radicalism had flourished before, only under different names. The creed-smasher is as old as Christendom and is the father of every phase of sectarianism.

New York Christian Advocate:

I think the strictness of self-examination for ministerial fitness is contained in that solemn, searching question of our Lord, thrice repeated, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?" It is not a minister's wisdom, but his conviction, which imparts itself to others. Nothing gives life but life. Real flame alone kindles other flame. This was the power of the apostles. "We believe, and therefore speak." Firm faith in what they spoke; that was the basis of the apostles' strength; but in us there is one thing wanting—we only half believe.

FIND REST.

In the eleventh chapter of Matthew we have the gospel condensed in three verses at the close. These are the words of JESUS. There are two parts though we often fail to mark the division and progress of thought and so fail to get the full meaning and blessing. In our hasty conclusion from hurried reading we fail to see the provision for experience and growth and the conditions to this. Here is a help for the difficulty once presented by a young Christian to the writer that preachers seem inconsistent in saying the sinner can do nothing, and should cease trying to do anything to save himself as salvation is not of works, but by faith, and yet always urging to work out salvation with fear and trembling. There is no difficulty if we only receive the truth as here distinguished. Our SAVIOUR says: "Come unto Me * * * and I will give you rest." This is the first part of his words and addressed to the unsaved. There is an inferential meaning that JESUS is a refuge of His people and gives rest from trouble. But the weary and heavy laden here are sinners and they can do nothing to secure forgiveness, the rest of justification. That is by grace, the gift of GOD. JESUS gives rest. It is not possible for the sinner to do anything to merit this. It is secured by the finished work of CHRIST. The sinner receives the gift in the empty hand of faith. When the gift has been received the second part of our SAVIOUR'S words should be heard. In them He tells us we may find rest. Here the preacher tells us we have something to do. Until JESUS gives us rest we are dead in trespasses and sins. After receiving the gift, having been quickened by the HOLY GHOST, we are to work out our salvation with fear and trembling as GOD worketh in us both to will and to do.

The prophet ISAIAH gave a parallel to this in the thirtieth chapter in these words: "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength." There is another parallel passage in Hebrews: "Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need." These three portions of Scripture may be profitably studied together as statements of the two parts of salvation for the helpless sinner that he may receive the gift of GOD, eternal life through our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and for the saved sinner that he may go on from strength to strength. In forgetting the things that are behind and reaching forth towards those that are before the saved sinner shall find rest.

The SAVIOUR gives three means of doing this. The first is to enter His service. The figure used is that of oxen under the yoke. To encourage the timid and to assure all of the blessing, He says "my yoke is easy," using a word which literally means useful and gives the suggestion that in being useful, in the service, the yoke of service is easy. It may be that as the cushion of love and grace lies under the yoke and bears it up from the neck, that will make it easy. The suggestion that the yoke is double and for two and that JESUS always served with His saved one in a joint service will help to make it easy. The added words "my burden is light," in the application suggests that part of the service may be burden-bearing. An easy inference would carry us to the thought of burdens of sorrow and care which have their work in finding rest. But that is beyond the present thought that by serving CHRIST, doing something for Him, we shall find rest. The second means is that of being a hearer in the school of CHRIST—whether taking Him as teacher and having all our lessons from Him or studying to learn more about Him. In either case we are learning in the school of CHRIST, under instruction of the HOLY GHOST with the Bible and Providence as text books that our education may come to this; we find rest unto our souls. The third means is following the example of CHRIST. We may think of this as what we learn in the school or what we practice out of school hours. The latter is the means whereby we find rest.

In this service we are to be withdrawn from every other service or sympathy gladly bearing the yoke for Him and carefully refusing to serve any other if we would find rest. We must expect discipline and correction, sometimes, it may be, sharp and severe when we are inattentive or stubborn, or with difficult tasks for our good if we would find rest. In trying to follow His example we may find duties disagreeable and difficult and ways rough and steep with burdens to be borne and trials to be endured if we would find rest to our souls.

This rest is not the same as peace of conscience which has to do with relief from the sense of guilt and its distress to be removed so that we may have the memory of a sin without its bitterness. It is not the same as the peace of GOD—which is rather an impartation of that peace which as a central calm holds in GOD undisturbed amidst all disturbed affairs. This rest is not Heaven to which we hope to come. That rest of Heaven remains for the people of GOD, beyond the turmoil and strife and raging earthly things, where sorrow and sighing cannot be. This is a growth, an experience, an attainment of this life, with all its temptations and snares and the sin which doth so easily beset us. The reference here should be to the fifth of Romans with its grace wherein we stand and rejoice in hope of the glory of GOD. In this we grow in grace, as tribulation worketh patience and patience experience and experience hope and hope maketh not ashamed because the love of GOD is shed abroad in our hearts by the HOLY GHOST which is given unto us.

This rest we find is a more general experience than any of the special good we have compared with it. As used by our SAVIOUR its good is all that follows justification in the way of experience and growth in this life in the benefit of working for CHRIST learning of Him and following His example. In our reading of this text and meditations on it we are called to make the distinction between the rest which is given and the rest we find. The one is of the mercy of GOD in CHRIST JESUS that being justified by faith we have peace with GOD through our LORD JESUS CHRIST. The other is the ground of self-poise and a secure position gotten by experience of the grace of GOD in working out our salvation. This cannot be by so called good works apart from CHRIST but only after He gives us rest and as we in His service learn of Him and follow His example, meek and lowly of heart.

LOUISVILLE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY has just passed the first annual stone on its journey. It has been remarkably successful in its initiation and outstart. Thirty-one students avail themselves of the admirable instruction it affords—one of whom comes from Persia. Now too it finds a friend who enables it to go forward prosperously, avoiding the trials and embarrassments usual to such institutions at the outset. Mr. A. J. ALEXANDER, of "Woodbnrn House," Kentucky has deeded to the endowment of the Seminary a piece of property in Chicago valued at $100,000. The buildings last year brought in a rental of $8,000.

The seminary is under the control of the Synods of Kentucky and Missouri. Special attention is given to the study of the English Bible.

HERE AND THERE.

NEXT WEEK WE WILL GIVE OUR readers the first of the admirable series of articles we promised them: "Among the Stars"—by Sir RICHARD STOWELL BALL, Royal Astronomer of Ireland. We can promise them a delightful treat. It will be followed by the articles "An Hour with Insects," "An Hour with Plants," etc.

We will send the paper to any member of a family in which it is not taken, from now to January 1st. '95, for $1.00. Send on at once, and begin with the series.

FOR REASONS NOT NECESSARY TO mention, we have placed the Foreign Mission article on our fourth page.

BY CONSECRATION "WE MEAN AN entire surrender of the whole being to GOD—spirit, soul and body placed under His absolute control, for Him to do with us just what He pleases. We mean that the language of our hearts, under all circumstances and in view of every act, is to be 'Thy will be done.' We mean the giving up of all liberty of choice. We mean a life of absolute obedience.

* * * * * * *

"I wish I could only show to every one the unfathomable sweetness of the will of GOD. Heaven is a place of infinite bliss because His will is perfectly done there, and our lives share in this bliss just in proportion as His will is perfectly done in them. He loves us—loves us, I say—and the will of love is always blessing for its loved one. Some of us know what it is to love, and we know that could we only have our way, our beloved ones would be overwhelmed with blessings. All that is good and sweet and lovely in life would be poured out upon them from our lavish hands, had we but the power to carry out our will for them. And if this is the way of love with us, how much more must it be so with our GOD, who is love itself!—Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

WHEREVER A TRUE WIFE COMES, home is always around her. The stars may be over her head, the glow-worm in the night's cold grass may be the fire at her feet; but home is where she is, and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses ceiled with cedar, or painted with vermillion, shedding its quiet light for those who else are homeless. This, I believe, is the woman's true place and power.—Ruskin.

IT IS SELDOM WE READ A MORE worthy tribute, as we think, to the virtues of one deceased than the following to Senator A. H. COLQUITT, of Georgia. It is taken from the editorial columns of the Savannah News: Such a life as his, it were well worth to live. Senator COLQUITT demonstrated that a successful politician may be also an unselfish man and an humble Christian. His is an example worthy of emulation by the youths of our land:

His public career was a long and successful one, and from the beginning to the end of it there is no blot upon the record he made. His purposes were high and his motives pure. If he made mistakes they were honest ones. He adopted no course in politics with a view of advancing his political fortunes. His sole aim was to promote the public good and advance the welfare of the people.

He was trusted and honored, because he was trustworthy and honorable. Early in his public career the people put their confidence in him, and they never withdrew it. On the day of his death he had as strong a hold upon those who had made him governor and senator as he had when they elected him. No better evidence is needed that he was equal to the duties imposed upon him and faithful to the trust confided to him.

He was not a money getter. If he had ability to accumulate wealth he did not use it. The high positions he held must have presented numerous opportunities to make money. He did not take advantage of them. It may be that he was so occupied with his public duties that he did not see and appreciate them. It is certain that it was never charged against him that he neglected the people's interests to look after his own, and it was never suggested that he used his office for his own gain. He died poor in this world's goods, but rich in the respect and love of the people of his State, and of those with whom he served in congress.

* * * * * *

He was a man of strong religious convictions, and his example was always in favor of a moral and religious life. * * *

He was a soldier, a statesman and a leader—a good man, who will be missed and mourned.

EDUCATION COLLECTION IN MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Committee held its regular meeting this week and directed me to state the condition of the cause. There are two facts which need attention.

I. The April collection is for candidates for ministry and NOT for "Church and Christian Education;" i. e., the April collection is for the regular cause. This is by order of Presbytery. This order does not show any lack of appreciation of the other collection; for it is hoped the supplemental collection may be taken up at some other time. But when Presbytery was arranging its collections, it was discovered that we had more than twenty candidates and no source of income save the November and April collections: So that Presbytery was forced to reserve April; as indeed has always been done, although the pressure was much less.

So that the April collections will be sent to R. A. Dunn, Charlotte, N. C., for the regular cause.

II. The committee have paid three-fourths of amounts promised to candidates and have no more money—$250 will be needed to keep our young men at their work. The committee have exhausted their resources and appeal to the churches. If $250 is sent to us from April collection, we can pay out; if not our young men must suffer. The Presbytery has done very little. The Charlotte churches have given most of the money so far and can be expected to do no more. Only interest and promptness can save the cause; the $250 can be easily raised if taken in hand.

We need scarcely add that this cause is one of the noblest, as it is one of the most needed, on the entire list; also that our young men are noble students and are economical. We believe the churches will give them the $250 promised. Please send the collections promptly.

About the Organist.

"Don't shoot him; he's doing the best he can," is the legend said to have been posted over the organ bench in a Leadville church. Such a sign suggests two facts of wide application, namely: (1) The disposition in our churches to criticise some one who has a public part to perform, whether it be organist or choir, or minister or sexton. (2) The reasonable presumption that these good people are all seeking earnestly to discharge their functions with fidelity: Says the Congregationalist:

The organist's place in church worship, though recognized by all as important, does not always receive that emphasis which is its due. He, more than any one, next to the minister, can make or mar the harmony of the service. A few suggestions from a clergyman who sometimes enjoys the privilege of presiding at the organ may be helpful.

Every part rendered by the organist needs to be governed by this dominant thought, namely, the place it should occupy in producing spiritual effects. The idea that an organist should ever think of performiug a certain selection in divine worship for the sake of displaying his artistic skill can be nothing less than an abomination in the sight of God. No discount on fine execution is intimated, if it is only utilized and made subservient to the highest ends.

The prelude, if it has any raison d'etre, is given to produce a worshipful frame of mind in the listener. Its object must be to introduce the waiting assembly to the presence chambers of the King in His beauty. No one piece of music more closely meets the writer's ideal of a true prelude than Handel's Largo, which, by its stately and majestic measures, seems to inspire the soul with due reverence.

The interlude has its use in the rest it gives to the voice for a brief interval between verses, but it needs to be kept within the bounds of chastened thought and worshipful melody. For a hymn of ordinary length one interlude, set midway, ought to answer.

In "announcing" the tune to be sung, if it is a familiar one, the organist of good taste will simply play a few bars, sufficient to indicate the identity of the tune. Sometimes one hears an old tune like Martin with all its "repeats" played through before the choir sings. Such a practice is tedious to the ear and wasteful of time.

It is in the matter of the postlude, however, that I desire to make the strongest impression of dissent from the prevailing custom. As frequently rendered that closing piece seems to say to the people, if it has any language, "All that has been expressed by the preacher was good enough in its way, but it is not to be accepted on its face value. If it made you hearers feel solemn it was not so intended. Now is your time to put away all sadness. Go home light-hearted and gay."

Recall one such scene. The sermon has closed with a tender Gospel invitation to the sinner. Prayer has been offered that the Spirit may lead the prodigal to repentance, the hymn is sung enforcing the invitation and in the hush of the "still, small voice, the benediction is pronounced, when, presto! forth peals the organ with all stops drawn, and the performer proceeds, by trills and scales, arpeggios and appoggiaturas, to exhibit the largest variety of melodic eccentricities and harmonic pyrotechnics.

I admit that on those occasions when the preacher has discoursed on some joyful theme the player may fitly let himself out on the full organ, if he choose, with selections like Mozart's Gloria, or Mendelssohn's Thanks be to God, or Handel's Hallelujah. It is also conceded that many organists are (as all ought to be) Christians, in full sympathy with the Spirit of worship, and conscientiously desirous of using their position for the divine glory. To this class it is believed that we may confidently look for a strong protest against the present conventional method of "playing people out of church."

A recent letter from an organist showed that the appeal in question needs sometimes to be made to the church people. Said the lady in her note, replying to a criticism along the line of this article: "I have always played selections of a quiet, devotional character, postludes as well as preludes, for anything in church of a loud or brilliant nature is distasteful to me. Recently, at the entreaty of a few in the congregation and the members of the choir, I have used full organ at the close of the service, and tried to give something to "whoop them up," as they expressed it. They have deemed it a success, but it is always done greatly against my will and inclination.

So long as the music committees in our churches continue to be made up largely from the parish, so long will the secular more than the spiritual element of the congregation determine what shall be done by the organist both in handling the instrument and directing the choir. Ordinarily speaking, "he is doing the best he can" when he is seeking to please the committee that hired him. He is human and therefore anxious to retain the place by which he gains part of his livelihood. If, in making himself solid with the committee, he is obliged to violate some of the canons of good taste do not "shoot" him, but level your guns at those who engaged him, and through them secure a reform.—Mid-Continent.

THE CATHEDRAL CHIMES.

I climbed the winding stairway
That led to the belfry tower,
As the sinking sun in the westward
Heralded twilight's hour.

For I thought that surely the music
Would be clearer and sweeter far,
Than when through the din of the city
It seemed to float from afar.

But lo, as I neared the belfry,
No sound of music was there,
Only a brazen clangor
Disturbed the quiet air.

The ringer stood at the key-board,
Far down beneath the chimes,
And patiently struck the noisy keys,
As he had, uncounted times.

He only knew his duty,
As he did it with patient care,
But he did not hear the music
That floated through the air.

Only the jar and the clamor
Fell harshly on his ear,
And he missed the mellow chiming
That everyone else could hear.

So we, from our quiet watch-towers,
May be sending a sweet refrain,
And gladdening the lives of the lowly,
Though we hear not a single strain.

Our work may seem but a discord,
Though we do the best we can;
But others will hear the music.
If we carry out God's plan.

"A WARNING FROM JAPAN."

The following letter which appeared in the Presbyterian, of Phildelphia, has been sent to us with request for publication. The letter published is accompanied with the suggestion that the statements would be equally true of many of those who come to us from other Eastern countries, although there are occasionally honorable exceptions to the rule. It behooves us to consider carefully what is said or written concerning these visitors by missionaries, who know well whereof they speak.

Here is the "warning":

"Our work is going on with more satisfaction than ever before. We have had twenty-seven fine students this year and five graduates last April. Of these, two were retained in our own band of employed women, and the others have been engaged by missionaries for work in the more distant parts of the country. Some of the students are wholly self-supporting. The course of study demands a fair amount of mental ability and sustained effort on the part of the students, and we find them making every effort to come up to our standard.

"It may be interesting, in this connection, to note that all but three of our women come from what is called the 'higher classes.' Two are noble women, twenty-two are samurai (or, as the English would say, 'gentry'), and, of the remaining three, one was the daughter of a farmer who, however, married a samurai, and two of the three are among the self-supporting students. All this means far more in Japan than it would in America, and yet not so much, perhaps, as people in America might think it to mean.

"The class of our students has much to do with the general harmony and courtesy that prevails among them. Self-control is one of the supreme virtues in Japan, and well-born people usually get better training than the lower classes everywhere, but I mention the rank of the women here chiefly to call attention to the fact that the missionaries do have access to the higher classes in Japan. In fact, they have more influence among such people than the ordinarily well-born Japanese can expect to have. We have been asked to talk on the subject of Christianity to nobles where the ordinary samurai could not!

"It seems to be the favorite argument of the Orientals who visit America from India and Japan, that no one but dignitaries like themselves can ever hope to reach the 'higher classes.' It is not true. Neither is it true that persons of distinguished rank ever go on begging expeditions to other countries. Nor do the successful beggars ever use the funds obtained as the people at home are led to believe they will be used. We have two or three such adventurers now in Japan, and they literally do nothing but war against the regular work of the Church and Missions. I know only indirectly of 'Madame' Tel Sono. I do not think she troubles herself to 'war', but I have talked with a missionary who frequently visits her native village, and knows her and her family. They are very ordinary people. 'Madame' herself was never a lawyer. Her nearest approach to the law was assisting her husband to take the personal measurements of the jail prisoners, and her grand school idea has not yet taken shape in Tokyo. I was told of a children's school she proposed to open near her home, in which some of her numerous relatives were to find employment.

"I could go over the whole list of the Japanese who have canvassed America for money during the past two years with an equally disappointing account. One, who reports that 'he has a number of sympathizers in America who support him and his work,' has a 'Tokyo Mission' with 'headquarters' in one place, an office at another (his home), and he is 'superintendent' of the 'Tokyo Mission.' He writes to his friends on letter paper with all these flattering data on it. When I offered to visit his mission, a few weeks ago, he begged me 'not to come till he should notify me—perhaps, next year'.

"My purpose in writing all this is to prepare you for a possible visit from Mrs. Sakurai. She wants fifty thousand dollars to start a Bible Woman's School in Tokyo. Her husband addressed a letter to the Mission, which which was read at its meeting lately. He wanted the sanction of the Mission for his wife's efforts to raise this sum, but left her free to use it for any purpose she chose! It is needless to say that the Mission declined his request.

"It is marvellous to us here that the requests of these people are even considered at home! We missionaries, who may claim to have something like a real, and inherited, conscience, to help us in the discharge of our duty and the disbursement of the funds entrusted to us, are limited, sometimes even pinched, in our work, while an unknown woman from the East calmly asks for a fortune for herself, and so much faith is placed in her stammering words, and 'sweet voice,' and 'pale blue gown embroidered with pink' (a dress which no middle-aged mother in Japan ever dreamed of wearing, and which is, in fact, the dress of a dancing girl), that a company of sensible American women will believe that possibly more good can be accomplished by entrusting funds to her care that by sustaining the regular work of the Board of Foreign Missions. A Japanese said of them: "The women of America are like children; they will believe whatever you tell them and will give you all you want.'

"I do not think the benevolent Christians of America can be aware of the harm that is done by such thoughtlessness. One of our missionaries, while at home, tried to enlighten some of her friends as to the results of the flattering faith they were putting in the story of a Japanese, but she was silenced. 'O, don't destroy the glamour!' one of the most sensible of the company exclaimed. It was a sad rebuff, and sadder in its ultimate than in i s near effect. We who are struggling to give these people something better than the selfishness and false morality of ungodly systems of belief may well beg the Christians at home to do cheerfully the Lord's commands, but not to expect the missionary to lend herself to an idealization of facts that result in serious injury to Christ's work in heathen lands. Rather beg them—our thoughtless friends—to read the story of every mission in Oriental countries. The experiences do not differ except in matters of detail. The native who is able to throw a glamour over himself in America goes back to his field full of self-importance and a desire for place and power in the church where he was once, perhaps, a faithful and humble worker. The money that he brings back with him only excites the envy of the former friends, who all pine to go and do likewise. But I will not dwell longer upon the subject. I have written what I have in order that there might be no misunderstanding about Mrs. Sakurai when she arrives.

"We need no more schools of any kind in Tokyo, but inexpensive schools for the very poor. The Bancho School provides for the higher classes in every way necessary. As for the Bible Woman's School, we are using every available and suitable woman that presents herself. Our classes could be trebled without adding to the teaching force, but great care must be taken in admitting students into such a school. We give full support only to those who really need it. Any other practice would lower the tone of the institution. * * * * * *

SIMPLIFY THE MACHINERY.

BY REV. S. F. TENNEY.

As the meeting of the General Assembly is approaching, the question is naturally suggested. What further amendments to the new plan of Home Mission work do we need? The following occur to my mind as needed improvements:

1. Simplify the machinery of the Central Committee. As this Committee has worked heretofore, it seemed to be necessary, according to the views of the Committee, and the views of the Assembly, that the Central Committee should do a great deal work in the way of putting on brakes—inquiring very fully into the details of every individual application for an appropriation. Although these applications go to the Central Committee endorsed by the Presbytery, or their Presbyterial Committee, still the Central Committee feels it necessary to inquire very particularly into each case, as to whether it is worthy, or as to whether the application ought not to be discounted considerably, or rejected altogether. In other words, the Central Committee seems to feel that a large part of their work is to hold the brakes very tight. Now, doubtless, brakes are very useful in our church work, and should be put on very freely and firmly, at the right place, and at the right time. But let us amend the working of the Central Committee by relieving them of the work of inquiring into all the particulars of each individual application, and putting on the brakes. Let this work of inquiring into all the details of the merits of each case for appropriation be placed where it properly belongs—on the Presbyteries, or the Presbyterial Committees. This is more in accordance with the theory of our Church government, and puts the main responsibility of disbursing the Home Mission funds upon the Presbyteries, through the Home Mission Committees—in other words, upon men who are on the ground, and well acquainted with the merits of each case, and not upon a body of men who are a thousand miles away from the Home Missionaries and their work.

To this amendment it surely would not be said that we must conscientiously and carefully disburse every dollar contributed for Home Missions, so that we can report to the Church at large that there is no waste, and therefore the Central Committee must hold a strict rein over the disbursement. If that be said, I ask, can we not trust our Presbyteries and their committees? If anything goes wrong about the disbursement, let the Presbyterial committees bear the blame, and let the Presbyteries hold them to a strict account They are required to report their acts to Presbytery—for approval or disapproval. Surely we can trust the presbyterial committees with the disbursement, and do not need the Central Committee as a bishop over those committees to oversee them.

It seems to the writer that we have been drifting into what the politicians call "paternalism" on the part of the Central Committee, that Committee feeling that it must exercise a very fatherly care over the Presbyteries.

Now the amendment I would suggest, would eliminate this paternalism, and a vast amount of detail work now done by the Central Committee, or its Secretary. Let each Presbytery send up its application—say for $1,500 (or more or less, as the case may be), in the aggregate, for its evangelists and stated supplies, and church buildings. Let each Presbytery, with its application, state to the Central Committee its needs, and prospects, etc. Then let the Central Committee meet and consider all these applications. If they have funds enough to grant them all in full, let them do so. If their funds are not sufficient, let them divide out the whole fund as equitably as possible to each Presbytery.

In this way, it seems to me, the Central Committee need not meet more than twice a year (and not monthly as now). If a few appropriations are to be acted upon in the interval, give the Secretary discretion to act upon them—so as to avoid the expense and work of frequent meetings of the Central Committee. By this amendment a large amount of printed forms could be dispensed with. In fact our printing bill might probably be very much reduced—a large amount of printed circulars might be dispensed with—these circulars having lost their force and become as an old song. By this amendment the work of disbursement by the Central Committee would be simply to divide out, once or twice a year, a certain sum of money between the few Home Mission Presbyteries in the West and in Florida. Then our Secretary would be relieved of a large amount of the drudgery of office work (for which the Church is paying his salary, and which could be done by the Presbyterial Committee without a salary.)

2. Another amendment suggested as follows after the previous one—it would be to let the Secretary (being relieved of a large amount of office drudgery) go out among the churches—on the one hand to visit the Home Mission field, and see its wants and prospects—and on the other hand to visit the stronger and wealthier churches, as many as practicable, and make personal appeals to them in behalf of Home Missions. Or, let the Secretary do the work of a treasurer, (dispensing with the salary of that officer)—and let Central Committee employ a suitable man to go out among the stronger churches, and raise Home Mission funds. In other words, let the Central Committee be relieved of a large amount of detail work in disbursing the funds (and put that upon the Presbyteries)—and let the Central Committee turn its attention and its energies more particularly to raising funds. The disbursement is comparatively easy (if we have the funds)—the gathering of the funds is the important and vital part—and the place where our Home Mission work has been lagging behind in the past few years.

If it be replied to this second suggestion that our Church is opposed to financial agents, then I would call attention to the fact that our Church nevertheless uses very freely, and successfully financial agents. The Foreign Mission Committee, that is succeeding so finely (in contrast to our Home Mission work), is constantly utilizing, for all they are worth, their outgoing missionaries, and their returned missionaries, in enthusiastic public meetings in the wealthier churches, besides the personal appeals of the Secretary, and, in some Synods, men appointed to make a specialty of raising Foreign Mission funds.

The Synodical Home Mission work has been largely successful by sending men to the churches, instead of sending printed circulars.

At times, our Church has employed men to raise funds for Publication; and, constantly the Church is employing men to go out and raise funds for the endowment of theological seminaries and denominational colleges. Why not, for a while, use this successful agency to bring up our Home Mission fund into something like a respectable amount?

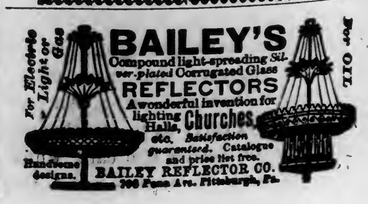
It is true we would need prudent men, and men of special gifts, for this work—but such men have been found, and can be again. In fact, while the theory is a very good one, that our church collections should be raised systematically, and through the pastors, sessions and deacons, yet it is also true that the Church is not yet sufficiently trained to work by this plan alone, and for awhile we still need special men to make personal appeals for these funds to a considerable extent.

P. S.—The natural prejudices of a large proportion of our church members are in favor of Home Missions, in preference to Foreign Missions, and this ought to give our Home Mission Fund a decided advantage before our Church. But the fact is that the Foreign Mission Fund is steadily increasing (running now up to near $150,000), while the Home Mission Fund has been steadily diminishing—the whole fund, including Synodical work, scarcely reaching half the amount contributed for Foreign Missions. Does not this difference suggest that there is something wrong in our methods? Let us for awhile try the same methods used by our Foreign Mission Committee, and, with the natural prejudices in favor of Home Missions, we ought to raise a larger fund than is raised for Foreign Missions.

The House of God.

Notwithstanding the numerous attractions of our time, so unfriendly to sanctuary service, what multitudes of hungry hearts are being satisfied with the "fatness of His house!" Never, we are confident, has the privilege of sitting where "strength and beauty are in His sanctuary" been more widely appreciated than at the present. Never have greater numbers in the aggregate sought his courts, or have exclaimed with joyful hearts: "A day in Thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." Many souls in Christian and heathen lands not only find delight in God's earthly temple; they also anticipate with joy an entrance upon the heavenly city. In the marvelous description given by the revelator of that abode, the temple of earth vanishes away, and God becomes evermore all and in all: "I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." We claim that the world is coming to see the value of religious truth as never before. A bright, hopeful view of Christ's kingdom is fully justified by the facts. Depression should never rest upon our spirits. The hour calls for men and women of buoyant faith, for those who rejoice even in the midst of obstacles, thankful that all over the earth multitudes assemble statedly for worship, and have the truth of God sealed upon their hearts for edification as they sit together in earthly temples.

O let us never lose confidence in the Gospel, God's merciful provision for needy souls. It matters not that we are unable to explain the secret philosophy of redemption. It is enough to know that Jesus was "wounded for our transgressions," and that "by his stripes we are healed." The world is waiting to hear this grand announcement. Only lest it be delivered by us in sincerity, tenderness, and fullness of consecration.



The Hardships of Life.

Think not that you are the only one who has to endure and who dreads the hardships of life. Ease and comfort are natural desires of the human heart; and there are thorns, real or imaginary, in every one's pathway. But sitting down and brooding will never bring power to overcome them. Rather "be up and doing," thankful for the blessings still remaining. If you have health and strength you have reason to be glad, in spite of fortune's frown; for how much harder would be your lot, or efforts to gain a living, if you were crippled, blind, or deaf.

Talking of Christ.

Learn to talk of Christ. There are professional talkers, who are always talking of Christ, but not living him. But those who live Christ should be ready to talk of him. This is strange work with many. They seem at home talking of worldly things and even of the worldly interests of Church, but they never think of carrying on a spiritual conversation with the view of converting sinners from the error of their ways.

EDUCATION.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 21, 1894.

To the Pastors and Sessions of our Churches, Greeting:

The Executive Committee of Education for the Ministry desire to lay before you the condition of this branch of your work for your consideration, as you approach the time for the regular April collection for this cause. Our treasury is in great straits, and unless you come to our relief, and by prompt action and liberal contributions relieve the difficulty this work will be compelled to close the year with a heavy debt hanging over it. We have tried, as your servants, to administer the work faithfully and with all possible economy. With a view to this end, the committee, at the beginning of the year, reduced the appropriation to each student to seventy-five dollars. Yet, with this reduction in appropriations, we are face to face with the fact that the contributions of the Church, so far received, are far below the sum needed to meet our obligations.

Here are facts, viz: We have on our roll the names of 252 candidates. To these candidates the committee has appropriated $17,679, at the request of the Presbyteries. The total amount contributed by the Church, to date, is $13,240. Of this amount we have been compelled, under authority of the Assembly's action, to pay $2.060 on the debt of last year. Even with this payment, we still owe something like $2,000 on that debt.

We have remitted to candidates on the current year, $8,565, making total payments, including the amount paid on the debt of last year, $10,625. It will thus be seen that the Church is now behind with her candidates $9,114. A careful estimate of the office expenses for the remainder of the year shows that we must have at least $10,000 between this and the meeting of the General Assembly, or we will be compelled to go before that body with a heavy debt from this year, as well as having to carry still some $2,000 of the debt from last year's work.

Will the Church permit this humiliating state of facts to exist? We are your servants, placed in trust of this work to administer your affairs for you. We can do nothing but disburse the funds you place at our disposal, and we come to you in this time of emergency for help out of the difficulty.

Communications received from Davidson College, from Central University, from Austin College, from Union Seminary, and from many other sources, assure us that our candidates are doing their work faithfully and well, and that they are bearing the hardships imposed by this lack of funds with uncomplaining patience; but that the necessities are so great in some instances that the students will be compelled to leave the Seminary before the close of the term unless they can have some assurance that the full amount of the appropriation—$75—can be paid by the first of May, at which time the Seminary session closes. The Church has been praying for years that the Lord would send laborers into the harvest. He has graciously answered these prayers by leading these young men to dedicate themselves to the ministry, and it seems to us that this answer to our prayers imposes an increased obligation on the Church to furnish the means needed for them to prosecute their studies. We lay these facts before you for your prayerful consideration, and we earnestly ask you to do what you can to meet the emergency of the case.

We therefore urge 1st, That the ministers and sessions of our churches lay these facts before their people, and give them an opportunity to contribute to this cause on the first Sabbath in April, or as soon thereafter as possible.

We urge 2d, That the ministers and sessions lay these facts before the Sabbath-schools and Ladies' Societies, and secure contributions from them. Even a small amount contributed by each of these agencies would make an aggregate of no insignificant sum.

We urge 3d, That this matter have the earliest possible attention of our ministers and church sessions, and that the moneys raised be forwarded as soon as possible to our Treasurer, G. W. Macrae, 383 Front Street, Memphis, Tenn. The reason in this case, that "the King's business demands haste," is that the Seminary terms closes about the first of May, and many of our young men must have their money before that time, or suffer.

Very truly, your Brethren in Christ and in service,

NEANDER M. WOODS, Chairman,
E. M. RICHARDSON, Secretary, and others.

The Pastor's Wife.

When a church calls a minister, it ought to be understood that they do not extend a call for the official service of anyone, but the said minister. To him they pledge a certain maintenance and spiritual loyalty as their shepherd. He, and not his wife or family, is installed, with solemn obligations to perform certain pastoral duties. Whatever his wife may be enabled to do, both from love to Christ and love to him, is entirely a voluntary service. No church has either a moral or a legal right to claim what the vows of installation do not include or acknowledge. If this simple fact were perfectly understood, some congregations would not unreasonably demand as their due what can be only a voluntary service on the part of either the wife or any member of the pastor's household. Of course, every true Christian wife will gladly do all that her time, health, and household duties will permit, for the spiritual and social welfare flock.

First of all, her vow is to her husband, to be everything that a good wife can be. And if she makes his home and heart happy, if she relieves him of needless worldly cares, if she is a consistent inspiration to him in his holy work, she will do tenfold more for the Church than if she were the manager and mainspring of a dozen benevolent societies. There is another antecedent to all acts of Presbyteries or installing councils—the sweet obligation of motherhood. The woman who neglects her nursery, her housekeeping duties, and her own heart-life for any outside work in the parish, does both them and herself a serious injury. When she is not needed at home let her be beside the sick-bed, or at the Dorcas meeting, or at any other post in which she may be useful. The recreations and the innocent recuperative enjoyments that any sensible woman needs belong to her if they can be had. She is neither a nun, nor a "Sister of Charity," nor a parish missionary, nor an angel; she is simply a wife and mother who tries to live up to the ideal presented in the thirty-first chapter of Proverbs, and to her obligations as a disciple of the Lord Jesus.

If she is a woman of culture and literary taste she can be of immense service to him in the preparation of his sermons. The best critic we ministers can have is one who has a right to criticise, and to "truth it in love." Faithful are the wounds of a brave, loving wife, when she pricks our vanity, or cuts the comb of our conceit, or goads our indolence, or puts her scalpel right through the diseased spots in our sermons. A still higher service is that of chiding our faults and sparing not for our crying! Who has a better right to reprove, exhort, and correct, with all long-suffering, than the woman who has given us her heart and herself as the proof of her love? There are a hundred matters in the course of a year in which a sensible woman's instincts are wiser than that of the average men. She is apt to read human nature better, and to understand the fitness of things. There is many a minister who would have been spared the worst blunders of his life if he had only consulted—and obeyed—the instinctive judgments of a sensible wife. When I was introduced recently to the fair young bride of a young minister I ventured to say to her, "About the best service you can often do to your husband will be to lay your hand on his shoulder and say to him, Don't!" There is much talk about who should hold the reins in wedlock, but it is pretty certain that the check-rein had better be in the hands of the wife, especially if the husband be a man of strong and sudden impulses.

In the opposite direction, too, a pastor's wife may be of priceless service to her husband, and through him to the whole flock. Every minister has his seasons of discouragement and depression. Up into the study comes the cheerful face, and "the blue devils" are exorcised in an instant. He feels stung by some unkindness or neglect, and her soft hand heals the hurt. The chariot wheels drag heavily sometimes in his work, and she gives the encouraging push. Ofttimes when things look dark, and his faith is ready to fail, her voice beside him in fervent prayer is as if an angel spake—and he rises from his knees, strengthened for the load or for the battle. Now it is in just these directions that a wise wife (and a minister ought never to have any other) can contribute most to a pastor's usefulness.

Of her services in the church and through the parish I need not speak in the detail. All that must be regulated by state of health and amount of time that can be spared from indispensable duties. Just how many meetings she can attend, how many societies she can belong to, how many of the poor, the sick and the suffering she can visit, must depend on circumstances and a good judgment. Wherever she goes, let her carry a cordial word, a kind greeting, and take an interest in everybody.

If a pastor wishes to succeed, he must first seek mighty help from God, and next he must get the permission of his wife. For a minister, the next choice to choosing Christ is to find the right wife and to give her the right place in the innermost councils of his heart and life.—Dr. Cuyler in N. Y. Evangelist.

The Growth of Character.

Character grows for the most part insensibly, as the life grows at first. Now and then it gets notable impulses which we can mark, but commonly it grows imperceptibly, like our bodies. Single acts may show character, but they seldom form it, though some are supreme and ruling. It grows ring by ring, and the twig of this year becomes the bough of next. Our habits are another name for it, and they grow like the grass. The man's face lies behind the boy's, but it comes out only after a round of winters and summers.—Dr. Geikie.

Live for Something.

Do good and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with, year by year; you will never be forgotten—your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven.—Chalmers.

An Editorial Article After Investigation.

An advertisement of the Electropoise appears in another column. There have been so many curative instruments put upon the market, ostensibly merely to cure disease, but really to cure the leanness of the manufacturer's pocket, that this article deserves a special word of praise. Not wholly convinced by what the Electrolibration Company's agent said, the Observer's representative sought an interview with Dr. De Puy, of the New York Christian Advocate. This gentleman said that with no personal interest in the Electropoise, save that inspired by the wonderful good that it had done him, he gave the Company the letter published in another column of the Observer. He was enthusiastic about the system, and has recommended it very heartily to others. Accounts of similar enthusiasm come from other quarters, and as far as we can learn, we feel sure that our readers may safely and with great benefit use the Electropoise. Mr. Du Bois, the Company's agent, at 345 Fourth avenue, New York, will cheerfully forward all information.—N. Y. Observer, Feb. 22nd, '94.

A Contrast.

It was a dreary morning for a railway journey. Even a ray of March sunlight would have been a blessed relief, but it was not given. The train was an accommodation, and every new passenger continued the story of coughs, colds, grip and pneumonia.

At a little hamlet, a lady entered and made haste to announce to the first acquaintance she met, "Oh, have you heard that Colonel Hayden's baby is dead?"

"Oh, don't tell me, it can't be possible."

"But it is. The little thing was buried yesterday." And then followed a recital of the sickness and death of this lovely, idolized, only child of wealthy parents. All the details of the funeral followed. "And the flowers!" she said. "They were sent by express from friends far and near. The rooms were full of them. The tiny white velvet-covered casket stood on a bank of creamy rosebud's. The air was heavy with the fragrance of heliotrope and violets, but they brought no comfort to the stricken parents. Nothing gives them any comfort."

"I have never known Christians to continue in that way."

"But they are not Christians."

* * * * *

The morning seemed more cheerless than ever, and silence fell that was not broken until the next station was reached. There a lady entered who also met acquaintances. She said:

"Do you remember Jane Twiss, who taught so long at Dimicks Meadow?"

"Oh, yes. She married John Webber; and what a pretty couple they were. They went away somewhere to live with his mother, and I never have heard of them since."

"Well, he and his mother were members of our church, and she brought a letter and united with us. John died suddenly last fall. Then the poor grandmother was stricken with apoplexy. The family moved into a tenement, and Mrs. Webber struggled bravely on, and with the help of friends succeeded in keeping the little family together.

"The baby was a beautiful child, and every one who called was touched at the pathetic sight as it lay on the bed by the patient grandmother, who considered it her especial care. Last week I was told that the baby was ill, and made haste to call; but what was my surprise to hear the little girl who opened the door for me say timidly.

"'Oh, have you heard that our baby has gone away to heaven to see papa? You know she never saw him here, and of course she wanted to see him; but we were all sorry to have her go.'

"They were sorry indeed. The mother gave me a wistful smile, but could not speak at first, and tears ran down the cheeks of the poor paralyzed grandmother who lay helpless in bed. As the oldest little girl wiped them tenderly away, she said:

"'Baby is asleep, just as papa was before they put him in the box. You can see her if you want to; mamma will let you. She is on the table there, under granma's shawl.

"'There was nowhere else to lay her,' said the mother, gently lifting the covering from the tiny wax-like form.

"'Isn't she pretty? Isn't she sweet? Won't papa be glad to see her?' asked the girls.

"'What can I do for you?' I asked the mother, and her reply went to my heart.

"'Oh, every one has been kind, and all the necessary arrangements are made, but I should be so grateful if I could have one little flower to put between her fingers. She was a winter child, and she has never seen a flower; but she was so like the flowers herself, I do want to bury one with her.

"When I carried some white rosebuds she said, 'Baby had her mission; her going has taken all dread of death from grandma, and I do not think death can be a terror to the children while they remember her with a flower in her hand.'

When I went away she said, 'I thank you, and I thank God; how good he is."

A silence fell once more, but this time it seemed as if the clouds had lifted, and as if the world was a pleasant place, after all; yet it was only the good news that the light of God's love had cheered, and comforted that poor widowed mother's bereaved heart.—Herald and Presbyter.

He Was an Episcopalian.

A correspondent of the Voice tells of a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, traveling South, who meets a citizen who claims that he also is an Episcopalian.

"To what parish do you belong?"

"Don't know nuthing' 'bout any parish, was his answer.

"Well, what diocese do you belong to?" I inquired.

"There ain't nuthin' of that sort in this part of the country that I ever heerd of," he replied.

"But who confirmed you?" said I.

"Nobody," he said.

"But didn't you tell me you were an Episcopalian?" I asked in astonishment.

"Oh, yes," said the old man; I'll tell ye how it is. Last spring I went down to New Orleans visitin,' and while I was there I went ter church, and it happened ter be an Episcopalian one, and among other things I heard 'em say that they'd left undone them things they'd oughter done, and done them things they hadn't oughter done, and I said to myself, "That's jest my fix too,' and since then I've always considered myself an Episcopalian."

"Well," said I, as I shook the old man's hand, "if your ideas of an Episcopalian are correct, we are the largest denomination in the world."

The Hasty Word.

To think before you speak is so wise an axiom that one would hardly think it needful to emphasize it by repetition. And yet in how many cases the hasty temper flashes out in the hasty word, and the latter does its work with the precision and pain of the swift stiletto! Singularly enough the hasty word oftenest wounds those who love another dearly, and the very closeness of their intimacy affords them opportunity for the sudden thrust.

We know the weak points in the armor of our kinsman and our friends; we are aware of his caprices, and originally are tender and compassionate even of his vanities and whims; but there dawns a day when it is written in the book of fate that we shall be as cruel as we are loving. We are cold, or tired, or hungry. We are anxious over unpaid bills, or our expected letters have not arrived, or one of the children is ailing, and we dread the outcome of the malady. So politeness fails us, fortitude is vanquished, philosophy is in abeyance and we say that which we repent in sackcloth and ashes.

But though the hasty word may be forgiven, it is not at once forgotten. It has flawed the crystal of our friendship; the place may be cemented, but there is a shadow scar on the gleaming surface. Oh, if the word of hate had but been left unspoken; if the strong hand of patience had but held back the sword as if to strike!—Harper's Bazar.

Danbury :—Rev. S. G. Walker writes from Elkin, March 23rd, As further evidence of Bro. Black's effective preaching at Danbury, Stokes county, there were seventeen or eighteen conversions among the colored people. He preached twice for my people. On the 19th inst., I received eight into the church, baptized four. There are nine others who say they will join later. Some of the worst characters were converted and have join the church. To God be the praise.

TEXAS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Corpus Christi :—On Tuesday night of last week we had a very impressive service in our church. It was the closing service of a two week's meeting held by the Rev. W. S. Scott, our Evangelist to the Mexicans, and Rev. H. B. Pratt, for the benefit of our Mexican population. For two weeks these brethren held a prayer meeting service each morning at 7 o'clock, and a preaching service each evening at 8 o'clock. The attendance was good, and the interest was marked and far reaching. On Monday we opened the doors of our session to receive those who might wish to confess Christ, thirteen were received. On Tuesday night we had a communion service for the special benefit of these new members. The members of the Mexican Methodist church joined us in this service.

This Mexican work is making encouraging progress. Bro. Pratt, who has been laboring in Mexico for some months, is very much pleased with the prospects of the work in Texas. The most of your readers are probably aware that this work in Texas is prosecuted by the Presbytery of Western, Texas. Bro. Scott devotes his whole time to the work. We also have the whole time of a Mexican licentiate, Juan Hernandez. We hope to be able to employ another licentiate after the meeting of our Presbytery. We now have three organized Mexican churches, viz: San Marcos, Martindale and Uvalde. We will organize at Laredo and Corpus Christi as soon as we can see our way clear to care for churches at those points.

At present our Mexican members at these two places are given weekly instruction by members of our American church. Two of my elders have undertaken to hold services in Spanish every Sabbath afternoon at 4 o'clock; than we have two Spanish classes in our Sabbath-school. We want to secure a part of Bro. Pratt's time, for a few months at least, that he may help Bro. Scott to start a work in San Antonio and other important points. These brethren propose holding meetings at San Marcos and Martindale before the meeting of our Presbytery.

Will not the readers of the PRESBYTERIAN remembers to pray that God may guide, bless and sustain us in this work?

Corpus Christi Church.

DOMESTIC.

We notice last week that Rev. A. Lambert, of New York, a Redemptionist of fame, had renounced Romanism. We now give his statement to his superior at Rome on occasion of doing so: "I deem it my duty to inform you that from to-day, my canonical standing being perfectly regular and unquestioned, as you well know, I freely and deliberately withdraw from the priesthood and communion of the Roman Catholic Church. The decision I now take is the outcome of a long mental struggle and much thought, and it is not without sorrow I have taken this step, for it is hard to sever the relations of twenty-one years. But I could not forever resist the voice of my conscience. I had to obey it at last, and the logical consequence of that obedience is the step I now take. Knowing what I know, having seen what I saw and heard what I heard in the Roman Catholic Church, I cannot any longer force my mind into submission to the vatican, nor can I any longer admit the claim of the Roman Catholic Church and clergy to rule, not only in religious questions, but also in purely scientific, social and even political matters. The intolerance and duplicity which almost from the day of my ordination to the priesthood I found and met in the Roman Catholic Church, have become utterly unbearable to me. Having also come to the conclusion that there is only one High Priest, the God man Jesus Christ, and one sacrifice, not to be repeated; and, in consequence, doubting my position as a priest, I could not act otherwise than I do now. I know now clearly that those who believe in Christ as their Saviour will be saved. I believe in Him. I resign myself unto his loving care, and I feel sure He will not forsake me." Father Lambert said when seen by a reporter at Christ's Mission, that he had made no plans for the future. "I hope," he said, "to become an evangelist, and preacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as evangelical Christians understand it. I shall prepare for my new sphere of usefulness as the guest of Father O'Connor, with whom I will study and confer."

A negro man, twenty-eight years of age, was ordained to the priesthood of the Episcopal Church in Boston, Mass. The only remarkable thing about it is, that he is the first of his race to fill that office in the New England States. He was born in South Carolina.

THE PRESBYTERIAL COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It is a fact, which will not be questioned by any one at all familiar with the subject, that the Presbyterial Committee of Foreign Missions is looked upon, generally as one of the less important committees. It has often only one member upon it and he may be one of the newer or less influential members of the Presbytery.

The duties of this committee, too, are by no means clearly defined—and consequently, not unfrequently, they are confined to the preparing of some brief report, based upon the minutes of the General Assembly, and the drafting of one or two resolutions, which are no sooner passed than the whole matter is dropped, until the next fall meeting of Presbytery, when the same thing will be gone over again.

We are not now finding fault, or criticising, we are simply stating sad facts, which all will recognize as too generally true. It would not be difficult, we think, to explain, or at least give some reasons, why this has been the case in such large measure.

No one will deny that one reason, at least, has been that the powers exercised by the General Assembly's Committee, in accordance with the manual, have relieved the Presbytery, in large measure, of its responsibility, in this matter, or tended to lead the Presbytery to shift its responsibity upon that committee.

This has led to atrophy in this member of the Presbytery's organism. It is believed that the time has come when a change is called for. The Ad Interim Committee appointed by the General Assembly, has felt this, so strongly, that it has recommended some slight changes in the manual, which will, if they commend themselves to the judgment of the Church, throw greater responsibility upon the Presbyterial Committee and necessarily give it greater importance, placing it more nearly in the same rank with the Educational and Home Mission Committees, to which it is now so clearly inferior. How ever that may be, we are emboldened to offer a few suggestions, modestly on this subject, in response to the frequent most pathetic requests from brethren, who are Presbyterial Agents in some cases, as to what they are expected to do or can do.

We offer the following only after long and careful study of this subject, aided by many brethren.

We do not claim to have arrived at finality or even the best plan, we shall most gladly welcome any further suggestions.

I. AS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THIS COMMITTEE.

It is most important that it consist of, at least, two ministers and one elder. That it also have upon it some of the more influential men of the Presbytery, men of recognized wisdom and experience as well as energy and interest in this important work, such men as are put on the Home Mission Committee generally.

II. AS TO THE DUTIES OF THIS COMMITTEE.

1. Towards its own territory: (a.) It shall obtain exact information as to the needs of all churches within its borders, what is the degree of interest in the different congregations, where the spirit of missions is weak and may need development. (b.) It shall make arrangements for the visiting of such churches by returned missionaries, when possible, or the holding of simultaneous meetings where the speakers, pastors and elders shall be selected from those churches which are most active in this work. (c.) It shall see that the interest thus developed is crystalized so far as is expedient in the formation of men's, women's and children's societies, and that the monthly concert is regularly observed in every church, whether with or without such organizations.

2. Towards the Foreign Field: (a.) This Committee should of course keep itself informed as to the general needs of the world by reading the best missionary literature; but (b.) It shall keep itself informed as to the general needs of our own fields and the special needs of each particular field, by correspondence with the Executive Committee at Nashville, and if necessary, with the missionaries from other Presbyteries, of our own Church, in those fields.

But it shall also especially carry on

3. Official correspondence with (a.) The missionaries from that Presbytery, men and women, and have something from them, if possible, for each meeting of Presbytery. (b.) The candidates for mission work, in or out of the seminaries, whether yet under appointment or not of the Executive Committee. (c.) Such persons or pastors as may seem to them evidently fitted and suitable for this most difficult work.

Finally: It shall secure some special correspondent in each congregation, on the recommendation of the pastor or session, who will undertake to give such information and distribute such literature or to do any other work, that may seem desirable in the interest of this great cause.

Much more might be said in elucidation of these different points, which we will not undertake to set forth now. But we earnestly beg the brethren to think on these things, and let us have the benefit of a full discussion of the subject at the next meeting of Presbytery.

No matter will be before the next General Assembly, so far as at present appears, which will demand such careful consideration as our Foreign Mission work. We have reached an important point in the history of its development.

We hope and believe that hereafer the Presbyteries will have a part and responsibility not hitherto felt, in this work, and still without encroaching upon the distinct and absolutely necessary work and responsibility of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions.

We have thought long and fully upon this matter. We know we will not be charged with having ventured hastily to offer some suggestions upon it. They are demanded by the situation and the urgent solicitation of esteemed brethren. We will welcome any better or additional helpful suggestions.

This article has been kept back for sometime until the report of the Ad Interim Committee could be in the hands of the brethren.

We still hope it will be possible before the meeting of all the Presbyteries, but we cannot hold this longer without being too late for some of the Presbyteries of North Carolina for which it is especially prepared.

To prevent any misconceptions to which this paper may give rise, without any great knowledge of the report referred to above, we deem it not improper to state that it was the fixed desire of the Committee to increase the responsibility of the Presbytery, but without diminishing the responsibility of the Executive Committee.

No transfer of functions was proposed and no radical changes made. The suggestions here offered, however, stand on their own merits and are entirely independent of any prospective or probable changes, and must be read in the light which they carry and not that which may be reflected by, or upon, any other paper.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., March 28, 1894.

There is always something inexpressibly solemn and awe-inspiring, to me, about a funeral in the U. S. Capitol. Whether this is because of the infrequency of such funerals, or, of being accustomed to seeing different scenes there I cannot say, but it is certain that most of those who attended the short service held over the remains of the late Senator Colquitt in the Senate Chamber yesterday morning were similarly impressed. Owing to having to catch a train at 11 a. m., the funeral was held at the unusually early hour of 9 o'clock and the crowd in the galleries was much smaller than upon similar occasions in the past. Senator Colquitt's pure and Christian life had endeared him to all who came in contact with him, and, as his colleague, Senator Gordon, truly said of him in announcing his death to the Senate, he was a man of whom it may be said, "That in every relation of life, whether as husband, or father, or son, or friend, or soldier, or citizen, he has been earnest and faithful and true." The concluding words of Senator Gordon, spoken with tears in his voice, are worthy of the careful study of every young man in the land—"The three dreaded monosyllables—he is dead—will soon be true of others in this chamber and of many others before many long years shall pass. If it can be added of us, as it can be of him, that in all the relations of life he had kept his armor of a Christian man bright and burnished, there will have been pronounced over our dead bodies all that eulogies can pronounce." Chaplain Milburn, "the blind man eloquent," who had been an intimate friend of the deceased for more than fifty years, delivered the funeral oration to the assemblage composed of the Senate, the House of Representative, the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the Diplomatic Corps and others prominent in public life, gathered to do honor to the distinguished Georgian who has "fought the good fight" and gone to render his account to the Great Commander.

The Sunday school of Calvary Baptist church took possession of their handsome new building, adjoining the Church, last Sunday. The building is 60 feet wide and 95 feet long and being arranged especially for Sunday-school purposes is regarded as a model of its kind. The Sunday-school is one of the largest in the country. There were present last Sunday 1,121 scholars.

I do not believe in commending anybody for doing their duty, but when an official in performing his duty speaks such wholesome words as Judge Bradley did, this week, to the newspaper men who are reporting the Pollard-Breckinridge trial, I think he deserves and should receive the commendation of all believers in the purity of the family circle, and those who do not are in a pitiable condition. I quote the words of Judge Bradley, in order that other judges may paste them in their scrap-books for reference—"The Court cannot exercise or presume to exercise any censorship of the press. I would, however, suggest to the correspondents and representatives of the press that it is in the interest of this community—not only of this community, but of every community where these newspapers go—that so far as possible, and I think it is possible, all disgusting details of matters that have been deemed essential and material to admit as evidence in this case be withheld from publication. There are some matters that, in my judgment, would render their publication sufficient to exclude the newspapers themselves from the mails. I trust, in the interest of the people, of the city, of communities everywhere, and of the families into which these newspapers go from day to day, that these details will be withheld."

Whiskey was the direct cause of two men committing suicide here within a few hours of each other, this week. Yet, the same law which forbids the sale of other poisons recognizes the traffic in whiskey as legitimate. Why should the sale of one poison be legal and that of others illegal? is one question that has never been satisfactorily answered.

The opponents of the sugar bounty, in the House, not being entirely certain that the tariff bill will become a law, have decided upon another and they think speedier way of abolishing the bounty. It is proposed, and it is understood that the proposition meets with the approval of a majority of the House Ways and Means Committee, to attach an amendment to the legislative and executive appropriation bill repealing the sugar bounty clause of the McKinley law. As this appropriation bill carries the appropriation to pay the sugar bounty such an amendment will be germane and cannot be ruled out on a point of order. If this amendment is accepted in both House and Senate the sugar bounty will cease upon the day this bill becomes a law—July 1st, 1894. There is no doubt of the sentiment of the House on this question, but there is of the Senate. The tariff bill, it will be remembered, as revised by the Senate Committee, also abolishes the sugar bounty, but it substitutes a duty on sugar, both new and refined, therefor. T.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Second Quarter.—Lesson III.

April 15th—Joseph Sold Into Egypt.

Gen. xxxvii. 23–36. Commit vss. 26–28.

Golden Text. Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good. Gen. l. 20.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Read the intervening verses (12-22). Note Joseph's mission of kindness, and anxiety to fulfil it even when his brethren were not in the expected place. Dothan was 15 miles north of Shechem and about 70 miles from Hebron. The name means the Two Cisterns, and it was into one of them that Joseph was cast. It is described as a very rich pasture land. Note the council of blood and Reuben's humane but weak counsel (compare xlix. 4—first clause), His intentions were good but he had not the strength of character openly to oppose. Indirection, that had caused so much trouble to his father, and that had characterized the marriage of his father and mother, is now his undoing.

Second Step. Study the lesson itself until the picture is vividly before your mind and the details of the simple story mastered. Compare xlii. 21 for a graphic touch.

Third Step. Take up any points of difficulty and consult your helps upon them:

Vs. 23. They stript Joseph, etc. The coat was an object of special spite and they had a use for it.

Vs. 24. A pit. See above. These cisterns were used for storing up water in the rainy season against the long droughts. They are evidence that the country had been more thickly inhabited than it appears to be at the time of the lesson. Recent discoveries show that about this time devastations had swept over the land. The cisterns were bottle-shaped with a small opening at the top that could be covered with a stone, and escape was impossible.

Vs. 25. They sat down to eat. Perhaps, like David, (1 Sam. xvii. 18, 18) Joseph had brought them provisions. Feasting is a favorite resource for quieting conscience.

A company, i. e., a trading caravan.

Spicery, etc. Articles much in demand in Egypt for embalming. They were products of Palestine. Compare xlii. 11.

Vss. 26, 27. What profit.....he is our brother. Having decided the question of profit, he considers the obligation of blood. Dr. Parker observes that when we have been about to do a very grievous wrong we feel positively virtuous when we decide on something less flagrant..

Vs. 28. Midianites. The two terms seem to be used indiscriminately. The term Ishmaelite, as the more predominant tribe, was the more general term of the two.

Twenty pieces of silver, the price of a slave under 20 years, indicating that these events were not very long after Joseph was 17 years old.

Vs. 29. Reuben returned. He had probably been planning to draw his brethren away from the spot that he might have an opportunity to rescue Joseph.

Vs. 30. He returned. They had left the spot after effecting the sale, and he thinking his opportunity had come opens the pit to find it empty; then he goes to them with reproaches when it is too late. He seems to have remained in ignorance of the sale and to have supposed that the brothers had carried out their original purpose while he was away (compare xlii. 22), but he has not the courage to expose them to his father.

Vs. 32. They sent. By the hands of servants. They did not dare face their father in the beginning of his grief.

Vs. 34. *Rent his clothes * * * sackcloth*—the most ancient manifestations of mourning.

Vs. 35. The grave unto my son. Sheol, the unseen world, with a thought of some kind of re-union there with Joseph.

Fifth Step. Take up the topics of the lesson and study them in the light of God's word.

1. God overruling evil for good.
   a. The principle stated. Ps. lxxvi. 10; Rom. viii. 28.
   b. The principle applied—Gen. l. 20; Acts ii. 23.
   c. Man alone responsible for the sin. See last two texts and James i. 13,14. (Review carefully the details of the lesson and note how their murderous intention is diverted by the providential passing of the Midianites so so as to work out God's purpose.)
2. Joseph and Christ.
   a. Parental Ponderings. vs. 11; Luke ii, 33, 51.
   b. Sent to their brethren. vs. 13; John i. 11.
   c. On a mission of peace. vs. 14; John iii. 17.
   d. Conspired against. vs. 18; Matt. xxi. 38.
   e. Reviled. vs. 19; John x. 20.
   f. The counsel of death. vs. 20; Matt. xxvii. 1.
   g. Half-hearted friends. vss. 21, 22; John vii. 50, 51.
   h. Stript of robe of honor. vs. 23; John xix. 23, 24.
   i. Sold at the price of a slave. vs. 28, Matt. xxvi. 15.
   j. Delivered to the Gentiles. vs. 28, Mark x. 33, Matt. xxvii. 2.

Sixth Step. Note and prayerfully apply the practical teachings of the lesson. We see envy and hatred bearing their natural fruits; we see [illegible] on character and lack of moral strength producing failure at a critical moment in one who means well; we see old Jacob still reaping the fruits of sins of which he had long ago repented—he had deceived his father and wronged his brother, and now he is deceived by his children and his favorite son is wronged by his brethren. But still we see God over all, and Christ foreshadowed.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

See that the points of the story are firmly fixed, and endeavor to make the picture on the child's mind as graphic as possible. Draw out a description of a caravan. Make the point very clear as to how God uses the sinful acts of men without any responsibility for, or partnership in, their sins. Have each of the scholars find one of the verses about Christ in the second Bible reading while another has the lesson open. Then have one of the verses read about Joseph and the corresponding verse about Christ. The Impression made will be very strong. This comparison will be carried in the subsequent lessons.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAR. 22.

40. Christ in Gethsemane, Matt. xxvi. 29.
41. Heb. v. 7.
42. The Apostle Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 7–10.

(The 41st question seems to have been misunderstood by many. I wanted a reference in Hebrews to Christ's Agony in the Garden, and to designate it more plainly I indicated that it was like Hosea's reference to Jacob's struggle at Peniel. Here are the two side by side: "Yea, he had power over the angel, and prevailed; he wept and made supplication unto him." [The rest of the verse and the verse following refer to Bethel]. Hosea xii. 4.

"Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." Heb. v. 7.)

There are five progressive steps in the study of a Sabbath-school lesson;

First hour's study, you don't see much in it.

Second hour's study, you think it is a pretty good lesson.

Third hour's study, you get deeply interested.

Fourth hour's study, you get the lesson.

Fifth hour's study, the lesson gets you.

When the lesson gets you there is one thing sure—you will not need a lesson-paper to help you teach it.—The Awakener.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

As far as we can see the three cold nights have swept away all the fruit and all early vegetables.

Greensboro, March 29th.

Col. B. R. Moore, Solicitor of the Criminal Court of New Hanover county, died at his home in Wilmington on 2d inst. Hon. Alfred M. Waddell has been appointed, by Judge Meares, to succeed him.

Rocky Mount Phœnix: Mr. Latta, of Red Oak, sold at the Davis warehouse this week a one horse load of nice tobacco for the handsome sum of $205. He also sold about 700 pounds of scrap tobacco for $42. His one horse crop has brought him in about $2,000.

Charlotte Observer: Mr. S. E. Garris lives in Sugar Creek. He tells a tale in which the potato bug figures. Several days ago he broke up some new ground on which nothing had ever been planted, and began planting potatoes, he and his wife. She had occasion to go back over some of the ground where she had been planting, and there to her astonishment she found the potato bugs already collected on several pieces of potato. Mr. Garris says "it beats anything" he ever knew.

Raleigh News and Observer: Mr. H. B. Stewart, who owns and lives on a plantation known as the Danner place, cut down a yard tree—a large, sturdy oak—which had been dead for several years, and on bolting it for boards found in the heart of the tree an old-fashioned, hand-made buggy wrench. The growth of the tree and years since it died, shows it to have been placed there nearly sixty years ago.

Goldsboro Argus: Another big whale, the second this season, was captured off Cape Lookout, near Morehead City, Tuesday, which is valued $1,000. This is a good "find" for the fishermen of the Cape. The last whale captured off this coast prior to this was one seven years ago. They come only at long intervals.

Mr. A. Leazar, superintendent of the penitentiary farms is reported as saying that he had 100 acres in wheat twenty inches high; which of course was badly injured by the frost.

DOMESTIC.

The cold snap extended all over the country. Heavy snow prevailed over much of Mississippi. At Kosciusko it fell to the depth of one and a half inches breaking all former records as to lateness. Garden truck was everywhere destroyed. At Columbus there was three inches of snow.

The planer, drying houses and about three million feet of lumber belonging to the Wiscassel Planing Mill Co., were destroyed last week at Hattiesburg, Miss.

On Tuesday of last week at Dallas, Texas, the freeze destroyed what remained of growing crops. Ice was half an inch thick. One account reports that a norther the day before drove the mercury down to twenty degrees in fifteen minutes. At Camden, Ark., snow was about an inch deep at the same date. The peach crop is supposed to be destroyed and the plum crop injured.

Gov. Northern appointed Speaker Crisp, of the U. S. House of the Representatives to succeed Gen. Colquitt as Senator from Georgia. Mr. Crisp declined. Hon. Patrick Walsh, editor of the Augusta Chronicle was then appointed and he accepted.

Three men were killed and six wounded by the falling of a bridge at Radford, Va. The bridge was wooden and was being removed to make way for an iron structure.

South Carolina during the week past has been in a turmoil that caused the death of several persons and at one time threatened civil war. Gov. Tillman sent constables to Darlington to enforce the dispensary law of the State. At that place the law is intensely unpopular. As the officers were at the depots returning a broil, not connected so far as appears with their conduct in discharge of duty, occurred between one of them and a citizen of whom a number, armed, were present. A shot was fired and then a fusillade occurred in which two citizens and two officers were killed and some other persons were wounded. The constables were outnumbered and fled to the swamps, and eventually escaped in one way or another. Troops were sent to Darlington at once. At Florence on hearing the news from Darlington great excitement prevailed, and the citizens looted and destroyed the dispensary. Troops were sent there and at last accounts order reigns in both Florence and Darlington.

James Martineau:

In all lives there is a crisis in the formation of character. It comes from many causes, and from some which, on the surface, are apparently trivial. But the result is the same—a sudden revelation to ourselves of our secret purposes, and a recognition of our perhaps long-shadowed but now masterful convictions.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Lutheran Observer:

If the world is ever to be redeemed to Christ, Fifth Avenue and Five Points will have to be brought nearer together in Christian worship and church work.

The Congregationalist:

The battle between Protestantism and Romanism is yet to be fought, and, if we do not wrongly read the signs of the times, it is to be fought on this continent sooner, perhaps, and with more terrible earnestness than we have thought.

United Presbyterian;

David met Goliath with a sling. It was an insignificant weapon, but it was the best he had. In fighting our spiritual foes, it is foolish to attempt to use the armor which other men may have used with success. If we use wisely the best we have, God's blessing will do the rest.

Baltimore Sun:

To the modern iconoclastic observer, it looks as though the Pilgrim mother maintained in no slight degree the dignity of the Puritans. The Pilgrim mothers died and were buried, but in the New England burying-grounds no tombstone has ever borne their names. In every case they are referred to as relicts of the Pilgrim Fathers. Perhaps they are yet to be honored. It was long years before Americans recognized the fact that Mary Washington was the mother of George.

New Zealand Presbyterian:

Our advice to our temperance brigade is, work steadily, hopefully and charitably at your oar, for the enterprise on which you have embarked is commending itself to increasing numbers on every hand, and the day for which you long and labor will soon enrich town and country with blessings, material, social and religious, which Christian temperance has a mission from God and man to diffuse.

At her home near Haw River, N. C., Sunday night, March 25th, Mrs. MARY ELIZABETH SHARP, in her 35th year. She had lived a member of Hawfields church for more than twenty years, a devout, earnest Christian. "At eventide it was light."

Good Times Ahead.

"Yes, I am real proud of the splendid body of men and women we have to represent us in the various parts of the country; many of them are among the best men and women that ever walked the sod, and we wish to employ a few more." This is the explanation that Mr. B. F. Johnson of the firm B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., gives of their advertisement.

Canada Presbyterian:

An article on the decline of pulpit power is always in order with a certain kind of magazine or newspaper. The writers of such article generally start by assuming that the pulpit has declined in power. Having assumed as true that which cannot be proved, they then moralize and draw conclusions. The facts, we believe, are that the average man in the ministry, in law, in medicine, and perhaps in every other profession, is a better equipped man than he ever was. There may be a smaller number who tower up over their fellows in these professions than formerly, but the reason is because the average fellow in law, in medicine, and perhaps in every other profession, is a better equipped man than he ever was. There may be a smaller number who tower up over their fellows in these professions than formerly, but the reason is because the average fellow stands much higher than he once did.

FOR THE FAMILY.

EVENING HYMN.

The day is ended. Ere I sink to sleep
My weary spirit seeks repose in thine.
Father, forgive my trespasses, and keep
This little life of mine.

With loving-kindness curtain thou my bed,
And cool in rest my burning pilgrim feet;
Thy pardon be the pillow for my head,
So shall my sleep be sweet.

At peace with all the world, dear Lord, and thee,
No fears my soul's unwavering faith can shake.
All's well, which ever side the grave for me.
The morning light may break.

THE OLD FLOWER WOMAN OF CANAL STREET.

All day long she sits in the shadows and sunshines of the great crowded street, this old, broken-hearted woman, weaving her pretty posies into hidden bouquets that the world never dreams of. All day she calls out in her feeble, piping voice, "Flowers for the pretty lady!" Flowers for the gentleman!" and the busy world rushes by. Sometimes the people stop to buy a cluster of fresh roses or modest violets, and the lover hums a gay tune as he pins the dainty boutonniere in the lapel of his coat, and gathers up a rich branch of jacqueminot roses for the loved one, whose cheeks are not brighter than the heart of the rose, and whose bosom will thrill at the message it brings; now, it is the schoolgirl looking out with rosy hope on the life that beckons onward—Whither? Ah! Who can tell? And then it is the stately jurist or the staid man of business who buys her pretty wares, disclosing by this simple action the chord of sentiment hidden beneath his philosophic exterior, and anon it is the mother buying a cluster of snowy lilies for the baby who lies in the graveyard, or the old woman tottering to that last home, where all her loved and lost await her. These flowers will take them a message from her. And so the day passes, and the night grows on, and the old flower woman of Canal street picks up her empty basket that was so fresh and fragrant in the morning and the little bench upon which she has sat all day, and walks slowly homeward in the starry night. How many who have bought her roses and jasmines and violets have guessed the sad poem that runs through her life, sad and sweet, for the sunshine and beauty it brings to the happy, thoughtless world. How many know the pathetic history of the old basket and the little bench that she hugs to her bosom in the creeping shadows. It was more than forty years ago that the old woman, young then, but with lines of sorrow on her face, went into Canal street and began to sell her flowers. In those days there was a pretty, fair-haired child, who ran by her side calling her "Mamma," and it was sweet to watch the two, as each morning the woman took up her stand near the corner of Royal street, and the little girl would sit at her side, on the little bench, helping to twine the pretty heart-speaking buds into bouquets of tender grace and beauty. But one day the old woman and the little girl were missing from their accustomed place, and the friends who were wont to buy their flowers wondered at their absence. That was in the terrible yellow fever epidemic of 1853, and after the plague subsided the woman, old and broken, came back to her flower stall, but the bonnie little girl was not at her side. The simple faded robe of black told the heartrending tale, and every one was very kind for years after that to the poor, brokenhearted mother. But, ah me! that was so many years ago. How many who were her patrons then tread Canal street to-day? New faces have crowded out the old, who lie slumbering in the graveyards, but the old flower woman lives on bravely, doing the duty of the hour, and yet, in silent thought, living over the past, as she sits on the little bench, which was once the seat of her only child, and twines her story into every posy she weaves. For forty years she has sat, day after day, on that little bench, which seems such a part of the life of her lost darling, clinging to it because her baby loved to sit upon it at her side and fondle her mother's hands and tell her pretty prattling hopes. And so the old flower woman of Canal street lives her poem of sorrow day by day, year, by year, and the world laughs on and the hours fleet as she weaves her posies and nears with unbending trust the goal where her flower will bloom into immortal beauty.—N. O. Picayune.

A REMARKABLE DOG.

This Strange Story Is Said to Be True in Every Particular.

My grandfather once owned a dog that was a cross between a mastiff and Newfoundland. He was large in size as the largest-mentioned breed, and in color that of an African lion, and strange to say, had a mane like one. His eyes, also, had the intelligent look of that animal.

Mars was his name. He was noted for his almost human intelligence. He never was known to bark as dogs are wont to do, but, when angry, rattled his teeth by shaking his head violently, so that they could be heard at a distance. This he never did except as a warning, and woe unto the intruder that passed unheeding. His disposition was mild and even playful with those of the household, but friend or foe never approached the house unchallenged at night. Mars had a deep, sonorous voice, when he chose to let it out, which was very seldom; then it was more akin to a lion's roar than to anything else earthly. He seemed to know instinctively what was his duty, and when and where his vigilance was needed.

Our grandfather, who was a clergyman, was recommended to reside in the country on account of feeble health; hence the family retired for several years to a beautiful farm in

AGAIN THE DOG LEAPED UP.

Indiana. It was there that Mars' finest faculties were developed. His usual place at night was the large barn that stood about four hundred yards from the dwelling. The master of the house had frequent occasions to be absent several days and nights. Without one word or sign from anyone, during the nights on these occasions, Mars would invariably lie across the threshold of grandmother's door, which opened out into a wide passage; but as soon as the master returned Mars resumed his usual place in the barn.

Our grandfather was copartner in a dry goods establishment in the village, about a mile from his home. Our uncle, who resided with him, was chief clerk. Mars was much attached to him and would frequently attend uncle there, then return. As evening approached he would go to the store, as if to guard him on his return. In winter or in stormy weather, uncle would often ride on horseback to and from the place of business.

One stormy winter evening, with Mars, as usual, in waiting, he hastily closed the store, locked the door, and leaped onto his horse to ride home. When Mars saw the horse wheeled for home, he jumped and gently held uncle by the pants. Thinking that Mars was only glad at seeing him start, he shook him off and proceeded briskly on. Again the dog leaped up and rattled his teeth ominously. Uncle stopped. Mars gently wagged his tail and trotted a few steps back. Uncle pondered as to what he meant. He knew the dog well enough to know that something was wrong; but what? With his eyes fixed on Mars, he slowly started again homeward. In an instant Mars arrested him as before. He then turned his horse's head and retraced his way toward the store; while Mars, full of apparent joy, ran on before, but still turning every moment to see if he was followed. On they went. On coming again in front of the store, uncle perceived at once the cause of the dog's strange actions: for, although he had locked the door, he had forgotten to take the key out. He instantly dismounted and secured the key; seeing which Mars ran homeward without further pause, but with a look of assured content in his splendid eyes which uncle never forgot.—Chicago Field.

Things Useful.

A great deal of unpleasant odour from boiling vegetables may be avoided by putting a piece of bread into the water with the vegetables.

A nice accessory to a closet without drawers, suitable for laying in a nice dress, is to make one or more bags to cover the dress, and thus protect it from dust. These bags are made longer than the dress skirt and button up, and are hung up by loops.

An ounce of nitrate of soda dissolved in four gallons of water is said to be a good stimulant for bulbs. It should be applied twice a week after the flower spikes show themselves. Dissolve one-half ounce of ammonia crystals in two gallons of water for watering plants. A teaspoonful of aqua ammonia in a gallon of water gives the same strength.

Browned Sandwiches.—Spread each slice of bread with chopped meat, cover with a slice of bread, and press together. Proceed in this manner till all the meat and bread are used, and cut each sandwich in halves. Place them on a plate and pour over them a egg beaten smooth with two-thirds of an coffee cup of milk, and let stand a couple of hours, or till the custard is absorbed. Put a generous tablespoonful of butter on a large frying pan, and when it begins to brown place the sandwiches carefully upon it. When nicely browned add a little more butter and turn them, letting them brown quickly on the other side. Serve as soon as possible.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

FOUR MOTTOES.

"Look up, not down!" Do you see how the tree-top
Rejoices in sunshine denied to its root,
And hear how the lark, gazing skyward, is flooding
The world with its song, while the ground-bird is mute?

"Look out and not in!" See the sap rushing outward,
In leaf, bud and blossom; all winter it lay
Imprisoned, while earth wore a white desolation;
Now Nature is glad with the beauty of May.

"Look forward, not back!" Tis the chant of Creation,
The chime of the seasons as onward they roll;
'Tis the pulse of the world, 'tis the hope of the ages,
'Tis the voice of our God in the depths of the soul.

"Lend a hand!" Like the sun that turns night into morning,
The moon that drives storm-driven sailors to land.
Ah, life were worth living, with this for the watchword,
"Look up, out, and forward, and each lend a hand!"

How the Willows Came to be Called Pussy Willows.

There was once a great city in Asia which was built so long ago that even the name of the city and of its people has been forgotten, and everything else about it except one little story.

The people were very fond of cats and there were great numbers of them all about the city. These people believed that cats were sacred animals, fed them well, treated them kindly, and when they died made little mummy cats of them.

When the city was very old there came a great flood which covered the earth.

Cats do not like water, and when it began to rain so hard the cats and kittens were very unhappy.

When the ground grew wet and muddy they tried to find trees into which they could climb to keep dry.

The old cats remembered that there was a great forest of big trees on some mountains a long way off, and they set out for it on the run.

The kittens started too, but they could not run so fast or so far, and their little legs grew tired trying to run through the deep mud, and so when they came to a row of tall willow trees beside a river, they climbed up and rested themselves in the forks made by the branches next to the tree trunks.

It was comical to see the tall slender trees full of kittens, some white, some yellow, but most of them very cunning gray Maltese kits like balls of fur or little gray squirrels.

Soon each kitten rolled itself into a ball with its head thrust snugly between its paws so as not to feel the rain and the cold, and went to sleep.

It rained harder and harder and the water rose higher and higher, until the earth was covered with water and only the treetops were left above the surface. As the wind drove the waves hither and thither they struck on the tree trunks and splashed mud over the little kittens until there was a thick coating of sticky mud on them so they could not move, and one could see nothing but little brown balls along the branches.

So they stayed there day after day until it stopped raining and the sun shone again. At last the water dried away and the earth appeared, but the kittens still slept, for the shell of mud over them was so thick they did not know the rain had stopped.

But the sun shone warm upon them and dried the mud, until, as it dried, it cracked open and the sunshine reached the kittens underneath and one could see through the cracks bits of white and yellow and gray fur. Then the little cats woke up, put their heads through the cracks and then pushed clear out. The shells of mud fell down to the ground, and it was like the blossoming of a flower, for all along the branches, where just before were the dull brown balls of mud, shone the soft, smooth, furry balls of gray and yellow and white.

If you look at the willow-trees and bushes beside the brooks in the month of March, you will find the little brown balls or buds all along the stems.

If you watch them as the sun shines on them day by day, you will see the brown balls crack and you can see the gray, yellow and white fur underneath while at last the brown balls will fall to the ground. Then you will see the dainty gray, white and yellow "pussies" or "pussy willows" all along the stems with their fur as smooth and soft as the prettiest kitten you ever saw. A few days later you will see the strings of yellow seeds hang down like little kittens' fluffy tails.

And so we call the willows "pussy willows" and call the strings of seed "catkins," in memory of the little kittens of the old forgotten city and the way they lived safely through the days of the Flood.—Frank O. Carpenter in Our Little Men and Women.

Little Cyril's Work.

"I wish I could do something to help the poor people, mother," said a little boy of six, one cold winter's afternoon.

"What makes you think of that just now, darling?"

"I believe it is because I am so warm and comfortable in this nice pretty room and because I have so enjoyed my play with little Sissie."

Little Sissie was the daughter of a poor woman who lived in Mrs. Alford's district. She had been sent for to play with Cyril, whilst her mother went to fetch some work. Nurse had taken her home and was now downstairs getting Cyril's tea ready, and he was watching the falling snow.

His little playmate had been quite lost in admiration at all his toys, and it had been half Cyril's pleasure to show off on his new rocking-horse, which he could ride now quite bravely, only holding the reins! He had heard his mother give orders to have a basket packed with tea, butter, sugar and cakes for Sissie to take home with her, and ever since he had been thinking why he could not help some of the poor people too.

Cyril knew that the reason Sissie's mother did not wish her to stay alone whilst she was out, was because there were so many wicked people living in their street that she could not trust her little girl by herself, left she should come to harm. He remembered, too, having heard only the Sunday before, when a stranger clergyman had preached, that many of the poor people were neglected, and had little opportunity of being good and hearing of our Father and Jesus Christ. He had added:

"Will not some of you, who have happy homes yourselves, spare something for others, that clergymen, kind city missionaries and lady workers may be enabled to go amongst them, teaching comforting and helping them to be good!"

Cyril's mother now drew her little son closer to her and said:

"My darling, I will tell you what Lillian Hatch did for a long time to help the Society we heard about last Sunday. I do not see why you should not take up her work, although you are many years younger than she when she began."

Cyril's eyes filled with tears, for he had loved Lillian so much, and she had been taken to her heavenly home a few days before. Although Cyril knew she was safe with Jesus yet he missed her coming in and out; she had always been so bright and amusing, and told him such nice Bible stories.

"Well, Cyril," continued Mrs. Alford, "Lillian always took a great interest in mission work, and whenever the magazine came she always looked out the children's portion to see if there was anything she could understand. Children are apt to think their hands are so small and their words so weak that they cannot do anything really useful in helping forward the Lord's work, but it is a great mistake. Lilian wrote for a collection box, and was quite content to get pennies, half-pennies and even farthings to to put in it. She sometimes had presents given her of money, and she always put some of it in her box. Then she asked ten people to promise to give her a penny a week. This she used to collect herself, and she found that those ten people who paid up regularly enabled her to send up £3 3s. 4d. a year to the Society. She used to ask her friends in such a winning way that they felt they must give something for her box. Lilian's mother told me also she used to pray regularly that God would bless her work and the work of the Society. We know the influence of a child's prayer must be very great. You see she did three things: 1, she worked herself; 2, she interested others; 3, she prayed for the Society. She has left a very sweet memory behind her, dear little Lilian."

Cyril's large eyes were fixed on his mother's face; he was very, very interested. Presently he said:

"Mother, may I have a box and begin at once?"

"You may if you promise to go on regularly with it. I want my boy to learn to help others."

Nurse then appeared to say tea was quite ready, and would Master Cyril come at once. Yes, nursie; but I want to tell you, I am going to help poor people myself, because mother says I may."

The little boy told her all about Lillian's way of working as he trotted up to his nursery; and nurse told him she would be his first subscriber of a penny a week, because she wanted to help too. That evening Mrs. Alford wrote to the Society asking for a box to be sent. After waiting a few days a parcel came by post addressed to Master Cyril Alford.

"How lovely!" cried Cyril. "I like my box much better than mother's."

"Come along, Master Cyril," said nurse. "Here's my first penny."

Little friends, have you such a box? If not, ask your parents to send to some Missionary Society and get one for you. —Mary Sturdee, in The Christian.

Cocoanut Cream.—Grate a fresh sweet cocoanut (having first peeled, washed, and wiped it dry); mix with it an ounce of sugar; melt in as little water as possible three-quarters of an ounce of gelatine; whip the whites of three eggs, mix them with half a pint of milk, and stir over the fire till the custard thickens; sweeten with four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Stir the gelatine and a full half-pint of grated cocoanut with the cocoanut milk into the custard. Whip half a pint of thick cream solid, and stir it very carefully into the custard; when the latter is quite cold, but before it sets, flavor with a little vanilla or lemon extract. Mold and set on ice.

YOUNG GIRLS entering womanhood ought to have just the special help that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can give.

They need to be started right. The "Prescription" aids and promotes the proper functions, corrects the delicate weaknesses and derangements that might become chronic, establishes regularity and health, lessens pain.

They want a nourishing, supporting, strengthening tonic, such as an experienced physician has especially prepared for the female system, in the "Prescription."

In every "female complaint" and weakness, and in all nervous conditions, if it doesn't benefit or cure, the money will be returned.

Miss MAGGIE JACKSON, of Barbreck, St. Landry Parish, La., says: "I was lying sick for some time with female complaints, and all the medicine my friends gave me did me no good. Death was approaching; all my friends had given me up to die. I heard of your wonderful medicine, and I bought two bottles of it, and before I had taken the last, I got entirely well. I am still enjoying good health, and expect to praise your medicine every where I go."

SAY SOES.

Scratches in varnish will entirely disappear if a coarse cloth that has been well saturated with linseed-oil be laid over them. This simple remedy is invaluable to those who have the care of carriages and other highly polished furniture.

Candor will lose you some friends, but not as many as deceit.

A Lotion for Fetid Feet and Arm Pits.—Bromo-chloralium, 1 part, water 15 parts. Bathe three or four times a day. For these and other similar cases, this formula has been successful when all other remedies have failed.

"Rock Me to Sleep Mother."

The poem, "Rock Me to Sleep Mother" was written by Elizabeth Akers Allen, known otherwise as "Florence Percy." It is a general favorite for it is a sweet little touch of home life. But there is another side to the picture. Many a mother rocks her child to sleep who can neither rest nor sleep herself. She is always tired, has an everlasting backache, is low spirited weary, nervous and all that. Thanks be, she can be cured. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will do the work. There is nothing on earth like it, for the "complaints" to which the sex are liable. Guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case or money returned.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are specific for biliousness, headaches, constipation, piles, and kindred ailments.

Hemmorrhæges of the lungs or stomach are promptly checked by small doses of salt. —Hall's Journal of Health.

The Fire Department in every city could not do better than to keep a dozen of Salvation Oil at each station. It instantly relieves all burns, scalds and bruises, and in a few days makes an effectual cure of the wound: 25 cts.

Old-Fashioned Onion Syrup.—The old-fashioned onion Syrup, made of minced onions, a tablespoonful of vinegar (cider vinegar is the best), and half a cup of boiling molasses, will be found a good remedy for hoarseness and sore throat.

Marry This Girl—Somebody!

MR. EDITOR:—

I stained a blue silk dress with lemon juice; what will restore the color? I am making lots of money, selling the Climax Dish Washer. Have not made less than $10 any day I worked. Every family wants a Dish Washer, and pay $5 quickly when they see the dishes washed and dried perfectly in one minute. I generally sell at every house. It is easy selling what every family wants to buy. I sell as many Washers as my brother, and he is an old salesman. I will clear $3,000 this year. By addressing J. H. Nolen, 60 W. Third Ave., Columbus, Ohio, any one can get particulars about the Dish Washer, and can do as well as I am doing.

Talk about hard times; you can soon pay off a Mortgage, when making $10 a day, if you will only work; and why won't people try, when they have such good opportunities.

A WOUNDED SPIRIT.

We suffer both in body and in spirit. The suffering differs in kind, causes and cure. The suffering may be of either of these or of both together. If of the body only, while it may be difficult to diagnose the disease, it may be more certainly and satisfactorily treated than if of the spirit alone, and still more than if of the two together. Careful and skillful and conscientious physicians realize this and take time to decide of what sort the suffering is. If it arise from disease or wound of the body they are more hopeful than of either of the other possible conditions. If the mind be clear and undisturbed, if the spirit be courageous or hopeful, or if the soul have no burden of guilt or sense of sin the physician feels encouraged to expect good results from the best remedies and nursing even though the disease be virulent or the wound dangerous. In any such case the whole spirit may greatly aid the physician and there are cases when it must sustain the patient and secure recovery. But if the spirit be wounded, in proportion to the seriousness of that wound will be the difficulty of treatment. Making this distinction clearly in a proverb the wise man has said: "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?" It is an appeal to experience, a statement which we all know to be true with a question whose answer is plain to all. There is no one who can long endure the pain of a wounded spirit.

The spirit of man may be wounded in many ways. In stating some of these as we see them we shall not call special attention to the distinction between the intellectual and the moral faculties but make our statements somewhat in the order thus suggested. In early life or in maturer years a desire for something may take possession of the mind, it may master the faculties and forces and work amongst all plans and direct all deeds only to fail of realization. That failure, by reason of the mental exertion and physical labor involved, will wound the spirit. An affection may be centred on some cherished object and not be answered with responsive affection or may be despised or rejected. Therein we may have a wounded spirit. Faithful service may deserve recognition or there may be a feeling that deserved honor is withheld. In any or all these ways there may be a persuasion that injustice or wrong has been done, and, as the wound is made generally as a feeling that wrong has been done, the spirit is sore. A cherished and controlling ambition for wealth, or honor, or power, may never be realized. It may have come to be the one seeming necessity; and when the truth becomes clear or the persuasion convincing that the ambition is not and cannot be realized the wound is made. Two men start together, after spending their youth in sport and labor side by side. One works hard, as he thinks, but makes little headway, and after a while sees the other far ahead in business or profession. Some one suggests or he believes the success has come by unjust means, and he is wounded deeply still more serious is this, that good and pure lives are besmirched. Attacks are covertly and sometimes maliciously made on the reputation or good name of one trying to do right. This whether from selfish motives, or prejudice or supposed righteous zeal, has all the effect of slander. Charges of dishonesty or falsehood are freely made until wounds almost deadly are cut in the spirit of sensitive natures. One Psalm declares this experience true and points to CHRIST as the sufferer. It declares the source to be a friend, in name at least, and that they had taken sweet counsel together and gone to the house of GOD in company. It is further intimated that the slander is not easily disproved and the falsehood seems to be true. What then must be the seriousness of the wound? If in addition to this or apart from it the soul suffers from occasional or abiding overwhelming and unrelenting recollections of sin, with a sense of guilt the condition is serious indeed. If upon this is flashed the light of GOD's holiness who can bear it? The Christian is called to bear burdens not self-imposed, to take the cross not self-invented to run a race in a way set, with stones in the path and mountains to be scaled. Until it is known and accepted that all this worketh together for good the Spirit will be sore.

If the spirit be whole the bodily infirmity may be endured. But the wounded spirit has added anguish because its pangs are most severe often when the body is feeble. It is then too that supposed, though unreal, wounds, do most distress. If there be no repentance under sense of guilt, and no refuge in GOD from the sore wounds of disappointment and hardships and slander it is small wonder that wounded spirits are driven to remorse or even despair and suicide. It is to save souls and heal the wounded spirit that a balm is found in Gilead and there is a physician there. For this JESUS came to bind up the broken-hearted. For this is revealed His tender compassion and concern for the suffering. For this is the record: "Like as a father pitieth his children so the LORD pitieth them that fear Him."

For the sin-sick soul, for the guilty conscience, for the trembling helpless sinner JESUS is revealed to take away transgression to save from sin. In Him is salvation from sin. When that is received, and only following that, is there any good or comfort from the trials of life. Being saved through the redemption that is in CHRIST JESUS the wounded spirit is assured that all the trials and disappointments of life are means of grace. So that nothing can come of real harm, and all that is mysterious will be explained bye and bye. As to character the spirit need have no fear. GOD will see to that. There may for a time be clouds over the reputation, but they will be sooner or later dispersed. Let the wounded spirit take refuge in this blessed word: "Commit thy way unto the LORD; trust also in Him and He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday. Rest in the LORD and wait patiently for Him; fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass. Cease from anger and forsake wrath; fret not thyself in any wise to do evil."

THE EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North Carolina, met in Wilmington April 6th to 9th, with delegates from twenty-one associations in cities and towns and nine in colleges and schools. The meeting was a success from all points of view. There was a good number of delegates. The business was well conducted. The collections and pledges were excellent. The meetings were deeply spiritual and the services in our city churches conducted by delegates were much blessed. Twenty-six confessed CHRIST and many inquirers are asking the way of salvation. Two meetings are going forward in Fifth Street M. E. church and St. Andrew's Presbyterian church. Mr. W. R. GALES who has been so blessed in meetings and several other deeply spiritual men have done good work. We have received a blessing in our city and bid the work and the workers GOD speed.

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

This body met last week at Beth Car church in the extreme southwestern corner of our territory. It was the smallest meeting we recall. There was not a single elder from the line of the W. & W. R. R., except the two from Wilmington, and none from the large territory east of that line.

While it was a small body, it found a large welcome. We have no more faithful or loyal congregation in our bounds than the good people of Beth Car, and to those who were able to attend, it was a great pleasure to be with them. All the ministers were present except Revs. COLIN SHAW and J. D. STANFORD. The former was not sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to take the long ride across the country. The Presbytery received Rev. JOSEPH EVANS, from Fayetteville and Rev. S. H. ISLER, from Albemarle. It dismissed Rev. W. McC. MILLER to Roanoke and Rev. F. W. FARRIES to Albemarle.

The Presbytery was organized by the election of Ruling Elder JOHN D. CURRIE, of Clarkton, moderator, and Ruling Elder C. U. DAHLGREN as clerk. We will not anticipate the regular report of the stated clerk by giving details of proceedings. The business was promptly and thoroughly done. The report of the Home Mission Committee is published in another column. Its statement that all vacancies are filled is cause for devout thankfulness to GOD. All the reports show some falling off in receipts, but on the whole our people have stood up remarkably well under the distressing conditions of the last year. Nearly all of our churches report arrears to their pastors. Only seven had paid in full, and most of these were scattered through various charges so that only two ministers had been paid what was promised.

The Revised Directory was adopted. The Assembly was overtured to take such action as would make the preaching of candidates regular and constitutional by providing for earlier licensure, and the appointment of an ad interium Committee on this subject by the last Assembly was commended.

There was preaching twice a day to large and attentive congregations. The Presbytery adjourned Friday at noon, but several ministers remained to preach Saturday and Sunday.

Rev. A. McFADYEN and Elder JAMES H. MOORE, were elected Commissioners to the Assembly, and Rev. K. McDONALD and Elder A. A. WILLARD, Alternates.

THE "MOORE FUND" IS COMPLETE!

Please acknowledge the following gifts to the "Moore Fund:"

A Friend in Fayetteville, $1.00; A Lady Friend in First church, Greensboro, $2.00; A Lady Friend in First church, Greensboro, .50; A Friend in Maxton, $1.00; Davidson L. M. S., $10.50; Mrs. S. R. Neel, $1.00; Y. P. Mission Board of Centre, $12.50; Little River L. M. S., $8.00. Total, $36.50. Amount previously reported, $1,763.50. Total to date, $1,800.

This completed the fund necessary to send Mr. Moore and his sister to Japan and support them for one year. I am sure that this announcement will rejoice the hearts of many who have watched this matter with increasing interest week by week.

It will rejoice them still more to know that a letter has been received from Rev. Mr. Moore and his sister mailed in San Francisco, announcing that they were just about to take the steamer for Japan: This is "glad tidings" indeed and I am sure that many a generous giver to this fund already realizes that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Thanking God for His favor upon this effort to raise this fund and thanking the people of God for this prompt and liberal response to the appeal sent out to the church.

I am yours fraternally,

ALFRED T. GRAHAM.

PREACHING VISITS TO CHAPEL HILL, NEW HOPE, AND HILLSBORO.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I returned last Monday night from Hillsboro, whither I had gone on the previous Saturday morning to fill my third and last appointment of Presbytery to give a Sabbath to each of the above named vacant churches. The visit to each of these churches was very pleasant, and I had large and attentive congregations. I was very sorry to think that Chapel Hill with so many of the young men of our State, had as present no Presbyterian minister, and I agreed to visit this church once a month, provided they would promise not to be satisfied or contented with such an arrangement and that it should not interfere with there getting a settled minister again for Chapel Hill and New Hope. The latter church was crowded the day I preached for them, and I was told that such was the case whenever Bro. Fogartie, their recent pastor preached. The visit, however, to Hillsboro was one of more than usual interest. When last I preached there, it was to conduct the funeral services at the burial of their beloved pastor (Rev. Mr. Wilhelm.) The church draped with the habiliments of mourning, and every face sad and tearful. At 11 a. m., on Saturday, March 31st, I preached to a tolerably well filled house, and after the sermon I moderated a congregational meeting which had been previously announced for that day, for the election of a ruling elder and of a deacon. At this meeting Mr. Henry Richards was unanimously elected a ruling elder, and Mr. Calvin Parrish with like unanimity was elected deacon. Mr. Richards being present signified his acceptance and he was thereupon ordained and installed, according to the order prescribed in our Book of Church Order. Bro. A. Currie had come in during the sermon and took part in the ordination. Two persons—a gentleman and a lady—were received on certificate and their names announced on the next day. Mr. Calvin Parrish (deacon elect) not being present, his ordination and installation was postponed. On Sabbath April 1st) at 11 a. m., the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. The day was fair and bright, and the people said the congregation was unusually large—and I can testify that they seemed profoundly interested in all the services. After the invocation Mr. Parrish who had signified his readiness to accept the office of deacon came forward and he and the church having answered affirmatively the questions propounded in our book—he too, was ordained and installed. Bro. A. Currie and two ruling elders uniting with me in the laying on of hands and the prayer. After the sermon the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Our Methodist brethren, in large numbers (and perhaps others,) I was told, sat with us that day "in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." At 8 p. m., I preached again to a congregation as large as the one in the morning. On Monday morning I met with the two recently ordained officers and had a very pleasant and satisfactory talk with them as to the responsibilities and duties of their office and closed the conference with prayer, I was greatly pleased with and am hopeful for good results from their character and the reputation which they have in the community. I made several calls upon some familier, whom I had knowu and loved in bye gone years and had Scripture reading and prayers. I was the guest of Mrs. Alice Heartt, while in Hillsboro, and to all who know this charming household, it goes without saying that my entertainment was Christian, cordial and homelike.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Home and Foreign Missions in Stokes County.

Having just returned from a week's visit and work, in Stokes county, we find it almost impossible to write, talk or think about anything else.

Despite the rough roads, the rough weather and even other experiences, which some people might call rough, which reminded us strongly of Barnabas and his friends, in Macedonia, we were simply delighted and cannot let an opportunity slip to make others partakers of our joy.

Of the general character of the county, its destitutions and more positive possessions, and needs, it is not necessary now to speak, as they are so well known, at any length. A year ago there were no Presbyterians in it. It is a notorious "blockading" or "moonshining" section and "the Hardshells" have, as one man expressed it forcibly "not given the people a fair chance" to save their souls or improve their minds.

The consequence is that there are many persons who are anxious to enjoy better advantages, than they have found it possible to attain from those who have hitherto ministered to them. The soil seems ready for something better to be given, and now is the time to do it.

Good Brother Miller, went into a diocese which was, in many respects, unattractive, but which was crying for what he could give. In his modest, quiet, unassuming manner he has simply worked his way into the homes and hearts of the whole community, and it is delightful to hear the people speak of him and tell of the wonderful results he has been permitted to work.

Bro. Black has gone twice and helped Bro. Miller gather in the harvest of his faithful labors, and left an impression, as he always does, of his own intense earnestness and devotion to the work.

One church was organized at Dan River last year with about fifty members, it has since grown to over eighty, and they are now worshipping in their own building, with a splendid Sunday-school and a live prayer-meeting, conducted entirely by the members of the newly organized church.

Another church was organized, last Sabbath, at Danbury with over thirty members, and the material is all lying ready now, for building a church and schoolhouse. They are still worshipping in the Court House.

Bro. Miller wrote that he wanted these people to get started right and learn at once, that they had duties to others, beyond their own borders. They came out, in full force, to the services we held, in the interest of Foreign Missions, and we were able to take steps towards organizing societies, in both churches, with five members in one and fifteen in the other, as well as to secure several subscribers to the Missionary in each congregation. Through the influence of a noble Christian woman, even before we went there, a contribution of $100 had been obtained for this work from a most enthusiastic and influential elder.

Surely these are facts which should make us glad and put many to shame, who may see them.

Home Missions and Foreign Missions are one. Neither can be neglected without damage to the other. They are naturally helpful.

We would say to the Brethren also that Stokes county, is the place to establish a reputation—if they desire one still. One man told me that Bro. Black "had preached the powfullist sermons ever heard in Danbury." Another said that Bro. Miller was "just the plum faithfullist preacher he had ever seed." Still another remarked that they had "never had no such "Missionary" in that county," as the Secretary of the Synod of North Carolina.

In faithfulness it must be said that "Missionary," in his vocabulary, meant "Missionary Baptist!"

Let every brother, who feels that he is not appreciated, or that he has a hard work, go and spend a week with Bro. Miller in his difficult, but grateful field. It will do him good.

"REST IN THE LORD AND WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM."

In Thy dear arm, O loving Master do I rest!
Without a care which way I go;
'Tis dark. This only do I know,
That Thou wilt keep me in the safest way, and best.

And so in patience am I waiting Thy sweet will;
However rough the path,
I know for me it hath
Some peaceful goal. I'll trust Thee, and be still.

So, resting, waiting patiently, in blessed calm,
No more this heart shall be Tossed like the troubled sea.
It's felt the hush and stilling of the holy Psalm.

FOREIGN MISSIONS IN MAY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DEAR BRETHREN:—The first Sabbath in May is as you know the day appointed by the General Assembly as the great day of the year for Foreign Missions. From all our pulpits on that day the claims of the heathen on our love and pity are to be presented, and the leaders of the Lord's host are to rally our people and give us our marching orders.

The work of our Church during the past year has had many tokens of the divine approval. Twenty-seven new missionaries were sent out, the largest number ever sent in one year; thirteen others are under appointment, waiting to be sent; and others have made application for appointment.

Our force now numbers one hundred and twenty-nine. Besides these we have 135 native helpers. Two years ago we had only 102 missionaries, with 87 native helpers. In spite of panic and hard times the receipts of the treasury for last year were larger than ever before, so that, although the work has been so much enlarged we were enabled to close the year with all our obligations met, and no debt incurred. In this experience our Church stands almost, if not entirely, alone.

With such encouragements we enter on the work of the new year with hope and joy. To support our work this year as already laid out, and to make such an advance as we ought to make, we only need the continued blessing of God, which we may have for the asking, and just a little more of the same spirit of self-denial which the Church has manifested in this cause during the past year.

And now shall we not all with glad hearts offer freely for this service, resolving that this year shall witness a great forward movement all along the line? O that every pastor may find himself "in the Spirit" on the morning of the first Sabbath of May with heart on fire with love for Christ, and for the souls of the perishing! May the Spirit of the Master's sacrifice be in the hearts of all the people. Then, although our responsibilities are so much increased, there will be consecrated money in our treasury to meet them.

We shall send you our leaflets and envelopes this year without waiting to be asked. Let those whose business it is see to it that they are well distributed, and that every member of every Church shall have the claims of this cause brought to his attention, and be given an opportunity to contribute to it. "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Fraternally yours,
S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

Home Happiness.

The road to home happiness lies over small stepping stones. Slight circumstances are the stumbling-blocks in families. The prick of a pin, says the proverb, is enough to make an empire insipid. The tenderer the feelings the painfuller the wound. A cold, unkind word checks and withers the blossom of the dearest love, as the most delicate rings of the vine are troubled by the faintest breeze. The misery of life is born of a chance observation. If the true history of quarrels, public and private, were honestly written, it would be silenced by an uproar of derision.

AMONG THE STARS.

Wonders and Mysteries of the Celestial World.

Described by Sir Richard Stowell Ball, Royal Astronomer of Ireland.

I always endeavor to impress on those who are anxious to learn something of the wonders of the heavens that a great observatory fitted with expensive appliances is not absolutely necessary to the would-be star gazer. No doubt in one of our great astronomical establishments the visitor beholds with astonishment mighty telescopes costing thousands of pounds, disposed in special buildings erected at much expense. It might, therefore, not unnaturally be concluded that an instrument on a vast scale and of commensurate cost is indispensably required whenever celestial work is to be done. Of course I need hardly say that there are certain inquiries in which these tremendous instruments cannot be dispensed with. There are, however, many very interesting and instructive observations possible which only require the very simplest optical assistance.

On my first visit at night to the observatory of one of the greatest modern astronomers I was much struck by noticing that the instrument he happened to be directing toward the heavens at the time was a common opera glass. The beginner should follow this example and make his first acquaintance with the celestial glories by the aid of the same very familiar form of telescope. The special advantage which the opera glass or ordinary binocular possess for our present purpose consists in the exceptional largeness of the portion of the sky which it permits him to comprehend in one glance. The beginner who is privileged to explore the heavens through a mighty telescope often feels rather disappointed when he finds how small is the region which is presented in the field. Indeed with one of the greater instruments it would not be possible to exhibit the whole disc of the moon in a single glance. The construction of the opera glass is, however, such that its field will take in whole constellations at the same time, and this is a circumstance which offers a great advantage to one who is desirous of obtaining a general notion of the contents of the heavens.

Suppose that the opera glass be turned on any well known group of stars, such for example as the Pleiades, then a most interesting spectacle will be instantly displayed. With the unassisted eye we can generally see about half a dozen stars in this group, and those persons who are endowed with exceptionally keen vision can, it appears, detect as many as ten or a dozen, or sometimes even more. But the opera glass exhibits to the astonished beholder thirty or forty or even fifty or sixty stars in this same little constellation. A glance through it proves at once that the stars which we ordinarily term the Pleiades are merely the few brightest members among the hundreds which constitute a mighty group of glittering points. The great majority of this host of stars are too faint to be disclosed to ordinary vision, but it only requires such a comparatively slight assistance as the opera glass affords to render them conspicuously visible. I ought, however, to add that there are many members of the same cluster which are far too faint to be discernible even by the most powerful opera glass, but which can be perceived by more efficient telescopes. When the full glories of the group are displayed by the greatest instruments it is seen to number more than two thousand members.

The success which the beginner will have had with the Pleiades may, it is to be hoped, induce him to direct similiar glances to other parts of the sky. He will find that whatever part of the heavens he may scrutinize with the help of the opera glass, the field of view is strewn with a number of stars far greater than that which his unaided vision can show in the same region. In fact it is not too much to say that over the entire heavens an opera glass exhibits a number of stars perhaps ten times as great as can ever be seen with the unaided eye. When we remember that each of the stars thus revealed is to be regarded as a sun, and that these suns are many of them quite as large and quite as important as the sun belonging to our own system, then indeed we must admit that the opera glass has given us a glorious insight into the sublimity of the heavens.

But the student who has employed himself for some nights both pleasantly and profitably in studying the different parts of the sky with the opera glass will presently feel a desire to see what the stars look like through some more effective instrument. I shall, therefore, suppose that he has provided himself with a small telescope which may be, let us say, about three inches in diameter and from three to four feet in length. The young astronomer will at once notice that his telescope shows a remarkable advance over the opera glass in power. Its capabilities will be most easily manifest by the very large number of additional stars that are disclosed. The stars in the sky seem indeed to be almost as far beyond enumeration as are the sands on the seashore. But it is not only their increase in number which is the specially remarkable point; the beginner will now pay attention to the circumstance that many objects which appear to the unaided vision merely as single stars are really composed of two or more stars so close together that the separate points cannot be discriminated except with telescopic aid.

The most notable instance of what is called a double star is to be found in Mizar. This object may be easily identified by observing that it is the middle star of the three which form the handle of the constellation known as the Dipper, or the Plough in ordinary language. In the language more usual among astronomers Mizar is the middle one of the three stars which form the tail of the Great Bear. So far as the unaided vision is concerned, the only circumstance which might attract particular attention to this object is the presence of another small star named Alcor quite close to the brighter object. The telescope will however, at once demonstrate the remarkable fact that Mizar is composed of two bright stars quite close together. The spectacle is indeed a singularly pleasing one, for it shows that the object before us is no less than a pair of twin stars obviously related and associated by invisible bonds. How intrinsically great this double star actually is may be appreciated from the fact that the larger of the two components of Mizar has been found to weigh more than ten million times as much as the earth.

After a little experience the observer will discern that many other interesting double stars are also within the range of the small telescope we have supposed him to be using. Let him observe Castor, for instance, when he will see a noble pair of suns which revolve each around the other in a period of a few centuries. He must also look at the wonderful star Theta in the Sword Handle of the constellation of Orion. There he will be delighted to behold a splendid cluster of four bright stars and two smaller points, the whole six being so close together as to appear like a single star, except when the power of the telescope is applied.

But perhaps the most beautiful feature in the whole of double star astronomy has yet to be mentioned. The well known bright stars are usually of a white color. There are, however, certain stars more or less tinged with red, with yellow, or with orange. It happens from some cause or other that in many of the double stars the hues of the components are exceptionally vivid. The beauty and delicacy of the spectacle thus presented is not unfrequently enhanced by the circumstance that the tints of the allied objects are strangely contrasted. Here is indeed one of the most pleasing displays which the heavens offer to our contemplation. Turn the telescope for instance on that famous object which indicates the bill of the swan. I refer to the star called Beta Cygni, to give it the exact designation which astronomers generally employ. There will be found a double star of which the larger member is truly a gem glittering with the hue of a beautiful topaz, while the smaller star associated therewith displays an emerald blue! The fact that genuine blue stars are very infrequent in the heavens makes this exquisite object all the more worthy of the astronomer's attention.

In spending an hour among the stars we must take care to allot sufficient time for the examination of some of those sublime spectacles presented in the great star clusters. By far the most remarkable of the objects so named is that in the sword handle of Perseus. This cluster can just be discerned by the unaided eye as a dull point of light. When, however, the telescope is directed upon the spot the light is seen to emanate from a myriad of brilliant points which form a miniature richly wrought with beautiful gems. It is obvious that all these stars, or suns we may perhaps call them, are allied to constitute some mighty system in far distant space.

In the case of other clusters, such as the superb globular cluster in Hercules, the several stars seen from our point of view appear to be individually fainter than the stars in the cluster of Perseus. But what the stars in Hercules group lack in individual brightness they make up for by abundant number. This wonderful object consists veritably of a ball of stars so numerous and so close together that in the central portions we are not able to distinguish the several points. We only see the light dispersed from them collectively. On the outer regions of this astonishing association of stellar points the stars are more naturally sparsely distributed, and we are thus able to discriminate the different individuals. In this cluster of Hercules we have a collection of thousands of stars, which occupy only a very small spot on the sky and are entirely invisible to the unaided eye.

Lastly the observer during his hour with the stars should study some of the nebulae both great and small which are so liberally strewn over the heavens. No doubt most of these objects are so extremely faint that we have to invoke the help of really powerful telescopes when we want to do justice to the delicacy and to perceive the full extent of such light stains on the sky. The most beautiful of these objects, as well as most celebrated, is the Great Nebula in Orion which lies beneath the well known belt in that constellation, and serves as a glorious setting or halo around the remarkable multiple star to which I have already referred The great nebula in Orion is evidently a stupendous mass of gas which has been heated to a temperature so elevated that it glows with a bluish hue characteristic of the particular materials of which it is composed. Indeed the light of the nebula when suitably examined discloses to the astronomer the actual elements from which this great structure is composed. It appears that the light which the glowing gas yields is of the same character as the light given off by incandescent hydrogen. We thus infer that hydrogen is an important constituent in the composition of this remote celestial body.

Another object of the same class which will naturally attract attention is the great nebula in Andromeda; this also appears to be a gaseous object, but it is plainly of a very different character from the great nebula in Orion. The nebula in Andromeda is so vast that the whole solar system, including all the planets placed at their true distances, would form an inappreciable speck if plunged in the mighty glowing mass.

The owner of a telescope will ere long discover that the heavens contain abundant materials for many an hour of delightful watching; indeed we may say that years of assiduous labor would be necessary before the diligent observer had made himself fully acquainted with even a small part of the objects which call for his admiration.

Trust in Darkness.

The test of faith is when there seems cause for doubt. It is when a friend's course is different from what we should have supposed, or from what we hoped for, that our confidence in the friend as a friend is brought to the proof. And the proof is to be looked for in our faith, not in the friend's conduct. So of our faith in the Friend of friends—it ought to stand all tests; but does it?

"'Tis easy when the sea's at rest,
And sunshine gilds the liquid plain,
To say, 'How could I be distress'd
In storms, since God, my father reigns?'

"But when the sky puts terror on,
And tempests howl, and billows rise,
Our confidence—how quickly gone,
Which seemed so strong in tranquil skies."

Yet faith is not faith when it fails in the hour of testing. A true friend trusts always.—Sunday School Times.

FAMILY PRAYERS.

How may family prayers be made attractive, especially to the children of the family, who as yet, do but little praying for themselves? To the heart and mind of every thoughtful parent this must be a vital question. For, if this professed act of worship is not made attractive, it must soon become, not only uninteresting but actually distasteful to them, and then what a mockery it will be in the sight of Him to whom it is offered!

That there are homes where it is a delightful service, gladly and reverently joined in by all, and a real means of blessing, we cannot doubt. Let us give briefly the method pursued in one such family, and see if it does not throw light upon the subject.

1st. The chapters read were not taken hap-hazard, but were selected with a view to some practical application of the truths therein contained to the spiritual needs of the family during the day, or they bare reference to the International Lesson Topic for that week.

2nd. They were distinctly and pleasantly read, with just a brief word of explanation, when necessary, or, sometimes, a question to one of the children, which served to increase attention and interest.

3rd. These readings were never long, out of consideration for the busy housemother, and the restless children.

4th. As to the prayers, these were reverent, short and yet specific.

The object of family prayers being chiefly to invoke God's blessing on this particular family, not only collectively, but separately, the father, knowing the character, disposition and weakness of each one, tenderly and lovingly besought the needed strength for each, not forgetting to thank God for the safety and health of all, or if any were sick praying for such by name. Then, in order that these children, who he was training in prayer should learn to pray for others, he briefly asked God's blessing on neighbors, friends and absent loved ones, and then he stopped.

On Sunday mornings, because they rose sufficiently early, and so had abundant time, they added a service of song, and, to each child in turn, was granted the privilege of selecting some favorite hymn. There was no reluctance on the part of those children to come to family prayers, and as they grew up and left the father's house, some of the tenderest recollections of childhood were of the earnest prayers of their father as they gathered about him at prayers.

Heard the Word Gladly.

A Zenana missionary, in describing a journey in northern districts of India, where no lady had been before the Gospel message, says: "Over and over again the women said how glad they were to have a Mem to speak to them; that the Sahib came to talk to the men; but, of course, they could not go to listen to him, and now they had a Mem all to themselves. As the news spread through the villages around, messages were sent to us begging us to go to them. Riding through one village, the women came out and called to me as I passed: "Are you not going to stop? Are we not to hear?" Here are heathen women ready to be taught, longing for more light, and there is no one to go to them. There are many villages, very many, all through this district, where no lady has ever been. "A thousand missionaries!" If only the Church were awake to her responsibility, ten thousand would be thought little to ask for.—Missionary Link.

A PRAYER FOR THE TIMES.

O God! for men to lead; not for mere selfish gain,
But swift in generous, knightly deed,
To help a brother in his need,
Or break a bondsman's chain.

O God! for men to write, more than high-sounding praise;
Brave words that borrow heaven's light,
To pierce the clouds of selfish night,
And lead to brighter days.

O God! for men to sing, not simply pleasing rhymes,
But earnest songs whose notes shall ring
In trumpet call and swiftly bring
Thy power to mould the times.

O God! for men to preach, not empty creed and form,
But Christly words whose help shall reach
Poor souls in need, and prove for each
Thy anchor in a storm.

O God! for faith to own men, words, and powers are thine;
The shuttles which thy hand doth throw
In ceaseless action to and fro
Until the finished fabric show complete thine own design.

The Boys.

Make home a pleasant place for your boys. Do not be so afraid of your best parlour that they may not use it. Let them have plenty of warmth and light, and entertaining books to read, and musical instruments and many parlour games they like. Girls will stay at home if home be the dullest place under the moon, but boys will not. If their young companions are banished, if they are checked when they laugh, or sing, or make a noise, if they have not the innocent freedom that they need under their parents' roof, then they will have freedom of some sort elsewhere. And there are always enough ready to becken them to places where the bloom is brushed from youth's round cheek. A young man will squeeze a little "fun" out of his life, and if you want him to be a credit to you and to himself, make it possible for him to enjoy himself in his home. Let the home be a place to live and breathe in, not merely a roof under which he may eat and sleep.

The Watchword for Presbyterianism.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

If a man is known by the company he keeps, then one ought to be a Presbyterian here to-night. And if you are all such, then, "I more, for my great-great-grandfather was the only Presbyterian parson who ever had George Washington at his Communion-table.

But we cannot live on our ancestors; nor can any Church live on the fame of its past achievements. Presbyterianism must keep its eyes on the front side of its head and its marching motto ought to be, New progress in old paths. Pass it along our lines as the watchword, New progress in the old paths of truth! We do not need any new polity. The distinctive work of our polity dates back to the time when Timothy received the laying-on of the hands of Presbytery. We need no new theology, our theology is as old as the Epistle to the Romans. Paul was a pretty good Calvinist; not an ultra one, but moderate—about the same type as Dr. Charles Hodge and Dr. Henry B. Smith. That is the theology needed in these times. When the authority of law is disregarded in community and commonwealth, men must be taught that Mount Sinai is not an extinct volcano. And when this poor, sin-sick world is crying out in its weary unrest, it must be pointed to Calvary's Cross as the one only hope of its redemption. Our mission is to preach this matchless theology, and with fire in the blood. While we "inquire for the old paths and walk therein," let us walk faster. Satan always goes by the "Express-flyer;" and shall Presbyterianism be content to creep along on the freight train?

Another thing we should determine to have. We should cultivate and encourage a thorough and intrepid scholarship, yet a scholarship that ever treads in the good old path of submissive reverence for the supreme authority and perfect infallibility of God's Word. When I entered Princeton Seminary fifty years ago, the genius of Joseph Addison Alexander hung like a star above those classic heights. Alexander was a magnificent scholar, equal to the best in these days, as profound as he was reverent. When new-fangled heresies were imported from Germany, he dealt with them as the little girl dealt with her doll. She pulled its head off to see what it was made of; and when, soon after, her Sunday-school teacher asked the question, "What happened after David had cut off the head of Goliath?" the child—remembering her experience with her doll—replied, "I suppose the sawdust all comed out." In these days, when so many boastful Goliaths of error are stalking about, the only scholarship that can let the "sawdust" out of them is that which finds its smooth stones in the brook which flows hard by the Oracles of God, and which wields the "sword of the Spirit."

A third line of spiritual progress we must attempt, and that also must be found in the old paths. The early Apostles had nothing to do with "masses," they had only to do with man. It was eye to eye work, man to man, soul to soul—Philip to the Eunuch, Peter to Cornelius, Paul to the Philippian jailer. It was not souls, it was a soul they struck for. Their committees were a committee of one. The awful chasm between wealth and poverty, culture and ignorance, piety and heathenism that yawns here in New York, can be bridged in only one way. Love to Christ must build the bridge; and individual Christians, yes individual Presbyterians, must quit their Sunday sofas and be off in personal effort for that depraved man, that suffering woman, that poor, ignorant child. In Christ's sight there are no "masses; He died for the individual, and each saved individual in your churches must push out to save some other one. Don't go to heaven alone!

Your pastors and elders and Christian folk here desire a revival in your churches this winter. How will you obtain that precious blessing? Inquire for the old paths. Don't look around for help, look upward. Don't send for an evangelist, send for the Holy Spirit. Let pastor and session, with locked arms and locked hearts, unite in fervent prayer and fervid work for the salvation of souls, and the blessing is yours. That was the way that Davies and Alexander, Nettleton and Finney and Kirk did it, and that is the way to which God's finger points. Progress in old paths, or else not an inch of progress made!

Presbyterianism does not need any new clothes. Least of all does it need to be tricked out in borrowed toggery from other denomination's as to forms of worship and ritualities. Its garments are good enough. What it wants now is more warmth under its old ribs, more grip in its right hand, and more of the Doctor Chalmers-like fire in its pulpits to kindle souls and to make the rafters roar. The early giants of our Church were wise with a heavenly wisdom. Look for the old paths and then push things in your churches this winter.

Finally, my dear friends, before I bid you good-night to go from these suburbs over to our city of Brooklyn, let me offer a word of hearty congratulation. Let us rejoice that amid all the warm controversies in these recent years, no one has dared to sound the treasonable tocsin of disunion. If any man attempts to haul down that old blue flag, shoot him on the spot! A church that cannot discuss questions of polity, or questions of doctrine, or any other great question without exploding into fragments, such a Church has no business to exist on the face of God's earth. I knew, during my boyhood in Western New York, the agonies and the heart-breaks of disruption. I thank God that I saw reunion and that I have lived to have that magnificent "New School" leader, Charles G. Finney, press me urgently to become his successor at Oberlin! When I told him that he had mistaken his man, and that I was a pupil of Dr. Hodge, and a hearty Presbyterian, Mr. Finney replied that he knew all that perfectly. But, said he, "Those old controversies are dead and buried; towards the new issues to be faced he and you and I are agreed." I had the pleasure of telling Dr. Hodge this a few weeks before his death, and the dear old man smiled a sweet smile of satisfaction and said, "I learn that Brother Finney has become very mellow." That's the word, brethren, mellow! In all the conflicts for God and truth, let all the lovers of truth be towards each other as mellow as the sunshine and as sweet as the love of Jesus! But, at the same time, let our backbone be as sternly stiff as adamant against every form of error and unrighteousness!

"Who sticketh to God in stable trust,
As Zion's mount he stands full just,
Which moveth no whit, nor yet doth reel,
But standeth forever as stiff as steel."

Naked Truth.

"When the late young preacher Erskine Howe was dying he said: 'I wish to live to preach the gospel more simply.' We know nothing of this minister referred to here, but we were impressed with his dying wish to live longer that he might preach with more simplicity. It is well to have good style and use correct language, but, be it remembered, the best style is that which conveys the truth with the greatest force and clearness to the hearers. The best plow for any given piece of ground is that which ploughs it best, not the one that looks the finest.

It has been said that we ought not in preaching the gospel to come down to the language of the common people but to try to bring them up to the language of the refined and cultured; and that it may be well to use words not generally understood in order to make people inquire into their meaning. There might be some force in this if refinement were the object in view in preaching the gospel. But salvation and not refinement is the object. We preach the gospel not to make men more cultured but to save the souls. And hence we want words that will best carry this soul-saving truth to their minds. We want to make men go away and inquire not about the language used but about the truth that was preached. We need a style that will draw attention to the thought and not to the style. Words are needed not to clothe thought but to carry it. The naked truth is the more effective.

The Apostle Paul used "great plainness of speech." The Lord Jesus taught the common people using the language of the common people, not of the learned. No nobler examples can we follow. There is danger of obscuring the truth, but no danger of making it too plain. No one will lament when he comes to die that he preached the gospel too simply, but it is possible that some of us may wish to live longer that we may preach it more simply than we have done.

Getting Better.

Sometimes during illness the nerves seem naked, so to speak, and every sudden sound jars, and stabs, and startles. A morsel of coal falling from the fire on to the fender has often changed what might have been a calm and refreshing night into one of restlessness and pain, and thus retarded recovery. But at other times, or in other kinds of illnesses, the brain is dulled, and noises do not seem to hurt. In these cases during convalescence the nervousness and querulousness come on, but this should always be soothingly administered to and borne by the nurse. That first forenoon's getting up after illness is a long-to-be-remembered one. The very act of standing erect makes the head swim. But it really should be from bed to chair—the chair a cosy one, and in a cosy place. As much ablution to hands, arms, face, neck, and feet as can be gone through on the chair without fatigue will greatly refresh. The first sitting up should not be protracted, and as little dressing as possible should be indulged in. But day after day the patient will get stronger, till that luxury of luxuries, the tepid bath, can be taken before breakfast. Fresh air at the window, and next in the garden, will be enjoyed now, and the world will begin to look wonderfully bright and beautiful again. The recovery is certain.

The Best Preventive.

The best preventive against spiritual assault and overthrow is to keep up constantly the tone and fibre of a truly godly character by perpetually living close with God. Multitudes live as if there were no God in the broad world. They act as if the Master were away and would never return. "Blessed is that servant whom, when the Master cometh, he finds watching." It is not only the enemy whom we are to be looking after, but our Lord Himself. I never know when He will come to impeach my poor work, or when He will come with the orders to drop the tools into the grave. But a perpetually vigilant life of communion and hard study and holy intercourse with Him will keep us ever ready for "the last call." If we watch thus for Him, He will be ever watching over us, and then no deadly danger shall ever befall us. It ought to be not only a duty but a delight to be watchful. For there are so many mercies constantly in sight, so many opportunities to do good, so many beautiful views of God's providence, and so many foretastes of heaven, that we lose more than we can afford to if we fall asleep on our homeward way. Can we "not watch with Him one hour?" It will soon be over.—T. L. Cuyler.

The Cost of Life's Best.

There must be the death of self always before a life can be Christlike. In Japan they have a beautiful legend of the making of a wonderful bell. Long, long ago, the Emperor wrote to the maker of bells, commanding him to cast a bell larger and more beautiful than ever made before. He bade them put in it gold and silver and brass, that the tones might be so sweet and clear that when hung in the palace tower its sounds might be heard for a hundred miles. The maker of bells put gold and silver and brass in his great melting pot, but the metals would not mingle and the bell was a failure. Again and again he tried, but in vain. Then the Emperor was angry and sent, saying that if the bell was not made at the next trial the bell maker must die.

The bell maker had a lovely daughter. She was greatly distressed for her father. Wrapping her mantle about her she went by night to the oracle and asked how she could save him. He told her that gold and brass would not mingle until the blood of a virgin was mixed with them in their fusion. Again the old maker of bells prepared to cast the bell. The daughter stood by, and at the moment of casting she threw herself into the midst of the molten metal. The bell was made and was found to be more wonderful and perfect than any other ever made. It hangs in the great place tower, and its sweet tones are heard for a hundred miles. The blood of sacrifice, mingling with the gold and silver, gave to the bell its matchless sweetness.

It is only a legend from heathen land, but its lesson is true. Our lives make no music until self dies and our blood mingles with our offering in the altar fires of love. It is only when we lose our life for Christ that we get it back saved and glorious.—J. R. Miller.

Why Don't You Hurry.

A missionary explained to a gathering how he came to enter the mission field. He said—"In coming home one night, driving across the vast prairie, I saw my little boy John hurrying to meet me; the grass was high on the prairie, and suddenly he dropped out of sight. I thought he was playing, and was simply hiding from me, but he didn't appear as I expected he would. Then the thought flashed across my mind—'There's an old well there, and he has fallen in.' I hurried up to him, reached down in the well and lifted him out; and as he looked up in my face, what do you think he said? 'O, papa, why didn't you hurry?' Those words never left me. They kept ringing in my ears until God put a new and deeper meaning into them and bade me think of others who are lost, of souls without God and without hope in this world; and the message came to me as a message from the heavenly Father, 'Go and work in My name;' and then from that vast throng a pitiful, despairing, pleading cry rolled into my soul, as I accepted God's call—'Oh, why don't you hurry?'"

Christ Exalted.

In the whole New Testament is not one word of warning lest we should make too much of Christ. That is significant of its doctrine. In the Acts we see Peter and John when surrounded by the astonished multitude disclaim all thought that they by their own power or holiness have made this man to walk. We see Paul and Barnabas when with impetuous haste they run in upon the devotees leading the crowned ox to sacrifice, restraining them with the declaration that they are men of like passions with their new-found friends, and that it is to turn them from such perversions of worship they have come. We see in the Apocalypse the angel at whose feet the beloved disciple has fallen down, lifting him with a gentle hand with the admonition, "See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." But nowhere do we find the slightest hint that we can make too much of Christ.

On the contrary it is at his baptism, it is within the excellent glory of the holy mount, and it is beside the broken tomb that men's hearts are divinely turned toward him with a more reverent love and a profounder worship. In the gospel Thomas cries, "My Lord and my God," unrebuked; and in the Apocalypse John prostrates himself in worship and is not repulsed. The whole teaching of the New Testament, negative and direct, is that we can not make too much of Christ.

For it is further revealed to us that Christ is highly exalted above all dominion and principality and powers. Exalted, says the apostle, because of his accomplished mission. He is exalted worthily as well as highly. Most of the men who sit on thrones are men who were born in purple. They were inheritors of kingdoms. Had it been left to them to take their natural places in the world they would have occupied far lower planes. It is but yesterday the Emperor of Germany celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entrance into the army as a lieutenant. That entrance was at the age of ten; but he had not done anything when in "round-abouts" to entitle him to his commission. Jesus Christ is raised to the throne for what he wrought. He won his place. Among all the dead of past ages no one ever accomplished as much for human history, and as the only begotten Son of God he wrought a redemption that none other could accomplish.

It is the touch of the sovereign that transforms the squire or yeoman to knight or peer. It is God's hand that has conveyed to Jesus the title to celestial pre-eminence. Let every soul fear lest he make too little of the Messiah, he cannot make too much. God hath given him a name which is above every name, at which in the fullness of time every knee shall bow.—Interior.

THE KIND OF GIVING TO FOREIGN MISSIONS THAT IS NEEDED NOW.

Our old-time friend, Dr. Wm. I. Morton, of Racine, Wisconsin, sent us $100 in December to help pay the travelling expenses of Dr. and Mrs. Drew to Korea. On March 22d we received his check for $1,000 for the return expenses of Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard to Africa.

May the Lord bless this good and faithful servant, who, though laboring under the infirmity of seventy-seven years, still abounds in that charity which is not in word only, but in deed and in truth.

About a thousand or more members of our Church, we are assured, are depriving themselves of much genuine happiness by not following his example.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY WORKER FALLEN AT HER POST.

A cablegram received on April 3rd contains these words, which will bring sorrow to the hearts of many in our church: "Wife dead. Adamson, Congo." No particulars are given.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Newbern:—Rev. C. G. Vardell, of Newbern writes that sevens persons were received on profession of faith.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Statesville:—The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed by our church April 1st, '94. Our pastor was assisted by Rev. W. R. McLelland Friday night and Saturday. Since last communion Oct. 16th, '93, we have received on certificate six and on examination thirteen. Notwithstanding the "hard times" our congregation has contributed, since April 1st, 1893, to Foreign Missions $426.73, and other benevolent objects, $570.36. Congregational and pastor's salary not included—there is yet due on our church building about $1,000—which we hope to pay in the near future.

Items from Rev. R. P. Pell:

At Elk Park:—Recently three elders and two deacons were ordained and installed; two accessions to the church membership; four infants baptized, and the second installment on our church building paid, lacking a few dollars. A good Sunday-school was also begun.

At Cove Creek:—Our Church Academy building is completed, a commodious structure 30x50 feet, well arranged and to be used for both religious and educational purposes. A good school is in progress. Recently there were two accessions to the church membership and one infant was baptized. A very promising mission point four miles distant has recently been opened to us.

At Spruce Pine:—Our school closed a few days ago, having had 125 pupils enrolled and having made a still deeper impression upon the community and surrounding country. Misses Clark and Irvine have labored nobly, and gave a most delightful entertainment at the close of the school, which was largely attended by people who came long distances. We have a scholarship in the Normal and Industrial College at Asheville, and one of our pupils is there now taking advantage of it.

Installation at Union and Olney in Mecklenburg: February April 30th, was a "big" day at Union. The pastor, Rev. G. A. Sparrow was installed, the ceremony taking place at Union for both churches, viz: Union and Olney. Rev. F. D. Hunt, of Charlotte, preached and charged the pastor, while Elder Hanna, of the First church, Charlotte, charged the people. The day was pleasant, the crowd good and the occasion an enjoyable one. Quite a number down from Gastonia. To make the services more impressive and interesting, the pastor's youngest child was baptized.

Asheville:—Rev. J. S. Morrow writes: God has blessed the work of Bethany church throughout this Presbyterial year. No serious sickness has been sent upon any of the members. None have died, but all of our spirits have been revived. We have a communing membership of eighteen. Baptized children twelve. A large Sabbath-school numbering one hundred and thirty-seven. We have great reason to be thankful and praise God for His goodness to us. To-night I received a handsome suit of clothes through Mrs. Eliza Mozour, a worthy member of Bethany church, for which I give to her many thanks and to her many warm friends of the First Presbyterian church, Asheville, who contributed to her. May the Lord make me worthy of their great beneficence.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE HOME MISSION COMMITTEE OF WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY, FOR THE YEAR ENDING MARCH 31st, 1894.

To the Presbytery of Wilmington:

Your committee is pleased to be able to report that the work has been sustained throughout this trying year without debt, that all our vacancies are now supplied, and that some forward work has been undertaken. Our principal duty is to report on the work under our control, viz:

I. PRESBYTERIAL WORK.

1. Financial. The committee's receipts for the year have been:

From Treasurer of Presbytery	$ 518 89
" Special subscription to replace loss in Bank	145 00
" Synodical Committee	400 00
" Assembly's Committee (Invalid Fund)	56 25
Total	$ 1120 14

The disbursements have been:

Rev. D.B. Black (due on last year)	25 00
Rev. F. W. Farries salary	519 85
Rev. J. D. Stanford "	100 00
Rev. J. S. Wood, "	287 75
Rev. S. H. Isler, "	90 00
Printing	75
Interest	1 33
Paid on Invalid Fund	56 25
Balance in Bank	39 21
Total	$ 1120 11

The Book and vouchers are submitted with this report for auditing by Presbytery.

Including the special contributions made in October, 27 churches have contributed the following sums: Wilmington First, $277.25, St. Andrew's, $39.78, Clinton $10, Faisons $18, Burgaw $21.42, Beth Car $6.44, Grove $10, Mt. Olive $8.50, South River $3 74, Black River $5, Caswell $1, Duplin Road, $18.75, Hopewell $6.45; Whiteville $6.45, Bladenboro $2.25, Chinquepin .87, Cobbs Mills $2.50, Croatan $2.50, Elizabethtown $1.89, Harmony $2, Keith .76, Wildwood $7.50, Mt. Zion $5.24, Oak Plain .58, Pike $7.23, Warsaw $8, Whiteplains $1.42, Mt. Horeb $1, Rockfish $1.17. The remaining 12 churches have not reported during this year. Total, $576.69.

Of the above list only $250.70 has come in on the collections of this year, and only from 15 churches have the reports of the February collection been received, viz: Wilmington First, St. Andrew's, Burgaw, Pike, Beth Car, South River, Black River, Mt. Zion, Wildwood, Keith, Croatan, Cobbs Mills, Mt. Horeb, Rockfish, Whiteville. Of these only Burgaw reached its apportionment. The total apportionment upon these churches is $510. The falling off from the apportionment is, therefore, more than 50 per cent. and if this maintains throughout the Presbytery, on our apportionment of $750 we will not realize more than $350 instead of about $600 as usual. With a present balance of $41.34, including $2.17 not drawn from the treasurer. and with only $100 to expect on this calculation our work must close in a few months unless something decisive is done. The supplementary collection in August is our only hope, and we are encouraged to believe that at that time some of our strongest churches, as those in Wilmington, intend to come fully up to their apportionment.

2. Evangelistic. When we turn from the financial outlook everything else is full of encouragement. While we have lost the able services of Bro. Farries in our East Carolina field, the vacancy was promptly filled by Bro. Isler who was already supplying Cobb Mills. We have dropped the evangelistic point of Maysville and are confining ourselves to the three organized churches of Pollocksville, Wildwood and Croatan, which with Cobb Mills, and the mission point of Newport, fills his whole time. Licentiate J. S. Wood has labored assiduously in his field of Onslow and east Pender, and with some decided signs of encouragement. He preaches at Mt. Williams, White Oak' Richlands, Jacksonville and Topsail—all organized churches, and at Catherine Lake, Blake's Landing, Gum Branch and Verona, a most hopeful mission point where steps are being taken towards a building. Rev. J. D. Stanford, besides serving South River and Harmony as stated supply, gives the rest of his time to the Committee as evangelist in Duplin and some points in the surrounding counties. As such he has supplied the churches of Whitehall, Chinquepin, Beulah, Hebron and Stanford, and as mission points, two Lanier Schoolhouses, Kornegay's Bridge, Blalock's School-house and Smith's Chapel, and has recently begun preaching at another point in Duplin and one in Lenoir. At Smith's Chapel a building is completed except the windows. There are Sabbath-schools at all these churches except one. Rev. T. H. Newkirk has labored in Columbus county and part of Bladen, supplying the churches of Whiteville, Whiteplains and Elizabethtown and as mission points Lake Waccamaw and Hub.

Rev. W. McC. Miller labored for six months at Immanuel Chapel with increasing encouragement, but the First church, which supported him found it necessary to discontinue his services on account of financial pressure. Licentiate L. W. Curtis, of the Presbytery of Memphis, labored in Brunswick county for nearly four months with considerable encouragement. His services have been secured for another season. The expense of this work is borne by two gentlemen, one in the First church and one in St. Andrew's, at a cost of about $250.

Other ministers doing evangelistic work are Rev. A. McFadyen at Creach's and Troy's schoolhouses, Rev. G. W. McMillan at Player's Chapel, Rev. J. D. Stanford in connection with his South River and Harmony work at White's School-house, Rev. K. McDonald at Roseborough and Rev. P. H. Hoge (for the last six months) at Immanuel chapel. The chapel work has been maintained throughout the year in all its departments and at a total cost—including salary of evangelist for six months—of $1090.03: A student has been secured to assist in this work during the summer.

3. Vacant churches. At the Fall meeting the field left vacant by the death of Rev. D. B. Black was supplied by Rev. G. W. McMillan. This arrangement has continued to the present time. White Oak has been annexed to the field of Rev. J. S. Wood, and the Clinton group has been supplied by Rev. Joseph Evans, of Fayetteville Presbytery who is a most welcome accession to our ranks. All our churches are now supplied either by pastors, evangelists or stated supplies and have the regular ministrations of the Word at least once a month.

4. Church Erection. The committee has made no appropriation during this year for Church Erection, having done much in that direction during the preceding year when our fields were vacant. Some assistance has been promised to the Wildwood and Pollocksville churches for which the committee relies on funds outside of the usual Presbyterial receipts. An application for assistance to a small amount has been received for Smith's Chapel.

5. Grouping the churches. Our churches are now more satisfactorily grouped than ever before. The only complaint received is with regard to the arrangement of Rev. T. H. Newkirk's field, he having to pass through almost the whole of Bro. McFadyen's territory to reach his appointment at Elizabethtown. An application from the session of the Whiteville church has been received to group Whiteville, Whiteplains, Cronly and Mt. Horeb together, but as that intrenches upon a regular pastorate nothing can be done either by the committee or Presbytery without the consent of parties.

II. SYNODICAL WORK.

The contributions for this work have been less this year than before, but the principal source of the shortage is the change in the collection month of the First church Wilmington which was the largest contributor. Owing to this change from February to June no collection has fallen within the ecclesiastical year. The reports of the Treasurer show that 21 churches have contributed $133.95. Rev. E. W. Smith, the Synodical Superintendent, has been compelled to retire from the work on account of his health, and Rev. Wm. Black has been elected in his place. It will be the aim of Bro. Black to present the work as widely as possible for the purpose of securing annual subscriptions. He will be in Wilmington Presbytery during this month and part of the month following and it is hoped that he will meet with a liberal response from our people.

Work in our bounds. Your committee received $400 from the Synodical Committee this year enabling it to place Bro. Farries in our East Carolina field. The remaining $200 of the amount promised this Presbytery has not been paid owing to the difficulties that have surrounded the Synodical Committee. Out of that amount your committee owes Bro. Farries $63.58 on account of salary; $50 promised to the Wildwood church and $50 promised to the Pollocksville church. When the Synod resumes payment the committee desires to place a permanent evangelist in Brunswick county.

III. ASSEMBLY'S WORK.

By the action of the last Assembly the whole work of its Executive Committee has been placed upon the basis on which Wilmington Presbytery has been working for six years, viz: That Synods and Presbyteries should as far as possible do their own local work, and that the work of the Assembly should be confined to advancing the cause of our Church upon the frontiers. The Assembly's Committee reports that the receipts from the January collection are sufficient to maintain the Assembly's present work in the frontiers for six month with the promise of a decided advance when all the Presbyteries and Synods fall into line, and when the stringency of the times is relieved. As a harbinger of what we are to expect, a Texas Presbytery reports the organization of a church in New Mexico—the first step that our Church has taken outside of the old States. The contributions of this Presbytery show a decided increase: 20 churches having contributed $380.78, which was $80.78 more than the Presbyterial apportionment, and 63 per cent of what the Synod asked us to raise.

The Invalid Fund is also managed by the Assembly's Committee of Home Missions. In this Presbytery 21 churches have contributed $184.52. Your committee has received from the Assembly's Committee $6.25 due on last year to Mrs. Monroe, and $50, the first instalment on this year.

The above amount was used in supporting evangelists in four country fields and one city mission, by which the Word of God was preached in 10 counties, in 14 churches and 17 mission points—all or nearly all of which would have been deprived of the ministry of the Word but for this work. And inasmuch as this work is seriously threatened by one only source of danger—lack of the necessary funds to carry it on—your committee presents to Presbytery for its earnest and prayerful consideration the following

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. That all our churches are urged to make diligent and faithful efforts to make up the full amount apportioned them during or before the month of August.

2. That Rev. J. D. Stanford be re-elected evangelist of Duplin county, including the churches of Hebron, Chinquepin, Beulah, Stanford and Whitehall.

3. That Rev. S. H. Isler be elected evangelist of the East Carolina field, including the churches of Cobb Mills, Pollocksville, Wildwood and Croatan.

4. That Rev. T. H. Newkirk be re-elected evangelist of Columbus county, including the churches Whiteville and Whiteplains, and that Mt. Horeb be added to this group if the way be clear.

5. That Licentiate J. S. Wood be appointed to act as evangelist of the Onslow and East Pender field, including the churches of Richlands, Jacksonville, Topsail, Mt. Williams and White Oak.

6. That the grouping of Burgaw, Hopewell, Keith and Pike be made permanent, and that the request of these churches for the services of Rev. G. W. McMillan as stated supply be granted.

7. That Rev. L. W. Curtis, of the Presbytery of Memphis, be authorized to labor in Brunswick county until the Fall meeting.

8. With regard to the paper of Rev. J. J. Hines that was placed in our hands. While the committee does not assume any responsibility or liability for the work proposed, it recommends that he be allowed to preach at the points named, viz: Stella, Trenton and Hancocke's Creek on such terms as he may make with the people.

9. That the churches be urged to raise the Synodical apportionment in June, and that the committee be instructed to endeavor to raise in September any shortage either on Synodical or Assembly's Home Missions.

PEYTON H. HOGE,
Chairman.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Ad Interim Committee on Young People's Societies have unanimously agreed to submit the following recommendations for the action of the next Assembly.:

The attention of church sessions is directed to this subject and they are advised earnestly to consider the best methods of developing and directing the Christian activity of the young people under their care.

In many churches young people's societies or bands have proven helpful. Such associations when properly organized and conducted, meet the approval of the Assembly, and sessions are advised to consider the desirability of forming them in their churches.

In view of the varying conditions in our different churches, the Assembly does not deem it wise at present to prescribe any particular form of organization or method of work, but enjoins upon the sessions that in forming and conducting such organizations the following principles should be carefully observed, viz:

A. Such societies should in all cases be organized under the supervision and direction of their respective sessions. They should be kept under the exclusive control of the sessions and required to submit to them annual reports of their work.

B. While the Assembly does not forbid affiliation for certain purposes between societies in our churches and those of other evangelical bodies, yet it enjoins upon sessions to maintain careful oversight of the nature and influence of such association, and in the exercise of their discretion to guard their young people against influences and teachings which are inconsistent with the principles of our own church.

The Assembly would utter a special warning against the danger to which young and inexperienced persons are exposed from attendance upon large and promiscuous conventions which are not under ecclesiastical control.

C. In societies which are constituted of both sexes, sessions should take care that the women and girls do not transgress the limitations of Scripture by conducting meetings or by engaging in public prayer and exhortation.

D. Should the number of societies in any Presbytery make it desirable that they should come into relation with each other for the purpose of conference or co-operation, such association should always be within presbyterial lines and under presbyterial supervision.

E. Sessions are advised to cultivate close and sympathetic relations with the societies under their care, to attend their meetings frequently and to encourage other adult members of the church to such attendance, to guard against a hurtful separation between the old and young in religious worship and work, and to forestall any tendency on the part of the young people to give preference to their own meetings over the stated services of the church.

TRIBUTE TO MR. J. D. K. SLEIGHT.

The Executive Committee of Publication at Richmond adopted the following:

The committee with much regret and sorrow have to record the death of Mr. J. D. K. Sleight, who has been for so many years their business agent. He was first engaged by them in 1868, and with the exception of the period from 1877 to 1883, during part of which time he was engaged in business in Richmond on his own account, and partly in connection with the Board of Publication in Philadelphia, he occupied this important office.

The nature of Mr. Sleight's duties, consisting so largely of correspondence, brought him in touch with all parts of our Church, and his name had thus become familiar to our ministers and membership throughout our bounds, and from the wide spread confidence he enjoyed among them, the committee recognize that in his death they have sustained no ordinary loss. He had, besides a high tone of Christian character, a natural urbanity of manner and courtesy of disposition, all of which he brought to bear in the discharge of the duties required of him, and which made him a most valuable servant; and the committee desire to record their sense of the high integrity and efficiency with which he discharged the duties confided to his trust.

CHILDREN'S DAY EXERCISES FOR 1894.

Our Children's Day Exercises for this year were prepared for us by the deft hands of ladies of Augusta, Ga., and will be beautiful both inside and out.

The drawings for the engravings on the covers were made by the loving hand of one who found in that work for the Master, consolation in her bereavement and sorrow.

We hope that every Sunday-school within our bounds will avail itself of this means of helping our cause, and awakening a missionary interest among the children. The Exercises will probably be ready by the time this notice appears in print. Send orders at once to "Secretary of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church, P. O. Drawer 457, Nashville, Tenn.," and state number of copies wanted. They are furnished free of charge. By sending promptly you can receive them in time to prepare thoroughly for Children's Day which is the last Sabbath of May.

Acting Secretary.

Second Quarter.—Lesson IV.

April 22d—Joseph Ruler in Egypt.

Gen. xli. 38–48. Commit vss. 38–40.

Golden Text. "Them that honor me, I will honor." 1 Sam. ii. 30.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. The lesson is of little value except when studied as the sequel to a long train of events.

More than ten years have passed since Joseph disappears as a slave into the house of the captain of Pharaoh's guard. Probably the greater part of that time was spent in Potiphar's house, where by his personal grace winning favor, and his diligence, capacity and incorruptible integrity winning confidence, he had risen to be the steward or chamberlain of this great noble, and thereby gained a knowledge of Egyptian customs and an experience of affairs that fitted him for higher place in the future. Read carefully xxxix. 1–6.

But he has risen as high as he can rise in Potiphar's house and a way must be found out of it. It was a strange way, as God's ways usually are. Read the story of Joseph's temptation, his matchless answer (vs. 9), his false accusation, disgrace and imprisonment. (vss. 7-20). A corrupt mind might have argued that an intrigue with this powerful woman might have brought him the final possession of Potiphar's wealth and station. His unsullied purity and his incorruptible sense of honor, hold him down to the path that God had marked out for him. Had Joseph failed here, God would have had no further use for him.

In the prison Joseph has a new training ground. The same qualities that had won Potiphar's confidence win the confidence of the keeper of the prison, and Joseph on his parole of honor is master in the prison. The prisoners of state are kept here and through them he doubtless learns much of the court and of Egyptian administration. Cheerful when others are sad—with the light of a better world in his heart—he is led into circumstances where a new test must be endured. When the dreams of Pharaoh's officers were told him had he lost faith in his own dreams and in the voice of God speaking through them, he would have said: "There is nothing in dreams; I dreamed of a throne and am in a prison; attach no importance to them." But he kept his faith, interpreted their dreams, and their fulfillment in turn gave him new faith in his own, encouraging him through the two years of longer waiting to "hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." Read xxxix. 21—xl. 23.

And now Pharaoh had a dream, and the chief butler reminded of the fulfilment of his own dream, is conscience-stricken at his ingratitude and tells Pharaoh of Joseph. Joseph now thirty years old, tried and proven and disciplined, in the prime of young manhood, with an experience of affairs beyond his years, and with a proved capacity for administration, stands before Pharaoh and interprets his dream. A crisis is before the Egyptian kingdom, and a man for the crisis is wanted, and Pharoah, passing by his own nobles, sees the finger of God pointing to the man who had understanding to read the signs of the times. It is just here that the lesson begins.

Second Step. In studying the lesson itself observe (1) The ground of Pharaoh's choice (vss. 38, 39); (2) Joseph's position and authority (vss. 40, 41, 44); (3) his outward honors (vss. 42, 43, 45); his work and policy (46–48).

Third Step. Take up any points of difficulty and consult your helps, for example:

Vs. 38. God. The translation is correct although the Hebrew word for God is of such a form to admit of the meaning "gods." But the use of the singular verb in the next verse shows that the singular is right. There was a basis of monotheism under the polytheism of the Egyptians.

Vs. 40. Only in the throne. The office given him was that of Grand Vizier, or Prime Minister.

Vs. 42. His ring. Documents were not signed in ancient times but sealed. The "cartouche" of this very Pharaoh is found on a monument at Zoan. The possession of the ring, on the stone of which was engraved the royal "cartouche," or combination of signs for the royal name, gave Joseph absolute power.

Fine linen. A fabric of wondrous fineness and dazzling whiteness woven from the "byssus." It is found in some tombs.

A gold chain. Another badge of honor as shown by the monuments.

Vs. 43. Bow the knee. The original is Abrech an Egyptain word whose meaning is not certainly known. Our translation conveys the practical idea, if not the literal rendering.

Vs. 45. Zaphnath-paaneah .Another Egyptian word in Hebrew spelling. It does not mean "Revealer of secrets" as the margin of the Auth. Version gives it. Some think it only means, "Keeper of the granaries," or Lord of such a province, but eminent scholars hold that it means "Saviour of the World."

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the story including Joseph's previous life in Egypt.

SUMMARY. Joseph having been brought down into Egypt is sold into the house Potiphar, the Egyptian prefect of police. His capacity, fidelity, and winning grace bring him to the position of overseer of the nobleman's establishment. But a great temptation successfully resisted is made the occasion of false accusation, and he is cast into prison. Here the same qualities bring him the same confidence, until he is placed in charge of two high officers who have been cast into prison. Interpreting for them their dreams, he is at last remembered by one of them them when Pharoah dreamed, and is brought out of prison and interprets Pharoah's dream. Pharoah recognizes his his interpretation as the voice of God and commits to him the honor, and the authority of carrying out his own recommendations, for saving Egypt from the consequences of the impending famine.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of other parts of God's Word.

1. The right path always the path of right.
   Review Joseph's life and see how if at any point he had failed in duty, or compromised with evil, all his hopes and dreams must have failed. Matt. vi. 33.
2. Joseph and Christ, continued from last lesson.
   k. Learning obedience Gen. xxxix 4; Heb. v. 8.
   l. False accusations. Gen. xxxix. 17; Matt. xxvi. 59.
   m. Witness of the Gentiles. Gen xxxix. 4, 21; xli. 38; John xix. 4; Mark xv. 39.
   n. Unjust condemnation. Gen. xxxix. 20; Matt. xxvi. 66.
   o. Two malefactors. Gen. xl. 2, 3; Luke xxiii. 32.
   p One taken, the other left. Gen. xl. 21, 22; xxiii. 39–43.
   q. Taken from prison (Is. liii. 8). Gen. xli. 14; Acts ii. 24.
   r. Exalted to the right of majesty. Gen. xli. 40; Acts ii. 33.
   s. Royal robes. Gen. xli. 42; Rev. i. 13.
   t. Bowed knees. Gen. xli. 43; Phil. ii. 10.
   u. All power. Gen. xli. 41; Matt. xxviii. 18.
   v. The name Saviour. Gen. xli. 45(see note); Matt. i. 21.

Sixth Step. Prayerfully appropriate the supreme teaching of Joseph's life, that only by following the light that is in us—the light of truth and duty, the voice of conscience, the voice of God, can the purposes of God be fulfilled in us. We must be willing to go through the training of God's school, if we would be used for God's glory. We must be servants before we can be masters. We must master self if we would rule and lead others.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Don't attempt to teach the lesson by itself. It is absolutely meaningless without the mastery of chapters xxxix., xl. and the early part of xli. Drill your class thoroughly in these facts, and impress the moral lesson, then take up Bible Reading No. 2, in the same way as in the last lesson.

Prize Questions.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., April 4, 1894.

The National Union for Practical Progress is a new organization which promises to become a very useful one. The sole requirement for membership is a desire for the betterment of society, and the spread of moral reform. Although new this organization already has branches in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, with prospects of soon having one in every city in the United States. A meeting of the Washington Civic Center of the organization was held here this week, and, in reponse to a circular invitation to join in a consolidation of progressive citizens for the purpose of raising the morals of the nation, was attended by many of the clergymen and heads of charitable and reform organizations. It was stated at the meeting that circulars containing statistics of the leading evils of the country had been prepared and sent to every minister in Washington with the request that they be used in connection with special sermons on practical reform, which the ministers have been requested to deliver monthly. The organization originated from two magazine articles which appeared less than a year ago. The following are its National Executive Committee: Philip S. Moxon, D. D., President; B. O. Fower, editor of the "Arena," Treasurer; Rev. Harry C. Vrooman, Secretary; W. D. McCracken and Diana Hiracheler, The officers of the Washington branch are Rev. Alexander Kent, Chairman; A. S. Diggs, Secretary, and P. A. Auer, Treasurer, any of whom will take pleasure in answering inquiries concerning the organization.

The news from South Carolina this week has been more than interesting to the temperance people, a few of whom have endorsed the Tillman liquor law of that State, and all of whom have been carefully watching the effect of that law upon the liquor traffic. Next to absolute prohibition of the terrible traffic, in the opinion of many able advocates of temperance, comes some system that will give the authorities better control of the evil than they have under the present licence system. The bloodshed and excitement in South Carolina, reported by recent press dispatches, has raised serious doubts in the minds of those who had almost become advocates of the State dispensary system provided for by the South Carolina law, and now they are disposed to wait further developments before taking a pronounced stand either for or against that law. The no compromise prohibitionists regard the events in South Carolina during the past week as a strong argument in favor of prohibition, which they claim to be the only certain remedy for the intemperance which is the curse of our country. They believe that neither States nor individual should be allowed to engage in such a harmful traffic.

It is claimed by those who are endeavoring to secure support for the bill drafted and endorsed by the American Medical Association at a meeting in this city nearly three years ago, providing for the establishment of a Department of Public Health, which was this week introduced in the Senate by Mr. Gray, of Delaware, that it would, if it became a law, enable the temperance people to get what they have been in vain asking from Congress for a number of years—an official investigation of the alcoholic liquor traffic of the country. The bill creates a new member of the Cabinet, with an assistant Secretary and a clerical force sufficient to procure medical, vital and social statistice; information relative to climatic conditions beneficial to health; intemperance and prostitution, and the condition of the laboring classes. The bill is accompanied by many letters from prominent pyhsicians in all sections of the country, asking that it be passed, and I have been informed that the temperance organizations will be asked to endorse it, but have not been able to learn that any actual move has been made in that direction by the physicians who are asking that the bill be passed.

Several hundred of the members of the big choir which led the singing at the recent Moody and Sankey meetings in Washington went to Richmond, Va., for the purpose of singing at the Moody meeting in that city last Sunday. They brought back pleasant stories of their reception as well as of the success of the Richmond meetings.

In addition to beginning the debate on the tariff bill the Senate this week passed a bill providing needed authority for carrying out the provisions of the Bering Sea arbitration. The House, after spending more than a week in a practical dead-lock, succeeded in getting a voting quorum and in disposing of the Missouri contested election case that started the trouble. Senator Allen, of Nebraska, has offered an amendment to the tariff bill providing for the free coinage of silver but it is too early to say whether it will be seriously supported by any considerable number of Senators. DR. WILLIAM McILWAINE.

In Union county, N. C., February 18th, 1894, this servant of God passed to his reward. He was in his accustomed health, and on Sabbath afternoon went as usual, to the church to conduct the Sabbath school of which he had been superintendent ever since the organization of Banks church. After opening the school with prayer and taking his seat, the choir had sung but a few lines when it was observed that he was falling. In a moment, he expired, without a word, and without a struggle, as peacefully as if he were falling quietly to sleep. It was fitting that so zealous a soldier should die in the midst of active service.

Dr. McIlwaine was born June 18th, 1818, being in his 76th year, at the time of his death. His father, Charles McIlwaine, was for years an elder in Tirzah A. R. P. church in York county, S. C. He studied medicine with his uncle, Dr. Wm. Ardrey, of Mecklenburg county, and began his practice in Union county, near where he died, and where the most of his life work was done. He was married in 1845, to Mrs. Levicy Miller, nee Potts, who survives him, together with six of their seven children. Of four sons, two are ministers of the gospel, viz: Rev. Wm. E. McIlwaine, Superintendent of the Evangelistic work of the Synod of Alabama, and Robt. J. McIlwaine, who is at Union Theological Seminary. About 1855 Dr. McIlwaine moved into the Waxhaw neighborhood, largely influenced by the desire to be near an A. R. P. church, of which he was always an admirer. It was here that he made a public profession of faith in the 38th year of his age, and connected himself with old Tirzah church, which was then an A. R. P. church, under the ministry of the late Rev. D. P. Robinson. In 1867, he moved back to his former home, and spent there the remainder of his life.

After some time he with his family joined Providence church in Mecklenburg county. There he continued his membership until Banks church was organized in 1890–'91. To this young church he gave his best energies, and unwavering devotion. Indeed it was largely owing to his means and influence seconded by faithful co-workers that this church was established on so firm a basis.

To no one would fulsome eulogy be more odious, than to this plain, sincere, unostentatious man; but it is fitting and allowable that a pastor who was associated with him in the closest bonds of confidence and sympathy should give some testimonial to his true character and genuine worth. In social intercourse Dr. McIlwaine was usually considered rather blunt or abrupt, yet he was known as far as his acquaintance reached for his tender sympathy, and kindly ministry to the poor. He was quite literary in his turn of mind, and induced his children to keep up to a great degree with current events. He was a fine theologian. He was, too, one of the few men who could say with the Psalmist "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up;" and this zeal and aggressive spirit increased with increasing years. He longed for the poorer classes of people to have the benefit of an educated ministry, and of literary culture as well; and always wanted to establish religious schools for their benefit The most remarkable feature of his religious life was his freedom from sentimental attachment to places. He valued his church-membership, chiefly for the good he could do with it. He willingly cut loose from two of the oldest historic churches of the country in order that he might build up Presbyterianism in new territory.

Even in his death and burial has he linked his memory with this work. He died in the church building, while working for the cause he loved, and at his own request, was buried on the church grounds. He was the oldest member of the church, the first to be called from its membership to the Church above, ann the first to be buried on the grounds of the church. May his life and death be as fruitful seed!

The funeral service was conducted from the church, and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives, even the colored people from every quarter came to pay this last tribute of honor and respect to their departed friend and benefactor. The pastor chose as a text appropriate to the occasion Gen. 25: 8, and spoke of the beauties of the death of an aged saint.

Servant of God well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

PASTOR.

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE TALE OF TWO BUCKETS.

Two buckets in an ancient well got talking once together,
And after sundry wise remarks—no doubt about the weather—
"Look here," quoth one, "this life we lead I don't exactly like;
Upon my word, I'm half inclined to venture on a strike;
For—do you mind?—however full we both come up the well,
We go down empty—always shall, for aught that I can tell."

"That's true," the other said; "but, then—the way it looks to me—
However empty we go down, we come up full, you see."
Wise little bucket! If we each could look at life that way,
Would dwarf its ills, and magnify its blessings, day by day,
The world would be a happier place since we should all decide
Only the buckets full to count, and let the empty slide.

A PRETTY SIDEBOARD.

In many an attic or storeroom there is stored away in a dark recess an old-fashioned bureau. The dull mahogany front with its brass or wooden knob has little attraction for anything but the woodpile. So, possibly, may think some persons who have not a mechanical turn.

A sideboard is a very desirable piece of furniture, but even a poor one is not inexpensive, and a really good one is costly. The bureau we have in mind has the material for making a perfectly acceptable sideboard, at an insignificant expense. The bureau has four wide drawers, and upon the top two other small drawers. It is surmounted with a backboard with some design of scroll-work.

The first thing to be done is to remove the fronts of the three lower drawers carefully. When this has been done replace the remaining parts of the drawers into their respective places, for they are to be used as shelves for dishes. The top drawer in the main part of the bureau is left for the use of table linen.

The bureau now stands with the fronts of the drawers removed. A brass rod with silk curtains may be placed across the front, but doors seem more appropriate to the solidity that belongs to a sideboard. If you choose doors you must now make another search in the store-room, where perhaps you will find the head or footboard of an old-time rope bedstead. If you are successful you will probably find that the footboard has two panels, which can be sawed into and evened off at the ends and will make very neat doors, and will save the expense of having them made.

If they are not quite wide enough to fill the open space in front of the drawers, a piece of wood about two inches wide placed between the doors and nailed on to the shelves will hold the catches of the door.

The sideboard may be made lower by sawing off the legs if too high. Claw feet add to the beauty of it.

The part on top of the bureau that contains the two small drawers is carefully removed without breaking it apart, and a smooth board of white wood is neatly fitted into the opening, leaving a smooth surface for the top of the sideboard. The two small drawers and scroll-work, together with the mahogany drawer fronts, are now screwed upon two bed slats in this way, leaving a space between the drawer fronts sufficient to admit half inch shelving to be used for fancy dishes, etc.

To support the top, pieces of drapery curtain poles are screwed upon it, the poles being of sufficient length to rest on the sideboard when set up to act as support.

Half-inch shelving of white wood is set in the open spaces left between the drawer fronts, the front corners of the shelves being fitted into slots cut in the two curtain poles. The first shelf below the drawers is made to fit between the poles. In the next space below place two shelves with the opposite corners rounded off.

Molding of any kind or drapery poles can be used to finish off the rough edges left on the sides of the drawer fronts. A neat railing can be placed on top of the two small drawers.

The whole may be ornamented according to the taste of the maker. Pressed wood ornaments can be found at hardware or lumber dealers. Brass drawer rings of any design may be added in place of knobs.

The little white wood used in making the sideboard is to be stained with mahogany stain. Fine varnish used upon the mahogany brings out the fine grain, and the whole makes a piece of furniture worthy to grace any dining-room.—Eugene A. Vaughan, in Youth's Companion.

"GATORED" A MULE.

Animals Driven Partially Insane by Ugly Saurians.

The Washington News says that a "'gatored mule" is, according to Florida dialect, a mule that has been driven partially insane by an alligator. There are hundreds of such demented mules in Florida, and it is a fact that they are never the same after a genuine fright of this sort.

I helped to 'gator one myself, writes a traveler. I had been staying at Ocala, and finally agreed with several friends to go hunting in the south. Some distance from town we located upon a small stream abounding in game. After pitching camp I went for a walk, and before long I found a 'gator hole. From the strong musty odor issuing from it, I knew the owner must be at home.

I decided to capture him, and called my companions. Several times we rammed a long pole into the burrow. Finally we heard a snap like the report of a gun, and the pole remained fast. The 'gator had seized it. We tried vainly to pull him out. Then some one suggested that we try our camp mule. The mule was led down to the hole, a chain fastened to him and the pole, and the frightened animal was started.

There was a creaking of chains, a roar, and an alligator fully seven feet in length came out with a rush, as the mule started on a wild run for the road.

The saurian's teeth were sunken so deeply in the pole that he could not release himself, and away went mule, pole and all. The alligator spun round, hissing like a steam engine; but he held on, while the mule, thinking himself pursued, snorted and ran. We followed. Into the main street of Ocala flew the mule and his queer load. Completely exhausted, he was stopped by a party of men near the post office.

The 'gator was dead. We skinned and stuffed him. The mule recovered, but the sight of a swamp now throws him into a perfect frenzy of terror.

MADE HIS OWN WHEEL.

A Maryland Mountain Boy Who Was Not Balked for Want of Money.

"They come high, but we must have 'em," is what John Mayne, a Laingamore mountaineer, thought when he saw hundreds of wheelmen riding over the smooth roads of Frederick county, Md., several months ago. John is only sixteen years old, but he thought he would be able to ride a bike. All that was necessary was to get the "bike," and that he made up his mind to do.

He soon learned that a wheel would cost him anywhere from $100 to $150, and that was a little more than he felt able to pay. His funds were a little low.

JOHN MAYNE AND HIS WHEEL.

but he had made up his mind to have one, so he concluded that he would start to manufacture one. In his part of the country the roads are as smooth as concrete pavements, and John had often pictured himself passing along on his silent steed, leaving the fast horses in the rear. His cash did not increase in proportion to his desire for a wheel, and so out there on the farm in the mountainous country he went into his father's shop and started to construct a racer. He worked early and late, until he had finished the construction of the wheel, and now he is seen on the road trying to keep pace with some of the riders of pneumatic-tired iron horses. The entire wheel, with the exception of an old iron tire from a carriage wheel, was made by the boy. The rear wheel was made of a solid piece of oak, while the handle bar and seat are made of a lighter wood.

Many Persons are broken down from overwork or household cares. Brown's Iron Bitters Rebuilds the system, aids digestion, removes excess of bile, and cures malaria. Get the genuine.

Things Useful.

Flame Pudding.—Beat two ounces of butter to a cream and add two of sugar and two of flour, the yolks of five eggs beaten, and the whites whipped stiff; flavor with grated lemon peel and thicken to a batter with crumbs of stale sponge cake. Boil in a mold for one hour and serve with any nice pudding sauce, making a delicious dish.

Broiled Sardines.—Drain the sardines carefully, put them in a fine wire broiler, and broil over a clear coal fire as any fish is broiled. Do not turn as a steak, but brown on one side; then turn and brown the other. Do not serve on toasted bread, but either alone on a platter garnished with lemon and parsley, or on toasted crackers.

Stuffed Shad.—Shad is at its best in April. To stuff one, make an opening in front just large enough to properly draw it; fill with a seasoning made from equal parts of bread crumbs and mashed potatoes, seasoned with butter, pepper, salt and minced parsely. Sew up, lay on a trivet in a baking pan, put bits of butter over it and pour in a pint of water. Bake until, when tried with a fork, the flesh will lift easily from the backbone in the thickest part. Keep well basted. Make a sauce by mashing the fried melts (if it is a male shad) into the thickened brown gravy made from the liquor in the pan.

Sponge Gingerbread.—One and a quarter pounds of flour, six ounces of butter, six ounces of soft brown sugar, one ounce of ground ginger, one pound of syrup, a little carbonate of soda, and half a pint of milk. Cream the butter and sugar together as for a cake mixture, then add the ginger and carbonate of soda then the syrup, and lastly the milk. Mix well together. Grease twenty-four tins, fill in with a spoon, and bake in a moderate oven. When baked turn on to a sieve, and place the cakes upside down.

BEN'S COMPLAINT.

I am the youngest of the lot,
The latest born of six;
I often wish that I were not—
It's put me in a fix.

"He's mother's baby!" mamma's name
For me, a boy of eight;
At this I often blush for shame,
The name I truly hate!

I better like my papa's plan,
I think my papa knows;
Aloud he cries, "He's father's man!
Why, bless me, how he grows!

I cannot make my mamma know,
Nor can I make her see
How big I am, how fast I grow;
"Her baby" she calls me.

And what discourages me more,
And often puzzles me,
My mamma says when I'm a score,
I'll still her baby be.

Two In a Crib.

BY ELIZABETH P. ALLAN.

"'Oho, Brother Richard, the sun's very high!'" called mama, on her way to the bath-room.

Evelyn turned over in her pretty brass cot, and yawned. She knew very well what this quotation from Mother Goose meant, for mama generally roused her lazy little girl in some such merry way, in order to put her in a good humor at the start.

Sometimes this plan succeeded, and sometimes it didn't; to-day it didn't. Evelyn lay still, and watched the ladder of sunshine made by the light coming through the half-open venetians, and wished she was a "big lady," so she could lie in bed all day.

But when mama came back from the bath her tone was quite different. "Get up, Evelyn, at once," she said, and passed through the nursey without another word.

There was still time for a brisk little girl to get dressed before the prayer-bell rang, but our little girl quarreled with the tangles in her hair, with every button on her shoes, with all her hooks and eyes, and so she was too late for prayers. This meant going to bed a half-hour earlier that night.

"Mr. Alexander," said mama, serving the coffee-urn while she spoke, "are there any gypsies about?"

"Gypsies? What makes you think so?"

"Well," said mama soberly, "I've heard stories about gypsies changing little children in their beds, and I think somebody has changed mine. I put a dear little daughter to be last night. She said her prayers, gave me twenty hugs and kisses, promised to be a good girl to-day, and let me put out the light without a word. But, this morning, the little girl who woke up in that crib was cross and disobedient; she hasn't kissed me once, and I don't believe she has even said her prayers."

"Oh, that is easily explained," said papa; "you put two little girls to bed in the same crib last night, and the wrong one woke up this morning."

"Two little girls?" exclaimed Evelyn, surprised out of her sulkiness.

"Certainly. Didn't you know there were two little girls inside of you? They take turns in looking through your eyes, speaking through your mouth, using your hands and feet. The one who is good and sweet and merry and loving is our dear little Evelyn; the other—suppose we call her 'Neverlyn'—hates Evelyn, and would kill her if she could. But we hope Evelyn is going to drive her out some day, and have her crib, and her eyes and mouth, and her hands and feet, all to herself."

The idea of being two little girls seemed so funny that Evelyn could not help laughing.

"Ah!" said mama, "that's a good sign, for I have observed that Neverlyn never laughs."

Evelyn quickly forgot that second little girl when she got to school. Dear me! it takes all a little girl's thoughts to remember whether the e or the i comes first in "believe," and what part of speech "such" is, and how to divide by five figures. But the day-card had "Excellent" written on it, and mama looked pleased enough when she read it.

"You must have left Neverlyn at home, locked up," she said slyly.

"If I thought she'd help me to say my lessons, I'd take her along," laughed the little girl.

"She never helps," said mama, shaking her head, "her businesss is to hinder."

The day went by with quick, silent steps; night took her place, and lighted up the star-lamps, and Evelyn's bedtime came a whole half-hour earlier than usual. It was rather hard on the little girl, for Susy Belt had lent her that charming book "Lady Jane"' to read, and she barely had time to finish her lessons before mama whispered:

"Bed-time, but don't let Neverlyn know it."

This brought a smile to drive away the coming frown, and Evelyn followed mama upstairs, singing over the Mother Goose rhyme mama had used in the morning:

"Richard and Robin were two pretty men;
They lay in bed till the clock struck ten.
Then up jumps Robin, and looks at the sky
'Oho, Brother Richard, the sun's very high!'"

"Mama," she said suddenly, leaving the rhyme unfinished, "does everybody go double?"

"Yes, everybody," answered mama, "as long as they live in this world. Everybody has an evil nature, a Neverlyn, which wants us to be mean and disagreeable, and a better nature which wants to do right."

Evelyn listened soberly, and then mama tucked her up in the soft white bed.

"Good-night, mama," she said, smiling to herself as the light went out, and the saucy stars peeped in at her. "Call me early in the morning, so you won't wake Neverlyn."—S. S. Times.

Pleasant Fooling.

Margaret was a little maiden of quaint fancies. "May I do some queer thing, April Fool's Day, mamma?" she asked; and her mother, having confidence in her wise impulses, answered, "Yes, dear, if you are sure to do nothing unkind or in bad taste." Margaret smiled knowingly and promised.

On the morning of the first of April, Katie, the cook, went into the kitchen to build her fire. She took a cover off of the stove and, behold! her fire was laid. Some brownie had been there in the night.

"Bless us an' save us!" cried Kate. "An' 'twas an April fool I expected to tumble into, in the mornin'!"

Margaret with a "shining morning face," was early at the breakfast table.

"Look under your plate, Tom," she counselled her brother when that wise young gentleman persistently ignored his suspiciously reversed cover.

"I guess so!" he returned drily, "April fool! You can't catch me with chaff, Miss Maggie."

"Oh, look! please!" cried Margaret; "I can't wait. It is an April fool, but it's a lovely one. Oh, please look!"

"Yes, Tom; don't disappoint her," said mother, gently. And Tom, muttering something about "girls' nonsense," did look and saw the jacknife which he had wanted for months.

"Well, I'm a Dutchman!" he remarked with more emphasis than accuracy.

"It's an April fool!" cried Margaret, getting up from the table to dance about it. "It's my kind; I invented it."

Being a boy, Tom did not say much, but when he left the room he slyly threw away the dead mouse that he had destined for Margaret's pocket.

The little girl ran off early to school, calling, on her way, at the little house where Pete Smiley lived alone, and spent his time growling at his neighbors and his own rheumatism.

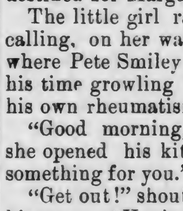
"Good morning," said Margaret, as she opened his kitchen door. "Here is something for you."

"Get out!" shouted Pete, reaching for his cane. "You're the fifth little torment that's been here this morning with your April fools. Get out, or I'll lay this over your shoulders!"

Margaret grew pale, but she stood her ground.

"It is an April fool," she said, bravely. "If you'll open it, I'll stand right here, and if you don't like it you can strike me as hard as you please."

To his own surprise, Pete did open the package. It contained at least a cupful of the strong peppermints he liked next to his tobacco.



"Well, that's the master!" he cried.

"I think April Fool's Day is quite nice," said Margaret, with a little courtesy. "Good-morning, sir."

So her day went on, filled with surprises that held nothing but sweetness.

"I've had a beautiful time," said Margaret to herself, that night, "and I haven't let anybody see I was provoked when I was fooled."—Youth's Companion.

Putnam's Wolf Den.

Everybody in the country is familiar with the story of how Israel Putnam, in his youthful days crawled into a den and killed a fierce she-wolf that had been ravaging the neighboring sheepfolds 150 years ago. All admirers of the deed and its heroic doer will be glad to know that the den and its surroundings are to be converted into a public park. The historic den is among high hills in a rugged country, some miles from the village of Pomfret, and is situated at the base of a mountain. The cavern, with the woodland all about it, is on the big farm of Phoebe Ann Clapp, of Pomfret, and it remains exactly as it was a century and a half ago, except that hundreds of visitors there, who came from all parts of the union, have chiseled their names in the tough rocks about its mouth. The entrance to the cavern is about 2 feet in diameter. The passageway slants downward at first for about 15 feet, then extends horizontally 10 feet further, ascends an easy slope and ends in a narrow chamber, the ancient home of the wolf, the ceiling of which is less than 4 feet high.

IT SEEMS TOO SMALL to do any good, when you look at one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. But just try it, when you're bilious or constipated, or have a sour stomach, or a fit of indigestion—and you'll own up that they're the best things in the world.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I could tell of a number of cases where Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines have cured. A friend of mine, Mr. Williams, was about used up with liver troubles; now he says that "Pleasant Pellets" have helped him more than any or all the medicines that he has ever taken.

Education for the Ministry—Albemarle Presbytery.

The churches of the Presbytery are hereby reminded that this is the month (April) for another collection for the Education of Candidates for the Ministry. The prospect now is that unless a good collection is sent in this month the Presbytery will not be able to pay its candidates in full the amounts promised. Some of these have not received one-half the money appropriated for their support at school and must leave school unless the promised aid is speedily realized.

Several of the churches have done nothing for this cause within a year. The receipts are less than half the amount which the Presbytery is expected to raise for this cause. By all means let every church take up a collection and forward it at once to the Treasurer Mr. J. B. Gary, Henderson, N. C.

A Hopeless Invalid.

Dear Sir :—I have been raised from such a depth of suffering and misery that I feel it my duty to testify to all sufferers, the great benefits I have derived from the use of the Electropoise. I had been seriously afflicted for several years, so much that I had to live on drugs. My physician told me that I could not live without them, so I continued medical treatment, but grew worse all the time. So about a year ago in a fit of desperation I determined to stop all medicine and use the Electropoise. I feel that under a kind Providence I owe my life to it.

That organic heart trouble as I thought is no more, scarcely ever have headache, constipation entirely relieved, can eat any thing I want and it does not hurt me. My sleep is sound and refreshing, and better still my nerves are so much improved that I don't feel like the same person. I would honestly and cheerfully recommend the Electropoise to all suffering humanity. Especially to weak females as it builds up, strengthens, and invigorates the whole system. I would not be without one at any price, because it has made life worth living for me when I was considered a hopeless invalid.

Yours truly,
Miss KITTY PARKER.

RECONCILIATION.

"When we were sinners we were reconciled to GOD by the death of His SON." This is the word with which the apostle follows the scheme of our growth as Christians in experience by the grace of GOD, given by inspiration in the fifth chapter of Romans. He makes this the ground of assurance that GOD will continue and carry on to completion the work begun when "being justified by faith we have peace with GOD through our LORD JESUS CHRIST." We are assured that He who hath begun a good work in us will continue it unto the day of JESUS CHRIST. We are reminded as by the Psalmist: "The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me. Thy mercy, oh LORD, endureth forever." That this may be most surely done our LORD hath committed to His servants the ministry of reconciliation, giving the word that GOD was in CHRIST reconciling the world unto Himself. This is the sinner's only plea, the only hope of the saved. Bnt why speak of it here? Because we are not only needy and destitute in this regard, but need to consider that as GOD is thus reconciling us to Himself, He demands that we seek reconciliation with any with whom we are at enmity or have any quarrel or misunderstanding. There can be no doubt about this matter and we cannot excuse ourselves in the responsibility. It is made plain by the LORD Himself. In laying down the laws of the kingdom, as part of the Sermon on the Mount, given to us in the fifth chapter of Matthew, He is speaking of the Sixth commandment of the Decalogue. First showing that this law is broken by unjust anger and hate, He tells us that we must be reconciled to our brother.

It is plain that this enmity is a hindrance to worship. It was when one should bring to the altar a gift to be offered as a sacrifice in worship, if he remembered that his brother had aught against him, he must not, dare not, engage in that worship until he had gone and been reconciled to his brother. When that was accomplished he could then come and offer his gift. The lesson is unmistakable that if any one is at enmity with a fellow-Christian, or as a Christian with any fellow-man, JESUS requires that before seeking to worship he must go and be reconciled. This is not the whole reason nor the sole reason why many are not accepted and do not receive a blessing in worship or service, but it is one reason and a part of the cause that some do not find rest to their souls. It is plainly breaking the Sixth commandment, It is clearly condemned by CHRIST. It withholds the favor of GOD. The place and prominence given it by CHRIST shows that if any Christian lives unreconciled to another that will render worship unacceptable to GOD. This is the clearer if we realize that it is sin and JESUS came to save us from our sin and not in sin. We dare not say that such will not be saved. There may be peace with GOD in the act of justification, but there cannot be peace from GOD in the experience of unclouded worship and communion.

From this it must follow that such Christians are not getting joy in the HOLY GHOST. As every sin grieves Him, this sin must restrain His full blessing from flowing with joy into our souls. Here is the difficulty with may Christians who are not enjoying their religion. It is not that we have aught against another who has done us injustice or injury—but that some one has just cause of feeling hurt by some word or deed of ours. Even if there is no just cause for the feeling we must do all in our power to secure reconciliation with any who think we have wronged them before we can find rest unto our souls. If we remember that our brother hath aught against us we will get to ourselves a surprise of blessing, a precious rest to our souls by seeking reconciliation and then coming to worship. We will not find rest until we do.

Moreover the refusal or delay to do this will make us timid in work and feeble in force for others to bring them. We cannot present and plead the merits and mediation of CHRIST to beseech others to be reconciled to GOD while we remain unreconciled to others. The SPIRIT will not so use us, to the fullest possible service for others. The world seeing the inconsistency will not, most naturally and by the temptation of SATAN, be led by our example or speech to come to CHRIST.

Thus the work for CHRIST and the Church is restrained or hindered.

This word is written under the influence of the work now being conducted by our Synodical Evangelist, Rev. WM. BLACK, in St. Andrews church. The work has been greatly blessed there during the past week and many have confessed CHRIST. In the very beginning he insisted, as all Evangelists are fully justified in doing, that if any members of the church were thus unreconciled the success of the meeting would be correspondingly lessened and all such would fail of a blessing.

For this double reason we press this subject now that as it is a sin against GOD, breaking His commandment, it will surely rob us of the joy of our salvation and withhold the progress of any good work in our church or community. At the risk of our usefulness in the service of CHRIST and the loss of GOD'S favor, surely none of us will delay a moment, when we bring our gift to the altar and there remember that our brother hath ought against us, first to be reconciled to our brother and then to come and offer our gift.

CHRIST LOVES YOU WITH MORE THAN the love of friendship. As a bridegroom rejoices over his bride, so does He rejoice over you, and nothing but the bride's surrender will satisfy Him. He has given you all and He asks for all in return. The slightest reserve will grieve Him to the heart. He spared not Himself, and how can you spare yourself? For your sake he poured out in a lavish abandonment all that He had, and for His sake you must pour out all that you have without stint or measure. Oh, be generous in your self-surrender. Meet His measureless devotion to you with a measureless devotion to Him. Be glad and eager to throw yourself unreservedly into His loving arms, and to hand over the reins of government to Him. Whatever there is of you let Him have it all. Give up forever everything that is separate from Him: Consent to resign, from this time forward, all liberty of choice, and glory in the blessed nearness of union which makes this enthusiasm of devotedness not only possible but necessary.—Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

HERE AND THERE.

THE CONSENSUS OF OPINIONS ON THE subject of "the Historic Episcopate" which the Independent obtained from the bishops, in its bearing upon the terms of union proposed by the Episcopal Church to the other Protestant churches, amounts to this: We believe in one Church, with which all Christians should unite, and that is the Episcopal Church. And now that this has been reduced to its simplest and its entirely intelligible form, and so is practically out of the way, it is in order to present to the Episcopal brethren and others, what certainly is a more reasonable proposition for unity, even if it be not more practicable, and we hardly think it is. It commends itself at least as plain, straightforward, clear-cut, concise: Unite with the Presbyterian Church. The North and West sets forth good reason for this:

"Our Presbyterian Church stands for unity as over against the extreme individuality of independency. It stands for liberty and equality against prelacy and Episcopacy. It occupies the middle ground where all parties can unite. It is not reasonable to think that union can come on any other than such an intermediate platform.

"Presbyterians recognize Congregational, Presbyterial or Episcopal ordination for ministers. We recognize all baptism that is in the name of Jesus, whether it be sprinkling, pouring or immersion. We admit all to the Lord's table who love and obey Him, without asking their sect. We exchange pulpits with any minister who honors Christ supremely. We suffer the Moodys and Willards who are unordained, to exhort from our pulpits Ours is the oldest historic church which is truly Catholic."

WE RECEIVED A DAY OR TWO SINCE a letter from a dear Christian lady, now advanced in years, from which we think it allowable to make some extracts—though assuredly they were not written for publication. After speaking of the enjoyment had in reading the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN she says of the "Christian's Secret of a Happy Life, which we offer as a premium, and which we are glad to send abroad:

"I have had four copies, and when I leave home for the summer and meet with those who need comfort and are seeking for guidance and direction, the sweet simple words of Gospel love and cheer seem so adapted to their wants; and being undenominational, it is suited to and claimed by all."

THE "MOTHER IN ISRAEL" AFTER telling how her own church had grown from very feeble beginnings to be one of the strongest and most faithfully working churches in the Southern Assembly, goes on to say:

"I have watched the progress on the different churches here and often wondered at the superior loyalty exhibited by the Episcopal children. I have seen that many adult Protestants think one Protestant denomination as good as another, and wondered why it was. By degrees I have come to the conclusion that our children should from their very early infancy be taught that they are baptized members, and owe duties and have obligations resting on them, and should be put to work in some pleasant manner for the church, so that when they are grown they will not be worldlings."

"I NOW BELIEVE IN GETTING THEM into church early and watching over them and having their pastor considered their best friend. Then they will not care for the ball room, round dances, &c. The young have animal spirits and enjoy life; if they are suppressed constantly they resent it. Let them retain their spirits and their activity, but throw their energy into useful channels."

ALL WILL ADMIT THAT IN THE ABOVE there is much wisdom gathered from the wide experience of a pious life. We know young girls and young women, who do not need the ball-room and the theatre for their pleasure. They find a happiness of heart and soul in doing the work of the MASTER. They bless themselves while blessing others and live rejoicingly in the smiles of the KING.

THE UNION SEMINARY MAGAZINE for March–April is before us. The Editorial valedictory appears in this number. Dr. VAUGHN contributes an article on Rev. Dr. THOMAS E. PECK; Rev. THERON H. RICE, JR., on "The Joy of Preaching;" Prof. MOORE, on "The Chaldean Story of the Flood." The missionary articles are on "The Attitude of of the Southern Presbyterian Church towards Foreign Missions," by Prof. JOHNSON; "The Student Volunteer Movement and the Detroit Convention," by E. R. LEYBURN; Persia: Its Religious and Mission Work, by ISAAC M. YONAN. Local and Alumni Notes and Criticisms and Reviews as usual.

The Magazine is not very prosperous financially—though certainly it has deserved to be. We quote from the valedictory the ominous statement that if the bills sent out with this number are heard from the magazine may continue; if not it cannot.

WHAT GREAT CHANGES HAVE TAKEN place in the U. S. Senate within the space of a few weeks past. Senators from Louisiana and Mississippi have withdrawn. Georgia and North Carolina have lost each a Senator by death. The House of Representatives though so very much larger has not had so many changes.

Few men in the Senate were more beloved by their colleagues we suppose than VANCE and COLQUITT, though they must have been strongly unlike each other. One the most original of men, flashing his powers before the world; the other a steady persistent force doing the work and doing it well, yet almost ploddingly. Both succeeded though working by ways most diverse.

WHO REMEMBERS THE NEW ENGLAND Primer? who in the sixties, or even the fifties, perhaps, does not? with its stiff blue board cover and its quaint poetry that gave some of us our first lessons in theology. Lessons which have never left us. In our exchanges we have found some of this poetry of our childhood, and we supply some from memory. Here it is:

In Adam's fall
We sinned all;
Time cuts down all,
Both great and small;
Uriah's beauteous wife
Made David seek his life;
Whales in the sea
God's voice obey;
Xerxes the great did die,
And so must you and I;
Youth forward slips,
Death soonest nips;
Zaccheus he,
Did climb the tree,
His Lord to see.

The pictures accompanying each one of these choice bits of wisdom were appropriately quaint and we see now through the more than fifty years that have past, the skeleton form of Death with his great scythe, and Zaccheus in his chosen point of observation. How much the modest little book did in forming for its readers their lives here and hereafter who can tell?

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Le Roi est Mort—Vive Le Roi!

The Agent is dead. Long live the Chairman!

This is the exclamation which comes involuntarily from our lips—as the only adequate expression for the occasion.

We had the pleasure, last week, of attending the meetings of two Presbyteries, that of Mecklenburg at Lincolnton and that of Concord at Salisbury—they were most delightful, harmonious and busy sessions. It is only possible to dwell on those matters which touch our department, but it is proper that some special attention should be called to the important step taken, by each of the bodies, in the matter of Foreign Missions.

On Wednesday night, Mecklenburg Presbytery set apart the whole evening session to this subject. After a popular address, the earnest agent of Foreign Missions, Rev. Jesse Siler, brought in a motion calling for the substitution of a Presbyterial Committee of Foreign Missions for the old agent. After some statements by the Synod's Secretary, as to the necessity, the constitution and the duties of such a committee, the motion was unanimously passed and seven members, four ministers and three ruling elders were appointed. The former agent of Presbytery was made chairman of the committee, the elder, who was formerly associated with him as a member of the Synod's Committee, being also appointed on this Presbyterial body.

At Salisbury, the same action was taken, on motion of Rev. A. T. Graham, the former agent of Concord Presbytery—who, with his usual promptness and energy, at once divided his territory into sections and made arrangements for the holding of simultaneous meetings, before the next regular meeting of Presbytery, from Morganton, Statesville, Salisbury and Concord as centres. Of course the details of the work of these committees must be left to their own wisdom and discretion, but it is understood that they are expected to do something regularly, and real, not only along the lines, which the Secretary ventured to suggest, but any and all others, which their superior knowledge and experience of the sphere, in which their work lies, may dictate.

We will return to prophesy, although somewhat diffident generally in this business, that if these committees will show one-half of the energy now shown by the Home Mission committees, there will be an immense advance, immediately, in all the branches of this most important work.

Special agencies, as permanent institutions, for our Presbyteries and Synods, we have always been opposed to, on principle; but these committees have a right to exist and to live and continue to develop.

We believe that the other Presbyteries of the Synod will drop into line in this matter so soon as the subject is brought properly before them. When this is done, even if nothing more has been accomplished, the Synodical Secretary would almost feel like exclaiming as did the aged Simeon.

We cannot, however, fail to note one other thing, which greatly rejoiced our hearts. Several of the country churches notably Thyatira, Back Creek and Bethpage have come forward with contributions doubled or quadrupled almost, and the whole Presbytery, (Concord) is several hundred dollars ahead of last year. The figures were not brought out for Mecklenburg, but with Gastonia, Asheville, Monroe and others, so well to the front again or for the first time, there must be an ever greater increase in it.

These facts, with those published by Bro. Chester, should lead us all to take courage and enter upon a new church year full of joy, thanksgiving and hope.

We beg to say to the brethren, that we have found it impossible to redeem our promise made a few weeks ago, to send a copy of "the appeal" issued from New York. Dr. Chester could not secure the copies promised, but, in consequence, it will appear in the May number of the Missionary. Look for it. Study it. Use it.

CONSIDER THE LILIES.

Consider the lilies of the field
How trustfully they grow;
Their glowing chalices have not been wrought
By anxious toil, nor have they taken thought
How they shall thrive; but, tall and fair,
They drink the sunlight and the air,
Each from God's hand,
As he has planned;
And so the lilies grow.

Consider the lilies of the field,
How peacefully they grow;
Their Father's love and care they question not,
Nor murmur at their own apportioned lot.
The sun and storm to them fulfil
God's thought for them. All is his will,
God's way is best
They leave the rest;
And so the lilies grow.

Consider the lilies of the field,
How royally they grow.
Not even Solomon, in king's array,
Was clad like one of these, which, for a day,
Lives to praise God, then scorched and dried,
Its glory gone, is cast aside.
Clothed by God's hand,
Their beauty planned——
'Tis thus the lilies grow.

Consider the lilies of the field,
Consider how they grow.
If God so cares for them and makes them fair
For their brief day, shall he not much more care
Oh! ye of little faith, for you?
His tender mercies still are new;
Then trust his love
And look above,
E'en as the lilies grow.

AN HOUR BENEATH THE SEA.

By Charles Frederick Holder.

The Lights of the Deep Sea.

It is a somewhat singular fact that the simplest animals, those which are apparently the most insignificant, in many instances produce the most remarkable effects upon the human mind. A herd of elephants or a school of whales are impressive and excite the wonder of the looker-on, but there are little creatures in the ocean, scarcely visible to the naked eye, which when collected in schools, in imagination transport the observer to a veritable land of enchantment, where gems seem to grow on trees, emitting scintillations of light of the most vivid hues and intense brilliancy.

One night in the Gulf of Mexico we were drifting along over the shallow lagoon that made up the floor of the atoll, when one of the party dived from the boat and swam away beneath the surface. We were waiting for the moon to rise, and it was very dark, but the moment the swimmer entered the water a sea of flame seemed to have opened to swallow him. Waves of vivid yellow lashed each other, curling this way and that, and his body appeared surrounded by fire, each motion of his hands and arms creating new exhibitions of luminosity.

Taking up a cup of water, when unmolested it was apparently devoid of animal life, but when disturbed innumerable little objects, about as large as a pinhead, gave out a brilliant yellow light, and we saw one of the most important lamps of the ocean, the little animal known as noctiluca. It has been my good fortune to observe these animals in many seas, and it can be said that different species emit different colors.

The warm waters of the tropics are not the only localities for these brilliant displays. I have told the time at night on the north coast by dashing my hand through the water, holding the watch-face within a few inches of the light so produced; and by filling a globe with noctilucae and keeping the water continually stirred light sufficient for reading can be produced. Von Bibra is said to have written a description of the Pyrosoma by its own light; and another naturalist read by the light emitted by a peculiar phosphorescent shark. The little animal mentioned, the noctiluca, is one of the most familiar of all phosphorescent animals and suggests that the ocean, so dark and gloomy and at great depths by day, is not the dismal realm we might suppose, but has its lights and living lamps, making it a region whose wonders exceed the creations of the most vivid imagination. In brief, the abyssal as well as the upper regions of the ocean have a system of illumination, the lights, lamps, call them what you will, being living animals of many kinds.

One of the most striking displays I ever witnessed was in the Pacific. Standing on a wharf I was watching the movements of fishes outlined in fire against the water. The little bay was filled with flying fishes which were dashing to and fro, making their shapes in luminous trains a marvelous spectacle. Deep in the water I fancied I saw other lights, and suddenly one so bright and large that it might have been the reflection of the moon. Watching I discovered that these lights were appearing and reappearing with some regularity all over the bottom. In shoal water they could be plainly seen, and placing myself near the surface, I sat in full enjoyment of the scene.

The light would suddenly appear out of intense darkness; at first as small as a pea, of a delicate blue, increasing in size and changing to yellow, until a spot almost as large as a tea-plate, glowing with a pale but distinct yellow light which went out with the suddenness of a flash-light. In fact these lights, coming and going, called to mind a mimic lighthouse at the bottom of the sea.

Curious to learn what could produce so brilliant a display, I watched until finally one of the bright spots rose to the surface and then quickly descended. Again it rose, illumining the surrounding water with its glories, and this time I caught in my hand—simply a very insignificant little worm, scarcely two inches in length, yet possessing powers of illumination almost beyond description. The entire shore-line in this locality I later found was tunneled by these living lights.

The worms are among the most brilliant light-givers. In some, as the little Chaetopterus, a brilliant light is emitted from the feet, while still another seat of light is found between the segments. The light is a rich bluish purple that surrounds the creature with a brilliant aureola. The worm Polycirrus emits a pale bluish light, and many worms which rise from their holes at night are among the most beautiful of the lamps of the sea. The greatest depths of the ocean are not definitely known, but may be considered as between five and six miles. The regions near the surface and at the bottom are inhabited, while the intermediate portion is supposed to be devoid of life.

Nearly every group of animals may be said to contribute lights to the ocean depths, and upon a dark night the voyager upon almost any sea can form a very definite idea of their beauty and variety. Near the surface float innumerable jellyfishes, almost invisible during the daytime, their crystal-like forms poising like bells of delicate glass, and at night gleaming with a mysterious light that is heatless and cannot be explained. Some of the jellyfishes have long trains or masses of tentacles, and sometimes present the appearance of mimic comets darting through the sky.

In drifting over the water on a dark night, peering down into the depths, one can imagine that here is a submarine counterpart of the heavens, and that the constellations and other phenomena are all depicted against the marine sky. Great disks of jelly, gleaming with faint yellow light, appear like moons; others with long tails are the comets, while the nebulae is represented by aggregations of minute forms. Action seems in many cases the cause of illumination, as touch them, run the hand through water containing certain animals, and it appears at once to kindle into flame.

Among the surface-light givers are many fishes, as the little lamp fish Scopelus, which has a brilliant light upon its head and others dotted along its under surface. One of the garfishes bears a light upon the lobe of its tail, while the great sunfish Mola has been seen like a gigantic moon in the ocean outlined against the night in its own light. Some of the squads dash by brilliantly luminous, and the crest of every wave blazes with mysterious light.

At the bottom of the deep sea, where darkness reigns all the time and the temperature is almost freezing, nearly every animal is a light-bearer. The fishes are the most remarkable. The pressure here is so great that glass is powdered, and wood crushed out of all semblance to itself; and that delicate animals can exist here would seem an impossibility. The explanation is that most of these forms are adapted to their surroundings. Their bones are cellular and porous, and can be compared to great sponges.

Nearly all the deep sea fishes are carnivorous, and a continual warfare is kept on, one preying upon the other. In some, as Beryx, the fins are luminous, in others the entire form glows with a rich light. The Echiostoma, a fish found in water 2,150 fathoms deep, is provided with luminous spots arranged about the eyes which undoubtedly supply them with sufficient light for all its purposes. Sternoptyx is luminous over its entire surface, and thus becomes an attractive object to various predaceous forms, while Stomias, a ferocious snakelike creature armed with fanglike teeth, is furnished with rows of light which surround the fish like an aureola. In a fish known to science as Malacosteus, the lights are found upon the head, one emitting a golden, the other a greenish tint—a veritable system of signals implanted in the velvet black-hued skin.

That these lights are of some use to their possessors there can be but little doubt. Some are signals; others lures, others again serve as warning—all having their purpose in the economy of nature. It remained for Dr. Bennett, a distinguished English naturalist, to make use of a fish as a lamp. Discovering a luminous shark he placed it in a glass globe and was able to read by the green light it produced. He describes its appearance surrounded by the strange aureola as by far the most remarkable sight he had ever witnessed. Could we descend to the floor of the deep sea we should find it at various portions carpeted, as it were, with luminous forms. Here the starfishes emit light, those entangled and lifted in dredges often being luminous over the entire surface—stars in all that the term implies.

The most remarkable light-giver of the deep sea is the Umbellularia. Imagine a cornfield on a dark night, when even the stars are hidden beneath the clouds, each tangle of beard illumined as though by an electric light. Imagine the tips waving gently to and fro, the lights crossing and passing each other, while above and through the mass moved other lights. Imagine all this, and some idea can be formed of the umbellularia forest as it exists beneath the deep sea.

The animal resembles to some extent a bunch of lilies growing upon a long stalk, and is found several miles from the surface. It is related to the seapens, several of which are luminous. The polyps which compose it are of two kinds.

Ascending nearer the surface we find in Southern seas one of the most brilliant light-givers, the Pyrosoma, previously referred to, which is an aggregation of animals, being hollow and columnar in form, open at the interior, and the combined streams rushing from the open end forces the entire colony slowly through the water. The light of many of these forms is most intense and beautiful, in some blue, in others green. A French writer caused a globe to be suspended in his cabin in which he placed five or six pyrosomae, and at night he improvised a novel chandelier that emitted light sufficient for all purposes.

These animals are generally found in schools or large companies, and often when the sea is rough and breaking they convert the upper area into a blaze of light. Vessels sailing through them seem to be plowing through liquid fire, the light curling around the bow of the vessel forming a weird and striking spectacle. Sometimes the light of these animals is seen from a distance, and resembles a cloud of haze of luminous matter resting upon the surface. The beauty of these columns of light cannot be imagined, but at times they resemble metal at white heat scintillating with lines of green, yellow and blue. Sometimes they attain extraordinary size, one observed by Moseley, the naturalist, being four feet in length and five or six inches in diameter.

Building on Jesus Christ.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Dig deep and lay your foundations well! These solemn words from the lips of a powerful preacher produced a profound impression on me during my youth, and I have rung them in the ears of many an awakened sinner since. They are in the same line with our divine Lord's appeal to his audience at the close of his Sermon on the Mount. He exhorted them to build for eternity, not on the shifting sand and gravel, but upon the solid rock.

Just now there are many awakened souls in every community, and no counsel we can offer touches their case more exactly than the words above cited. Before the lofty spires of the magnificent Brooklyn Bridge were reared, the engineers went down several feet under the surface of the river-bed, and threw out the mud and gravel; this was done in order to reach the base rock. In like manner you must do some excavating of your sins. You are a sinner; unless you accept the truth, you cannot be saved. Repentance of your sins must come first, and this means both honest confession of guilt before God and renunciation of your sins. As the person who is suffering from a bilious fever cannot recover until the "bad humors" are purged out, so you must get the sin out of you before you can be cured. To do this you need the Holy Spirit. He is now "striving" with you; co-operate with the Spirit. Entreat him to do a thorough work upon your conscience, even if it cost you distress and mortification and self-reproach and tears. The deeper you let him dig the better. Sub-soil repentance makes honest Christians. Sighing over sin, and the self-flattery that you are no worse than other people, will only delude you; such tears soon dry off and leave your heart harder than before. The Holy Spirit is pressing you to repentance, and that involves more than sorrow for past sins; it involves hatred of present sinfulness, and a turning from it with an honest endeavor to obey Jesus Christ. The more you loathe your sins, the more will you realize your need of a Saviour.

I entreat you, do not befool yourself in this most momentous matter on which the salvation of your soul depends. That Jewish leper of whom we read, realized just what a scabby wretch he was when he cried out, "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean!" Your soul is leprous with guilt. Jesus Christ alone can cleanse your heart that has been polluted with more sins than you can recount. Here comes in the mighty meaning and the indispensable necessity of the atoning blood. That cleanses, and that alone. It is not your tears, but his precious blood; it is not your sighs, but His sufferings on the cross that can avail for you. He "bore your sins in his own body on the tree:" then come straightway up to him and implore him to give you the benefits of that atonement. Say to him:

> Nothing in my hand I bring,
> Simply to thy cross I cling.
> Vile, I to this fountain fly,
> Wash me, Saviour, or I die.

Coming thus to Jesus is the vital step. This is conversion, when it is done with the whole heart. To this very thing you are shut up; for no other name is given whereby you can be saved. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Everything else is shifting sand. You are building for eternity. Then build to last. The Master, in His Sermon on the Mount, tells us that the man who "built his house on the earth, without a foundation," made an awful mistake, for when the flood dashed against it, "it fell in, and the ruin of that house was great." Some lives of professed Christians show most shocking cracks, and lean over so that they require to be constantly "shored up." They were badly built on a bad foundation. We are startled very often by the sad crashes of this or that man; the whole structure of his character has fallen in!

Just what is meant, then, by building on Jesus Christ? We answer that you are to renounce all idea of regenerating your own heart, and trust Jesus Christ to do it. As you have no strength of your own equal to life's conflicts, Jesus offers you his everlasting arm. Instead of self-gratification as the chief end of living, Jesus implants a new principle, viz: to live for him and for the good of others. He imparts to you an universal grace which is more than a mere happy emotion; it is a controlling power to hold you against temptation, as an unseen anchor holds a vessel in a storm. When you sincerely accept Christ as your atoning Redeemer, when you look to him for daily direction, lean on him for support, and are joined to him in deep heart-union, then you may feel sure that you have got the everlasting rockbed underneath you. On that cornerstone of Christ's work for you and in you, it will be your delight to build as long as you live, piling up grace upon grace, and one good deed upon another, until the last stroke of the trowel.

Such life-structures are built to be seen, as a lamp is kindled in order to shine. A man cannot have Jesus Christ in his soul and nobody discover it. A fire in a stove reports itself. And if other people do not discover your religion, it is because you have none; for "by the fruits" Christians make themselves visible. The best looking apple tree that bears no apples is a lie. Faith without works is dead. A well built life is a structure where tongue and hand and brain and heart and purse are each day adding a noble word or deed under the inspiration of Christ's love. Such a structure is not built in a day, or by a few Sundays, or sacraments, or special services. It is a growth, because Jesus Christ lives in you.

Now is the time, my friend, to set about this all-important business. The Holy Spirit is pressing you towards Jesus Christ. Don't tamper with him, don't delay; don't dictate. Seek to know what Christ would have you do, and then do it. Test yourself by your Bible; that is the Book for you now. Christianity is not guess-work, or building straw on the sand. Every true Christian "knows whom he believes," and Jesus Christ "knows them that are his." Then dig down, throwing out sin and self that are in our way; dig down and put your whole soul on Jesus Christ as your foundation; you can build a life on Him that is worth the living. It will stand four-square to every wind that blows.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Merit and its Opposite.

Nothing isolates a man more for action than unsteadiness of purpose; no talents, nor amiability, nor even purity of intentions, can make amends. There is a kind of respect for the man who goes on resolutely in a mistaken course, but only contempt for him who is always wavering in the right. If we would have influence, we should bear in mind that the world is not governed by men of talent so much as by men of will. Some may think very little of the importance of influence, but in whatever sphere we are our influence is the measure of our power for good. It is the accumulated capital of a good man, impalpable but real, and often more precious than gold. We have seen it growing, as a shadow grows with a tree, longer, broader, deeper, till it becomes a shelter and a solace to all about it. The very look, the thought of these men gives a sense of confidence to people in perplexity. They are to be found in all ranks and classes, and society could not exist without them. They are the building stones in its walls, and our homes are more indebted to them than to the carved topstones which the multitude admire; or they are the steadfast lighthouses on the shore of the unstable sea, doing more for the world's good than the flashing meteors which burn themselves out in the higher air. It is a just ambition to be a quiet, fixed light for some few souls around us; and when excellence is weighed by Him who holds the balance, it will receive its due: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.

MAGAZINES.

A story by Napoleon Bonaparte is perhaps the chief attraction of the Cosmopolitan for April but there is a large quantity of other matter of the highest order of excellence. The illustrations of this magazine are beautiful in their execution. The Cosmopolitan Co., New York. Price $1.50 per year.

Where so much is excellent it is hard to discriminate. The story From the Old World to the New told in Pictures, by Audre Castaigne, is an attractive feature of the April Century. A most comprehensive and interesting account of the life and work of the Astronomer William R. Brooks is given in A Comet Finder; Millet's Life at Barbizon; Hunting an Abandoned Farm in Connecticut; Gods of India; Matthew Arnold; A Summer Month in a Welsh Village; Driven out of Thibet, and Wild Flowers of English Speech in America, are among the table of contents.

BOOKS.

The Siberian Exile and The Shepherd's Family are two companion books, but distinct stories, translated from the German of Gustav Nieritz, by Mary E. Ireland. Published by Presbyterian Committee of Publication, $1.00 each. These are excellent works for Sunday-school and home libraries. The stories are pleasantly written, interesting and of pure moral tone. The time of both is during the French invasion of Russia by Napoleon, and there is enough of the exciting to attract the boys.

Be Perfect, meditations for a month, by Rev. Andrew Murray has been issued by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. The plan of this work is not to expound a theory of perfection, but to search out from the Word of God the word Perfect, and study it in its different relations and meanings. The subject is treated under the especial thoughts: Perfection possible and attainable; how to know what this perfection is. No arbitrary demand, and Perfection as the highest aim of what God would do for us.

Popular Selections. We have received from Fleming H. Revell Company, Fifth Avenue New York, this selection of one hundred popular hymns, new and old, with tunes for eighty-five and suggestions for the remaining fifteen. These are one hundred preferred by the good men—and they commend themselves to us as having at least seventy-five per cent of those we would select for Sabbath-schools and social worship. They are the best of our modern popular Gospel Hymns with some of our best older hymns. They are bound substantially in card board manilla and have a special value to most of our smaller schools in being sold at the small price of ten cents each. We have long looked for such a selection and feel that we have both excellence of words and attractive music combined in a book whose cheapness will put a music edition of our best songs in reach of many schools which could not offord other books. This book is not a suitable substitute for our church hymn books, but is free from the frivolous and meaningless songs that have crept into many of our popular books of Gospel Hymns.

The Kings of the Earth Bring Their Glory and Honor Unto It.

An essential condition of the advance and development of the kingdom of God is that it cometh not with observation. This is the declaration of Him whose knowledge of that kingdom is perfect, because His identification with it is absolute and complete. It is His supreme purpose to found and establish it, a purpose in which He shall not fail or be discouraged.

In this announcement is not only instruction, but caution. We must be on our guard lest, because that kingdom does lay its lines of progress parallel with our conceptions and earthly methods, we fail to note its sure and solemn approximation, and so that day comes upon us unawares. It does escape the world's notice. Its agents are not represented in Vanity Fair. Its stock is not listed among appraisable investments and negotiable securities. Nevertheless, it cometh.

Nor are the signs wanting. Far as the world may be from the complete realization of the Divine Ideal in the perfected kingdom, there is scarce a direction of outlook which does not offer to the Spirit taught judgment sure and substantial tokens that the chariot of our Lord rides prosperously, and that the agencies of the Lord of hosts are accomplishing His purpose. From manifold confirmations we would concentrate our thought on one, and note the evidence clustering around the vision of the Patmos seer, who saw the kings of the earth bringing their glory and honor into the king of Christ. And this is nothing new. The deploying events of this world's history have always been under the marshalling of Him who doeth according to His will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. History is a unit.

"Through the ages one increasing purpose runs." The factors in the world's progress to-day are working under the same direction and control that shaped the course of affairs milleniums ago. The Pharaohs of Egypt and the Cæsars of Rome, Cyrus and Alexander, Alaric and Attila, were under a constraint they did not see, and answered a call they did not know. But the same is true, consciously or unconsciously, of every monarch and statesman, prince and president, in the old world or the new. But the purpose deepens, and its lines of development become more legible. God is not so far from the world to-day, and the nations are fast gathering around the altar of a not unknown God. Hence the difference is distinct, and the light mounts higher every day that changes the character of the world in relation to the kingdom of God, and in a sense the old world never knew, the kings of the earth are bringing their glory and honor into it.

More and more is Christian sentiment controlling the essential imperialism of the age. Not only has the gospel entered all ports, and established its witnesses at the centre of every worldly power, but its voice is increasingly heard in the councils of the nations, and its protests against the evils which have attended the administrations of government are making themselves more positively felt. Legislative and executive power are more dominated by the code of righteous and inevitable law. The profoundest philosophy of the day is recognizing in the nation the great social expression of the Divine Mind. The spirit which swept away the narrow prejudice and bigotry of the Jew is bringing the nations into a closer comity and a nearer realization of the brotherhood of man. The genius of Bismarck has welded the petty sovereignties of Germany into one grand unity. Garibaldi and Victor Emanuel have consolidated Italy, and the work of unification is going on. The Providence of God is conspicuous to-day in drawing toward great national centres the detached fragments of political existences. And with all of unholy greed of vain ambition and official dishonor, there runs through the world to-day the suggestions of an awakening conscience and a keener moral sensibility.

Nor is it on this line alone that the prophecy of tribute to the kingdom of Christ holds good. Not only the thrones of power and worldly dominion, but the kings of the world's thought and energy and wealth are bringing their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh. Just as captured treasure was stored away in the ancient temples, so the conquests of the world's wisdom and activity over the subtle forces of nature, the push and acquisition of art and industry, the extending dominion of civilization, are bringing their glory and honor into the kingdom of Christ. Nature and revelation are found on closer view to be a synoptical gospel. One-sided views and isolated testimony have had sometime a seeming contradiction. Disjointed chips from the geologist's hammer, and fragments of scientific research, may have appeared at variance with the Word. But as these sections of truth and fact are brought into collocation with a more enlightened and candid synthesis, they are found to match the oracles with surprising accuracy. The more liberal and intelligent and practical the examination of the witnesses, the more thoroughly are they found to agree.

And what corroboration is constantly being brought forward through the unearthing of long-buried ruins in the ancient Bible lands! Voices silent for long ages are speaking to the world to-day with a solemn distinctness and a promise of more startling revelations yet to be made from their stored hoard of secrets.

How has inventive genius fulfilled this prophecy? What has been done, and is being done, by the great factors of the civilization of the day? What strides the kingdom has taken since steam and electricity have been tamed and trained for practical service! How has the welfare of society been promoted, and humanity been uplifted, by the application of the discoveries of science to common life! The refinements of education and art have been missionary in their influence and operation. That which was the monopoly of a privileged few in former times is within reach of the masses to-day, and a spirit of more general courtesy, and a kindlier, gentler bearing toward one another, is a feature of society now which bespeaks the power of these influences, and is helping prepare the kingdom for its King.

And the kings of wealth, the merchant princes, are bringing in their glory and honor. Vast sums have been consecrated to the glory of God in the welfare of man. Institutions of learning are being multiplied. Hospitals and asylums scattered everywhere. All imaginable beneficence is being illustrated, and the gospel of humanity is more practically preached to the poor every day. Our theme is not exhausted. It is merely indicated. But with it comes the suggestion that in the tribute of worldly resources completed and made available in the advance and establishment of His kingdom, that glorious consummation in the perfected kingdom shall not be constituted and composed of element and material foreign and unknown to our sense and experience, but rather the consecration and spiritualization of our resource and endowment. Creation completed and glorified in redemption.

The kingdom of God is intensive. It is within us. It shall become extensive as that which is within is brought to its normal expression, and the life that is hid with Christ in God absorbs the entire range of faculty and energy. The radiant glory of that kingdom will be the Christ life and character pervading all. Before that glory the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed.—Christian Intelligencer.

A True Man.

A true man is a grand work of God. A man made in the image of God, and who is doing God's work in the world, is a sight worthier of admiration and respect than a mountain, an ocean, or a star; and a gathering of men of this sort is more atractive and impressive to a noble mind than any exhibits of the choicest and most varied works of art made by the hands of man. No landscape of natural scenery, nor any collection of rare and costly products of human skill, can compare in interest and suggestiveness with an assemblage of master-minds in any deliberative body, on an occasion like the Commencement exercises of one of our great universities. He is lacking in nobleness, and in the apprehension of greatness, who is not stirred within him at the sight of men who are moving the world, and who are to outlast the nountains and the seas and the stars. Recognizing greatness is the first step toward being great.—Sunday School Times.

STERLING TESTIMONY IN FAVOR OF THE ELECTROPOISE.

CONCORD, N. C., JANUARY 17TH, 1894.

DEAR SIRS:—I would like to give you a full statement of my experience in the use of the Electropoise, but as you have a sufficient number of testimonials from persons in high positions of intelligence and integrity to satisfy the minds of the unprejudiced, of the curative powers of the Electropoise; for the present I will submit only the following to be disposed of as you think best: I have been using the Electropoise nearly two years on myself and in different diseases, aches and pains and in no instance without benefit and in some cases the effects have been wonderful. Therefore I can heartily recommend it to the afflicted and suffering everywhere. The doubtful only need to give it a fair trial to be convinced that it meets the needs of the suffering better than any discovery heretofore made.

Yours truly,

REV. Z. RUSH.

A Fruitless Life.

All godless life is fruitless, inasmuch as it has no permanent results. Permanent results of a sort, indeed, follow everything that men do, for all our actions tend to make character, and they all have a share in fixing that which depends upon character—namely, destiny, both here and yonder. And thus the most fleeting of our deeds, which in one aspect is as transitory as the snow upon the great plains when the sun rises, leaves everlasting traces upon ourselves and upon our condition. But yet acts concerned with transitory things may have permanent fruit, or may be as transient as the things with which they are concerned. And the difference depends on the spirit in which they are done. If the roots are only in the surface skin of soil, when that is pared off the plant goes.

A life that is to be eternal must strike its roots down through all the superficial humus to the very heart of things. When its roots twine themselves around God, then the deeds which blossom out are unfading forever.

Think of men going empty-handed into another world, and saying, "O Lord, I made a big fortune in Manchester when I lived there, and I left it all behind me; or, "I mastered a science, and one gleam of the light of eternity has antiquated it;" or, "I gained prizes, won my aims, and they have all dropped from my hands, and here I stand, having to say in the most tragic sense, "nothing in my hands I bring." And another man dies in the Lord, and his "works do follow" him. It is not every vintage that bears exportation. Some wines are mellowed by crossing the ocean; some are turned into vinegar. The works of darkness are unfruitful because they are transient.

And they are unfruitful because while they last they yield no real satisfaction. The Apostle could say to another church with a certainty as to what the answer would be: "What fruit had ye then"—when ye were doing them—"in the things whereof ye are now ashamed?" And the answer is "None!" Of course, it is true that men do bad things because they like them better than good. Of course, it is true that the misery of mankind is that they have no appetite, on the general, for the only real satisfaction. But it is also true that no man who feeds his heart and mind on anything short of God is really at rest in anything that he does or possesses. Occasional twinges of conscience, dim perceptions that after all they are walking in a vain show, glimpses of nobler possibilities, a vague unrest an unwillingness to reflect and look the facts of their condition in the face, like men that will not take stock because they half suspect that they are insolvent—these are the conditions that attach to all godless life; and so there is no real fruit for the man's thirsty lips to feed upon. The smallest man is too large to be satisfied with anything short of infinity. The human heart is like some narrow opening on a hillside—so narrow that it looks as if a glass full of water would fill it. But it goes away down, down, down into the depth of the mountain, and you may pour in hogshead and no effect is visible. God, and God alone, brings to the thirsty heart the fruit that it needs.—Rev. Dr. Alexander MacLaren.

God's Great Gift.

"Why is it that ages have lived on without the blessings of popular liberty and free government and well-guarded rights? Is it that God has said, 'The world shall not have them till my favorite century and race appear.' Is it not, rather, that God has said, 'The world cannot have them till it has won by hard experience the heart and hand to which these blessings can be given, in which they can be held?' Why is it that God did not give you long ago the peace, the moral strength, which he will certainly give you some day if you persevere? Has he been keeping them from you wantonly and willfully? Has he not, rather, been—nay, is he not—standing over you, eager to give them at the first moment when the lift is possible?

"This makes the time of giving depend on the nature of the gift and the condition of the giver. If I am going to give a man a jewel, I may make my gift at any time. I may run up to him and thrust it into his had as he is walking on the street. I may slip it into his limp, unconscious fingers while he lies asleep. I may answer his knock at my door with an immediate satisfaction. If I want to give him a truth, I must wait longer. I must train his powers of thought. I must awake his mind into activity. If I want to give him a friend, yet more delay is needed, I cannot thrust a stranger up to the unready face and say 'Here, love this man." Tastes must be cultivated. Prejudices must be broken down. Soul must have time to claim soul by slow manifestation of itself. But, finally, if what I want to give is character, then longest of all must be the process. The patient years must wait and be content to see a little touch and flush of its appearance. The soul must live in hope. The certainty must be a certainty of promise, not of attainment. Faith must be strengthened, and not weakened, by delay. 'Thus only could God give me Himself. It must be then himself that he is trying to give me.' So must the soul find satisfaction in being perpetually unsatisfied."—Phillips Brooks.

The Essentials of Education.

The ability to earn a living, to fulfil the primary duties of citizenship, respect for the rights of others, the possession of a sound mind in a sound body, are powers which are the result of obedience to physiological and social laws by the individual and his ancestors. The essentials of education are first to know what these physiological economical laws are; and, secondly, to have the opportunity and to form the habit of obeying them. After this may come other ornamental and less useful matters, and the less developed the intellectual endowments of a child the less room will there be for these purely ornamental subjects, and the more should his attention be claimed for the essentials. Our existing systems of school education ignore all this. A great deal of the grammer, classics, languages, not colloquially taught, scraps of modern and ancient history of doubtful truth, elementary mathematics and accomplishments as taught at schools, is absolutely useless in the making of efficient men and women to do the real work of life, and is so much pure waste of time. We should throw the greater part of this curriculum overboard, or, at any rate, give precedence to such incomparably important matters as the practical teaching of hygiene, the development of the senses and bodily powers by proper exercises, domestic and social economy, languages taught as an imitative and practical art, social and civic duty, and the training of the æsthetic faculties by music, drawing and contact with outdoor or natural life and beauty. Suppose an ordinary parent were to cut this out and send it to the schoolmaster who has charge of his boys, with a request that the plans sketched should be carried out, what reception would his letter obtain? Dr. J. H. Fleming.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in the Mission Rooms on April 9th, at nine o'clock, a. m.

Present: J. H. McNeilly, chairman; and Messrs. Bachman, Bryson, Chester, Gordon, Lupton, McDonald, Ramsey, Raymond and Reed.

The Treasurer's report showed total receipts for the month of March $19,153.00; also balance March 31st of $17,863.58. This includes the Congo Boat fund, which is something over $9,500.00, leaving us a balance available for general mission purposes of something over $8,000.00. The exact figures cannot be given until the Treasurer's books are balanced for the year. This is about one-third of the amount required to pay the warrants for the quarter beginning April 1st. The desirable thing would be to have balance enough to pay all these warrants at the beginning of the quarter; but we are very thankful that things are as well with us as they are.

The introduction to the annual report was read, discussed, amended and adopted. The historical portion of it was referred to a committee for examination. The report showed that there had been 522 additions to the Church by baptism in the various mission fields. This is an average of over ten to each ordained missionary in the field, which is considerably larger than the average for the home Church.

Miss Ada F. Kennon, of Lexington, Va., was appointed as a missionary, and Brazil was designated as her field of labor.

Dr. Edgar Woods was authorized by the committee to return home for a season of rest, on account of contined ill health. He will probably arrive the latter part of the spring.

The following persons were appointed as special correspondents for The Missionary in their various fields: China, Rev. P. F. Price; Japan, Rev. R. E. McAlpine: Korea, Rev. W. M. Junkin; Africa, Rev. W. H. Sheppard; Northern Brazil, Mrs. DeLacey Wardlaw; Southern Brazil, Rev. Rev. S. R. Gammon; Mexico, Rev. J. G. Hall.

Leave was granted to Miss Nannie Henderson to return to the United States in 1895. She will by that time have been eleven years in the field without a furlough.

The time of the committee was largely occupied in discussing business matters connected with their reports to the next General Assembly.

S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

NORTH CAROLINA.

St. Andrews, Wilmington:—Rev. Wm. Black has been with Mr. McClure and his people in this church since the Convention of Y. M. C. A. As a result of this meeting more than thirty confessed Christ, many of whom have already been received into the church, and many backsliders renewed their earlier confession. The church was greatly revived and blessed and the whole community shared the blessing. The prayers of this people follow brother Black to other fields of labor.

Winston, First Church:—The Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society gave a most delightful "Missionary Tea" Friday, April 6th, which was largely attended and richly enjoyed. A decided new interest was developed and it was exceedingly gratifying to note that the work of the society during the last church year was the most prosperous ever known—in spite of the hardtimes there was a marked increase in the contributions.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Reidsville:—It is with great pleasure and thankfulness to God that I can write you a few words about a most excellent "meeting" recently held in my church. Bro. Black, Superintendent of North Carolina Missions, came to my help March 23rd, and remained until April 2d, preaching twice each day with great force and earnestness. I thihk I can safely say that no minister who has ever visited our town, has so completely and universally won the hearts of the people. He did this, in a great measure, by his evident deep piety and consecration to the Master's work. No one can hear Bro. Black preach or be with him, without being conscious of the fact that he is "dead in earnest," and that he lives close to the Cross.

The meeting and its effects will long live in the memory and hearts of this people. There was no undue excitement, neither doubtful methods, but a plain and practical presentation of the truth with loving force and power. I am sure the Synod, through her committee, has made no mistake in putting this man of God at the head of this great mission work, and God grant that the Church may abundantly sustain him in his labor. On last Sunday, towards the close of the meeting, and it being our stated communion day, we received eight persons on profession, all in the bloom of youth with bright prospects before them. A number of others are expected to unite with the church very soon. Our heart has been made glad. Our church has been strengthened and greatly helped. To God be all the praise. PASTOR.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Hampden-Sidney:—The first day of April witnessed the dedication of Bethlehem church, fifteen miles west of this place. Mr. J. M. W. Elder, a member of the Senior Class has been supplying this church during the current year with great acceptance and has recently received a hearty call to become its pastor. The day was a pleasant one and a great crowd had assembled to manifest their interest in the ceremonies. Everything conspired to make the occasion an interesting and impressive one. Old Bethlehem church had been removed and a new building marks the site of the old one. When the hour for service came the church was already filled and a number were waiting in the grove and around the building. Dr. Moore was chosen to deliver the dedication sermon. When a student in the Seminary he preached his first sermon in the old church. Later when the lamented Dr. Latimer was installed pastor he preached the sermon, a fact to which he adverted in the course of his remarks, and now for the third time he stood up to lead the people in this new act of consecration. Dr. Moore, spoke well as he always does. Many have since expressed the opinion that his manner and matter on this occasion were characterized by unusual excellency. He took as his text Ps. 72: 17, "His name shall endure for ever." He delineated the remarkable growth of Christianity from its humble beginning on Calvary to the present time. Everything contributed to fervor of speech and feeling and the large audience, which filled not only the pews but all the available space in the aisles and before the pulpit, hung with fixed attention upon every word. In concluding Dr. Moore made pointed application of the facts in Christian progress to the solemnities of the hour. This new church, says he, and this formal act of dedication are but onward steps in the march of Christian civilization. At the conclusion of the sermon the large congregation stood and sang a hymn, after which the church was given to God in prayer. The keys were then transferred from the oldest elder to the hands of the deacons and the house committed to their care. The congregation went home well satisfied with all the exercises, and stimulated to livelier exertion in behalf of the kingdom of Christ.

Powellton Church, Accomac County:—We have just closed an eighteen day's meeting in Powellton church. The whole community was spiritually blessed. The church members were quickened, and the visible results of the meetings were as follows: Sixty-five professions, two bar-rooms closed, and a number of gambling hells ruined. Evangelist W. R. Gales, of North Carolina was with us for nine days and preached with earnestness and power. His methods are unobjectionable, and we can cheerfully commend him as an able and consecrated Christian worker. After Mr. Gale let us, we were assisted by the Rev. Mr. Sturgis, a Methodist minister, who is widely known in Virginia. His faithful preaching was also accompanied by the Holy Ghost, and many were brought to the feet of Jesus. Thus far, twenty-seven have united with the Presbyterian church. We believe that the Presbyterian church is rapidly growing in influence in this community, and has made many friends in the last few months. BYRON CLARK.

Rev. A. R. Shaw and Family, Waco:—Have recently moved into their new home. The good people of the Second Presbyterian church, Waco, anticipated the move and gave expression to their liberality in a very practical manner. The larder was supplied with articles too numerous to mention. The recipients express their gratitude for this fresh token of esteem. The pastor's home is now in a great measure unaffected by the stringency of the hard times. Grocery bills have temporarily lost their startling import. Friends who contemplate visiting the above mentioned home are urged to do so at once. "The ship has come in.".

From April 1st, 1893, to April 1st, 1894, there have been ninety-one accessions—seventy-seven of whom were received on profession of faith and fourteen by letter. There have been forty-four adult and seven infant baptisms. The reports to Presbytery show an increase in contributions of about 30 per cent. The congregation in attendance has increased at least 200 per cent.

PRESBYTERY OF NEW YORK.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Presbytery of New York held its April meeting on Tuesday, 9th inst., in the new school room of the old First church, corner 5th avenue and 11th street.

A full conservative delegation of seven ministers, and seven elders, and also of alternates were elected for the approaching meeting of the General Assembly at Saratoga. The Phillips Memorial church had leave to prosecute a call for the Rev. J. E. Bushnell before the Presbytery of Westchester, and a call from the newly organized Riverside church was placed in the hands of Mr. Becher, and arrangements were made for his ordination and installation.

The request of Rev. B. Douglas for the dissolution of the pastoral relation was granted.

Rev. G. W. F. Birch, chairman of a committee appointed last month, to consider a paper having the nature of a complaint from a large number of the members of the Scotch Church reported recommending the granting of their petition. Over two hundred members had presented a petition to the session requesting them to call a meeting for the election of new elders. But for reasons of their own the session declined to call such a meeting. The committee appointed by Presbytery found the trouble irreconcileable and made their report accordingly. After some discussion Presbytery negatived their recommendation, and went into interlocutory session, of which no report was to be made.

On rising and resuming the regular session, the following resolution was adopted, viz:

"That a judicial committee of five be appointed, whose duty it shall be, if the complaint be found in order, to digest and arrange all papers and prescribe, under the direction of the judicatory the whole order of procedure."

This committee was requested to report as soon as practicable. On the following day this matter was further discussed and its final determination was postponed to April 23d.

On this day also a number of students from different seminaries were examined for licensure, and their examinations were sustained by a thoroughly conservative committee, and the candidates received the congratulations of the moderator.

Rev. Dr. Howard Duffield, the pastor of the church, had been unanimously re elected moderator for the next six months. He was known as a conservative man. He had made an excellent moderator. And his rulings were eminently wise, prompt, and fair.

The whole outlook, in view of past difficulties seems full of promise.

May peace and purity of doctrine reign throughout the Church.

THE PRESBYTERY OF ORANGE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

This venerable body met in Mount Airy, April 10th. Rev. M. McG. Sheilds was elected moderator and Rev. W. S. Campbell and elder J. W. Scott, clerks. Present 18 ministers and 22 elders. A great deal of very important business was transacted. The new Directory of Worship was adopted. Rev. E. W. Smith with A. W. Culbertson for alternate and Elder G. W. Watts, of Durham with R. M. Denny, of Reidsville for alternate, were elected commissioners for the Assembly. There was a general re-organization of the various committees. Rev. D. I. Craig so long the faithful agent of Home Missions resigned and Rev. M. McG. Sheilds was elected as agent in his place, to have with him as a committee Rev. E. W. Smith, Rev. L. B. Turnbull, T. B Fuller and Beall. Elder T. B. Fuller, of Durham was elected Treasurer of the Presbytery in place of W. S. Moore who resigned. Rev. R. E. Caldwell was elected agent for Foreign Missions and Rev. J. McL. Seabrook, agent for Sabbath-schools.

It was determined to put two students in Ashe and Alleghany counties as Sabbath-school and colportage evangelists for the summer, and to do pioneer work in these counties where we have no organization. A feature of the session was the report of the remarkable work of grace in Stokes, from Evangelist Miller, and Elder R. W. George, of the Dan River church. There was a great deal of preaching and of the very highest order, and the congregations were very large. The weather for the most part was fine and the meeting a most delightful one in every respect. We feel that it was not only a source of great pleasure to the whole community, not only a great advertisement of Presbyterianism where it is almost unknown, but also a most precious means of grace to the entire town. To Our Ministers and Sessions.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you do us the kindness not to scatter our leaflets for the May collection for Foreign Missions which are being sent you, through the seats of the churches to be picked up or not as the case may be, but to hand them to some one in each congregation who will place them in the hands of the people?

Fraternally yours,

Acting Secretary.

Second Quarter.—Lesson V.

April 29th—Joseph Forgiving His Brethren.

Gen. xlv. 1-15. Commit vss. 3-5.

Golden Text. If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him. Luke xvii. 3.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. God's plan moves slowly but surely on. Jacob said, "All these things are against me" (xlii. 36) but he is to find out that "all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. viii. 28).

Like all wise policies there are far-reaching advantages not originally contemplated. We will see later the effect of Joseph's policy upon the internal affairs of the kingdom; we now notice the prominence and influence it gave to Egypt among other nations (xli. 53-57). Among the foreigners who came to buy were Joseph's brethren, and now the outlines of God's plan begin to emerge through the mist and darkness (xlii. 1-24). A youth changes much more than a grown man in ten or twelve years, while the foreign dress and language and exalted position served yet more to disguise Joseph, while his brethren were recognizable at once. His treatment of them was to test them to see if they were yet worthy of his confidence, and the test he gives is directed to find out how true they are to one another. He passes by Reuben, who as the first-born might have been held most responsible, because of his efforts to save him, which now, perhaps, he fully understands for the first time (vss. 21, 22). He chooses Simeon the next in age, and probably a leader in the attack upon him, as we know him to have been cruel and vindictive (xxxiv. 25; xlix. 5). The placing of the money in their sacks would test their honesty, cupidity having been as strong as cruelty in them (xxxvii. 26-28). The narrative brings out most strikingly the development of the better natures of the men; their quickened conscience (xlii. 21, 28, 35); Reuben's stronger manhood (vs. 37); and their candid confession about the money (xliii. 19-22). At the same time we note the increasing feebleness and unreasonableness of Jacob under old age and trouble (xlii. 29-xliii. 14). The crucial test, however, is when the cup is found in Benjamin's sack, to see if they will sacrifice him to save themselves (xliv. 1-17) In the noble appeal of Judah (vss. 18-20) we have one of the finest examples of simple, natural eloquence in all literature, while the changed character of the man shines out in every line. For ten or twelve years his heart has been wrung by the sight of his father's bowed and broken old age from the consequences of his own sin in the matter of Joseph. and he now can stand no more. Let him be sacrificed and Benjamin restored. It is here that the lesson begins.

Second Step. In this, one of the tenderest scenes in the Bible, note (1) The outburst of emotion long pent up (vss. 1, 2). In all these years one of his hardest trials had been the necessity for self-restraint, without a single one in whom he could confide. Even his marriage was an affair of state and probably did not bring him into confidential relations with his wife. In acting out his part with his brother, he had twice given way to his feelings (xlii. 24; xliii. 24-31). (2) His anxious solicitude for his father, manifested before under disguise (xliii. 27), but breaking out again in tender inquiry as the first expression of his heart as their acknowledged brother (vs. 3). (3) His consideration for his brother (vss. 3-5); (4) His clear view of God's providence (vss. 5-8); (5) His plans for their welfare (vss. 9-11); (6). Reconciliation and brotherly intercourse (vss. 12-15).

Third Step. Consult your helps, for any point of difficulty. We do not see anything calling for special explanation.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson including the events since the last lessen and compare it with ours.

SUMMARY. Among those who come to Egypt to buy corn are Joseph's brethren, whom he recognizes though they do not recognize him. He subjects them to various tests by which they reveal their character, and retains Simeon until they shall bring down Benjamin. Jacob at first refuses to permit him to go, but under stress of famine and Judah's becoming surety for him, at last consents. Joseph presents the supreme test by throwing upon Benjamin the appearance of having stolen his cup, and demanding his surrender to him to be his slave. The unwillingness of the others to give him up, and Judah's readiness to remain in his place, overcome Joseph's feelings and satisfy his mind, and he reveals himself to his brethren, pardons their sin against him, and arranges to bring them down to Egypt that he may nourish them during the five years of famine remaining.

Fifth Step. Take up topics of the lesson and study them in the light of God's Word.

1. Forgiveness of injuries.
   - a. Examples: 1 Sam. xxiv. 6, 7; 2 Sam. xix. 21-23; Acts vii. 59, 60; 2 Tim. iv. 16; Luke xxiii. 34.
   - b. Enjoined: Eph. iv. 32; Col. iii. 13.
   - c. The condition of being forgiven: Matt. vi. 12, 14, 15; Mark xi. 25, 26.
2. Joseph and Christ, concluded.
   - w. Convincing of sin. Gen. xlii. 21; John viii. 7-9.
   - x. Forgiving sin. Gen. xlv. 15; l. 17-21; Acts v. 31.
   - y. Bringing salvation. Gen. xlv. 7; l. 20; John iii. 16.
   - z. Purchasing a people. Gen. xlvii. 23-25; Tit. ii. 14; 1 Cor. vi. 19. 20.
   - aa. All families of the earth blessed in them. (Gen. xxii. 18). xli. 57; John xii. 32.

Sixth Step. The practical lesson is found in the first Bible Reading. Let us make it our own in practical experience.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

It is again necessary to remind teachers that the whole meaning of the lesson is lost unless it is treated as the sequel to a course of events that must be mastered. See that the scholars thoroughly understand how Joseph's different tests were designed to bring out their character in the very points in which he knew it to have been defective. God's providence and God's Word are directed to the same end, and it is the great mission of the gospel when applied by the Holy Spirit to search the heart and conscience, Ps. cxxxix. 1, 23, 24; John xvi. 8.

Prize Questions.

We wonder if our young friends were relieved or disappointed to see no new questions last week. It was an accident, but it enables us to postpone the answers due this week until next and so use a Sunday school article that would otherwise have been too long for our space,

NEW QUESTIONS.

49. Give an example from the O. T. of a girl who, like Joseph, showed youthful piety in a strange land.
50. What Psalm tells about Joseph in Egypt?
51. Find another instance of forgiving injuries, besides the examples in Bible Reading No. 1.

The Roll of Honor

AND HOW MADE UP IN THE DAVISON SABBATH SCHOOL.

Its object is to promote punctuality on the part of pupils and teachers and to encourage the school in committing the Scriptures and catechisms of our Church; trusting the teachers to secure a faithful preparation of the lesson by their own fidelity and example.

For the sake of fairness to the younger members, the school is carefully graded into Primary, Intermediate and Advanced Departments. If in the primary department, a pupil may have a place on this Roll of Honor by committing during the year and reciting at one time, perfectly, the whole of the Child's Catechism or twenty-five questions in the Shorter Catechism or thirty three verses of Scripture. In the Intermediate Department fifty questions from the Shorter Catechism or sixty-six verses of Scripture. In the Advanced department the whole of the Catechism or one hundred verses of Scripture. In each case a perfect recitation is required, the whole at one time and to the Superintendent or some teacher in the school.

On the score of punctuality, one must be present every Sabbath during the year.

Anniversary Exercises are held on the first Sabbath of April each year and a faithful report made by the Superintendent, showing as best he can, the condition of the school and work done during the year, moneys contributed and such other facts as may be of general interest. Prominent in this report is the reading of this "Roll of Honor" which is neatly and plainly written on a large reversible blackboard, kept for the purpose, and in bright colored chalks. * * * * At our Anniversary just past, April 1st, the following names appeared on this Roll of Honor for punctuality:

Johnnie Sparrow—not absent during the year—only once in 3 years.

Ralph Helper—not absent during the year—only twice in 6 years.

Bettie Brown—not absent a day in 3 years.

Rose Withers—not absent in 5 years.

For committing Bible verses:

Rena Potts, 50; Nola Sherrill, 50; Maggie Maxwell, 400; Mary Maxwell, 400.

Catechism:

Jennie Maxwell, 25; Bettie Brown, 25; Lottie Allison, (8 years old), 50; Nola Sherrill, 50; Rebecca Potts, 50; Rena Potts, 50; Lois Neel, 50; Lavallette Dupuy, 50; Roberta Hood, 62; Mary Marshall Dupuy, 108.

Honorable mention was made of Mattie Maud Vinson, aged 7 years, having recited 50 questions in the Child's Catechism.

For the further encouragement of the school the session of the church awards a nicely lithographed diploma to any one committing and reciting perfectly at one time the whole of the Shorter Catechism, and a nice Bible to any one committing and reciting during the year as many as 400 verses of Scripture, in sections of not less than 100 at a time. These last recitations, for diploma and prize Bible, must be made to the Superintendent.

Miss Mary C. Maxwell and her sister Maggie Leone Maxwell have now the Bible prize and Mary Marshall Dupuy the Diploma.

To these Anniversary Exercises the parents and friends of the school are invited and the exercises liberally interspersed with bright, cheerful music, selected and practiced before hand.

One other feature of our work we would mention in closing, and one which we find invaluable to us in keeping afresh in mind the catechism upon which we have spent so much work in earlier years. It is the custom in our school to devote the last Sabbath in each quarter to a general review of the entire catechism under our pastor; teachers and pupils alike (superintendent not excepted) taking a part, each answering in turn his question. Just here we beg to drop a kindly hint to the many teachers in our schools, so anxious to know how they may teach more successfully.

Teachers there is nothing like example. Always lead your pupils in whatever work you assign them. Seeing you in front, most little boys and girls are willing to follow. Couple Example with precept. How vain to expect your pupils present every Sabbath, unless present yourself, or a faithful preparation of the lesson unless you yourself come filled to the brim.

If any teacher reading these lines has a dull, stupid class, let him examine himself, applying honestly and faithfully the above test and if he finds himself at fault, let him go at once to the throne of grace and ask the Master to fill his heart with greater love for the noble work in which he is engaged.

And now, Mr. Editor, I have ventured this article in the hope that it may interest some and that it might suggest to others a similar article and thus may we provoke one another unto love and to good works.

Sincerely yours,

S. R. NEEL,
Superintendent.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Senator Zebulon B. Vance died last Saturday at his home in Washington City, in the 64th year of life. He was born in Buncombe county and when scarce arrived at manhood represented that county in the Legislature. Before he was thirty he represented his district in Congress, and since, with exception of a few years when he practised law in Charlotte, he has been in political life. He was thrice elected Governor of his State and at time of his death had been for many years her U. S. Senator. He was in many respects a most remarkable man. He had a native wit which of itself, in politics, would have been a fortune, but he was besides possessed of that bon hommie and that tact which gathered to him friends from every source. He was a farsighted politician and owed his success often perhaps to this sagacity, still he was intellectually a strong man. His speeches even on finance told on his auditors, on his constituents and on his country. Perhaps no man in North Carolina ever so fully held the people under his influence and certainly no politician ever was more idolized by his party. He was North Carolina's war governor and gained great credit as such. The usual honors attended the announcement of his decease in both Houses of Congress and the funeral arrangements. He will be buried at Asheville.

DOMESTIC.

Rev. J. P. Kershaw, a veteran of the Mexican and Confederate wars died in Camden, S. C., on Saturday night—aged 72.

The sale of the Richmond and Danville road has been ordered by the U. S. Appellate Court on foreclosure favor the Central Trust Company of New York. T. S. Atkinson, and M. F. Pleasants, of Richmond, and Charles Price, of North Carolina, were appointed to manage the sale.

David Dudley Field died on Saturday morning at 3 o'clock aged 89. He returned from Europe on Wednesday in apparently fine health and in good spirits. He was seized with a congestive chill Friday and never recovered. His code of civil and criminal proceedure has been adopted by many States and even if we are not mistaken by England. He was the brother of Cyrus M. Field who laid the first ocean cable and of Justice Field of the U. S. Supreme Court.

In Reidsville, N. C., March 29th, 1894, Dr. F. M. MATTHEWS, in the 49th year of his age. Dr. Matthews came to Reidsville from Tennessee about twelve years ago, and has steadily practiced his profession with quite a degree of success until a few days before his death. He was widely known and beloved. He was a graduate of Washington and Lee University and other institutions of learning. He will be greatly missed, especially by the poor. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church while a student at college, and afterwards of the Reidsville church until his death. He leaves a devoted wife and a host of friends to mourn his death. His heart-broken widow is the only daughter of the late Rev. Jacob Doll, whose memory is precious in the Synod of North Carolina.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, In the wisdom of God, it has pleased Him to remove from us, our beloved officers, Mrs. J. M. REID and Mrs. BETTIE CRESNELL, President and Vice-President of the Ladies Foreign Missionary Society, of Centre church.

Resolved 1st. That while we bow in humble submission, and recognize the hand of God in this afflicting Providence knowing that the "Judge of all the earth, will do right" and that "willingly He does not afflict His children," yet we deeply mourn the loss of our consecrated co-workers who for so long, were our beloved officers, and who by their exemplary Christian lives, and earnest zeal in the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom, won our hearts, and bind us to them, by no common tie.

2d. That believing our loss is their gain, in submission, we bow to the will of our Heavenly Father and say "not my will, but thine be done." "Even so Fnther for so it seemed good in Thy sight."

3d. That we will ever cherish their memory, emulate their virtues and take up the sickles "that have fallen from their hands and go forth to gather in the Lord's harvest.

MARY E. DIXON, only daughter of Geo. F. and E. R. Dixon, was born in St. Francis county, Ark., July 6th, 1872, and died at her home in Cross county, (only a few miles from where she was born,) March 12th, 1894. Never very strong, yet always bright and cheerful, and for the past three years teaching school the greater part of her time, her friends did not think there was anything serious the matter with her. But she knew her condition better than they, and those who knew her best are sure she felt that she could not live long. The summons came suddenly. Heart failure, but it found her prepared, for her whole life was one of earnest faith, and kind words, and deeds. Possessing many lovely traits of character she drew all to her, and of her it can be truthfully said,

"None knew her but to love her,
None named her, but to praise."

She was a successful teacher, devoted to her pupils, and greatly beloved by them, always a firm and true friend, a loving, affectionate daughter and sister. She was the life of her parents and only brother; now that she is gone the light has gone out of their home, but we know she has gone to One who loved her more than we, and we humbly pray "Thy will be done." She joined the Wynne Presbyterian church when only thirteen years of age, spending her life in her Master's service.

FOR THE FAMILY.

IN MOTHER'S PLACE.

"In mother's place"—so father said
His kind hand resting on my head,
While all the burdens of the day,
The care and trouble, fell away!
New purpose seemed to grow in me
To struggle for the victory,
And by the fireside's happy light
I breathed a silent prayer, to-night!

I never guessed in times gone by
How much there was to fret and try
The sweetest temper all day long!
Was it to-day when things went wrong,
I checked the hasty, angry word.
Hearing the tones my childhood heard,
Seeing in memory the while
The vision of a vanished smile?

The children, crowding at my side,
Need me, and will not be denied!
The home her presence made so bright
Needs me, and I must be its light?
The boys and girls too soon will go
From sheltering arms of love I know—
May the sweet influence of home
Be theirs wherever they may roam!

Yes! it is little I can do:
Yet faith in God will bear me through,
And give me wisdom to fulfil
My duty, since it is his will
That these, who need a mother's care,
Should find in me—bereft of her,
And longing for her loving face—
A guide and friend in mother's place!

Items for Lady Readers.

A gifted and philanthropic New Orleans woman has come forward and proposes to head a movement by which a monument will be erected in the near future to the great naturalist of the birds, of Louisiana, Jean Jacques Audubon. This lady is Mrs. James M. Bradford, a prominent member of the Geographic Club. A pretty story underlies Mrs. Bradford's design, and reflects credit upon her good, true heart. At her old home in West Feliciana, called "Rosemary," she learned many traditions of the great Louisianian, who as a boy, loved the little birds, and when he grew to be a man thought that he would write about them. She learned, too, at her mother's knee how Mrs. Audubon and his wife lived near "Rosemary," and how Mrs. Audubon was her mother's private tutrix during her early childhood. One of the old traditions of "Rosemary" was that Mr. Audubon once shot a turkey on the plantation and his great heart was so moved with pity at the accidental occurrence that he almost wept because he had inflicted pain upon a helpless animal. So in after years when Mrs. Bradford married and came to live in New Orleans, the memory of "Rosemary" was so fragrant that she perpetuated the name in her beautiful home on St. Charles avenue, where the rosemary clambers over the garden walks and nestles in the pretty rose-scented parlors. But the memory of the early stories she had heard of Audubon and his wife remained, too, and it has been one of the secret desires of heart to see the name honored as it deserves in his native Louisiana. Full of this thought at a recent meeting of the Geographics held at her home Mrs. Bradford read an interesting paper on Audubon, telling, as a work of love, all about his early life, the great book he had written upon the birds of the forest and how no man before him had ever succeeded so perfectly in bringing the birds just as they are out of the woods into a book, a book which costs so much that it is only found in public libraries of the country and occasionally in the larger libraries. Mrs. Bradford remarked in the course of her address that what had struck the world most with wonder and admiration had also touched a deep chord in her own heart, and this was the fact that Audubon, in his love of nature, had given in his book an exact picture in size, shape and color of its feathers of every bird, large and small, that sang, twittered, hopped and flew in the forests of Louisiana or swam in its rivers and streams. It grieved her that no attempt had been made to perpetuate in stone his memory for the children of a state for whom he had done so much, and for her part, not only as a sacred duty, but also as the touching memorial of the old friendship between Audubon's wife and her mother, she hoped to organize a movement by which a fitting monument might be erected to his memory in Audubon park in this city. Several of the most prominent educators of the state were present at the meeting and one or two profound readers, who complimented Mrs. Bradford upon her excellent paper as one of the most beautiful tributes ever paid to Audubon. Several evenings after one of these gentlemen called and expressed his desire to aid Mrs. Bradford in her plans to form an Audubon Monument Association for the purpose of collecting funds and erecting the monument, saying the work was one in which all the leading colleges and universities would assist. He proposed as a beginning that Mrs Bradford should publish her paper on Audubon in pamphlet form, the proceeds to be devoted to the forming of a nucleus fund for the building of the monument, and then to call a meeting of ladies and form the association, prosecuting the work with vigor. This, at the earnest solicitation of friends, Mrs. Bradford proposes to do, and it is understood that she is to be president of the association. Thus, after many years, through the efforts of a woman there is a prospect of paying the proper tribute of honor to the greatest naturalist that the United States has ever produced, and the story is all the more beautiful because on Mrs. Bradford's part the work is one of love and gratitude—"There is rosemary—that's for remembrance."

Things Useful.

Oil-cloths will last twice as long if a layer or two of wadded carpet lining are placed under them.

Shoe Polish.—An excellent shoe polish is composed of cosmoline and lamp black in equal parts. Apply this with tooth brush or soft rag. Then wipe the shoe off with another clean one. This polish preserves the leather and is an excellent dressing as well.

Bread Pudding with Cherries. Put one cupful (one half pint) milk in a double boiler. When hot add two ounces of stale bread crumbs, a grated rind of lemon, one tablespoonful butter. Cook ten minutes. Beat two eggs, without separating; add four tablespoonfuls sugar and another cup of milk; add these now to the boiler, then turn into a greased baking dish, sprinkle with dried cherries and bake in a moderate oven until a golden brown. Serve hot.

Cream Puffs.—In a saucepan put one teacup of water and one-half teacup of butter. Place on the stove to heat. While boiling add one and one-half teacups of flour. Remove from stove and beat until all lumps disappear. When cold add five whole eggs at once and a little salt. No baking powder nor extract. Beat all well, and bake in well-greased gem-pans in quick oven for twenty minutes. They will rise, leaving a cavity in centre to be filled, with be following cream. If not baked long enough they may fall. For cream, stir one-half teacup sugar, one-half teacup of flour and one beaten egg into one pint of scalding milk: flavor to suit.

A Curious California Weed.

In Santa Clara county, Cal., there grows a weed called the rattlesnake weed. It is so named from the story that when rattlesnakes get to fighting and bite each other, this weed, if eaten by them, will prevent death. It grows about six inches tall, has a red stalk and slender leaves. On the top of the stalk comes a head of flowers, and the seeds of these flowers are said to be very annoying to one in passing through a mass of them, as they are furnished with sharp barbs, commonly called stickers. The early settlers who had herds of sheep always made their herdsmen keep with them a bottle of strong tea made of rattlesnake weed, and when any of the sheep were bitten they were drenched with this tea, which always saved them.

Both Sides of the Question.

A man and his wife stood on the Brooklyn bridge, says The Million. He was a philosopher and a talker; she was a woman of action. A tug was hauling a long line of barges up the river.

"Look there, my dear," said he. "Such is life. The tug is like the man working and toiling, while the barges, like the women, are—"

His wife gave him no time to finish the sentence.

"I know," she said, "the tug does all the blowing, and the barges [illegible]"

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

FIVE LITTLE BROTHERS.

Five little brothers set out together
To journey the livelong day,
In a curious carriage all made of leather
They hurried away, away!
One big brother, and three quite small,
And one wee fellow, no size at all.

The carriage was dark and none too roomy,
And they could not move about.
The five little brothers grew very gloomy,
And the wee one began to pout,
Till the biggest one whispered, "What do ye say,
Let's leave the carriage and run away!"

So out they scampered, the five together,
And off and away they sped!—
When somebody found that carriage of leather
Oh my! how she shook her head.
'Twas her little boy's shoe, as every one knows,
And the five little brothers were five little toes.

A Visit To Grandma's.

Bright and early one June morning Aunt Susie Nelson started to the station five miles from home to meet her two city nieces—Fannie Rawles and Bertha Nelson, aged nineteen years—who were going to take their summer outing on the farm with grandma and Aunt Susie.

"Mother try to have dinner ready when we get back" said Aunt Susie, "for I know the girls will be hungry for a nice fresh 'farm' dinner after being cooped up in the city all the winter and spring, and not having fresh things to eat, like country folks."

"Very well Susie; don't worry about dinner, I think we will have it ready when you get back. Betsy is such a hasty cook. Hurry along now, if the girls get there before you, they may become tired of waiting.

"Betsy," said she, going back into the kitchen, "notice the chicken and don't let it burn; I will make a cake and you may bake the light-bread. And I must put fresh water to the milk, in order to keep it cool for dinner," and going to the dairy she turned off the water from the little stone trough and filled it again. "I know the girls will enjoy my nice fresh milk and butter" said she.

They were not long preparing dinner, and when the girls came they did relish the fresh milk and butter, also, the brown chicken, pickles, cabbages, light-bread, and best of all, peaches and rich cream for desert.

After dinner they took a short nap, and awoke much refreshed. They went around and looked at Uncle Simon's crop—he was an old black man whom grandma had hired to work on the farm for her.

* * * * * * *

"Bertha, oh Bertha, do get up," cried Fannie, "the sun is shining in the window so brightly and the birds are singing their sweet songs; they sound as if they were made of music, and it seems like their little throats will burst, they sing so loud. Do come look out the window at the grass and flowers, the dew glitters on them like diamonds."

"Oh how lazy we are!" said Bertha. "I was sleeping so soundly that even the birds did not wake me with their music. I hope we have not slept so late as to keep Aunt Susie and grandma waiting breakfast for us." After preparing a hasty toilet they made their appearance in the dining-room, but not finding breakfast ready, went and gathered some roses for the table.

"Aunty, how do you like that?" said Fannie, as Aunt Susie came in from the kitchen with a dish of hash, while she was arranging them on the table. "Oh, I think they are lovely. I do like roses so much any way, and especially before the dew dries off."

We slept so late that we were afraid you would be waiting breakfast for us, but when we came down and found that it was not ready, we went to gather some flowers."

"We knew you would be worried after such a long journey yesterday, and we had breakfast late so you could have a nice long rest and sleep" said grandma coming in about this time with coffee-pot in hand.

"Go and amuse yourselves in any way you can, girls, until dinner: Susie and myself will wash the breakfast dishes and get dinner, and then we all will take a walk over the fields."

They decided that the best way to amuse themselves was to help grandma and aunty, as they didn't keep a cook all the time. So on came long aprons, up rolled sleeves, and fair hands plunged into the dishpan. After helping with the dishes they went to the field to pick black-berries for dinner. They came back and helped to make pies, and get the rest of the dinner ready.

Bertha went out one morning to see aunty milk the cow, and as she had never tried to milk before, of course she must try now, but when she milked it on her nice clean dress and in her face instead of the milk-pail, and old Red raised her heels at her, she left, promising to let Red alone afterwards. Fannie decided that she would not try to milk, as Red might treat her in the same manner. They always helped with the churning and butter working, and liked it very much. Help after help for grandma and aunty, made pleasure after pleasure for Fannie and Bertha. They made use of their stay by rambling over the woods and field after flowers, by reading, working and visiting. They dressed so neatly, and in such plain attire, that nearly every one supposed them to be country girls.

Things went on very nicely for a month, then time came to return home, but neither one wanted to go.

Grandma and Aunt Susie took the girls to the train, and after they had promised to come again next summer they bade an affectionate good-bye, and off puffed the train.

"What two nice, smart girls" said grandma on her way home.

"And what a difference from most city girls" said Aunt Susie, with a sigh.

"I am sorry they had to leave so soon, we will be lonesome now they are gone."

Christmas came, but the old folks on the farm were not forgotten amid all kind of merriment in the city; for what should appear at the warehouse in the little town of Belmont, for "Mrs. Maria Nelson and Daughter," but a large box of fruits of all kinds, fine candies, dresses, lovely Christmas cards and everything that old folks could wish for.

Restitution.

BY KATE W. HAMILTON.

"Do you want to buy any pumpkins?" said a young voice at the window.

It was such an exceedingly business-like voice, and accompanied by such a very sober little face, that Mrs. Grey had to look twice before she could believe it was Ted Nelson's.

"Why, Teddy, is that you and are those your pumpkins? I thought you were saving every one of those for a Jack-o'-lantern procession when your cousin Ralph comes."

"Yes'm," answered Ted slowly, "but that was before—before we had the cup-hop, and Ned and me learned about resti tu-tion," bringing the long word out carefully. "Say, did you know all those verses about paying double, and making res ti-tu-tion, if a man destroys what belongs to somebody else were in the Bible?"

Mrs. Grey admitted her knowledge of the passages mentioned, but she could not see what connection they had with Teddy as a peddler of pumpkins.

"They've got a good deal to do with it,' said Ted, ruefully. "We've got to do it Ned and me, and we never knew about 'em till grandma showed us. Being sorry ain't enough, you've got to make res-ti-tu-tion.

"But your grandma didn't have any pumpkins? And if she did, how could you have spoiled them?" questioned Mrs. Grey in bewilderment.

"No'm; it was dishes," explained Teddy reluctantly at first, and then apparently determining to tell the whole story. "It was the sleight-of-hand man who began it. Did you go and see him? Well, maybe ladies don't care about such things' but boys do, and we went. You wouldn't have believed all the queer things he did— swallowing knives, and cooking eggs in his hat, and everything. Of course, we knew we couldn't do such things, but it did almost seem as if we might dance over the plates and cups and toss them up the way he did. Ned thought about it. He was lying on the lounge one evening and watching Lina set the table for tea.

"'You couldn't dance in and out over the dishes like the professor did, and tos up the cups without breaking 'em,' said Ned.

"'I could if I had 'em on the floor,' I told him.

"'Let's see you,' says he.

"It didn't take long to put some of 'em down, and I was hopping in and out among 'em, and tossing cups to Ned for him to toss back to me, when Lina came in again.

"'Ted Nelson!' said she, and she said it so like forty exclamation points that I slipped and came down crash on two saucers, and Ned missed the cup I'd tossed to him, too; it struck him plum on the nose, and then smashed on the floor. Of course, he howled, and then grandma came in."

Teddy paused as if the rest of the story were not easily told. "Well, it was that evening after Ned had his nose done up in court-plaster, she told us how being sorry wasn't enough, and showed us the verses. The worst though about cups and saucers—grandma's kind—is that you can't get one or two. You have to buy a whole set." Ted sighed, and then returned to business. "Want to buy any pumpkins?"

As soon as change could be made, and a great yellow ball deposited on Mrs. Grey's table, then the small red wagon passed on up the street, and the young vendor voice was heard shouting:

"Pumpkins! pumpkins!"

A few days later Ted met his old friend again, with a bright face.

"Yes'm, we sold 'em for enough to buy a new set, and an all-alone china cup besides, that has all pretty flowers and gold on it, and grandma says we can call it a reminder cup."

"Reminder of what?" asked Mrs. Grey with a smile.

"That one 'don't' beforehand is better than a dozen 'wish-I-hadn'ts' afterwards, answered Ted, promptly.—Morning Star.

VACANT CHURCHES IN FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Vacant churches, in this Presbytery, that have no immediate prospect of securing a pastor, but desire to have regular public worship during the summer months, may obtain the services of some competent seminary student by informing the chairman of Home Missions Committee, that they desire such service, and stating what compensation per week they can offer. Even churches, in debt to former pastors, or supplies, would find, not only their spiritual interest, promoted, but their financial welfare advanced by having regular public worship.

For a congregation to turn their backs upon the Almighty, and to allow the sanctuary to be closed for months, is a bad way to get out of debt and a good receipt for growing poverty of soul and purse. He, who will sow no seed will reap no harvest.

"There is that giveth and yet increaseth; there is that withholdeth more than is meet and it tendeth to poverty."

Children's Day Exercises For 1894.

Our Children's Day Exercises for this year were prepared for us by the deft hands of ladies of Augusta, Ga., and will be beautiful both inside and out.

The drawings for the engravings on the covers were made by the loving hand of one who found in that work for the Master, consolation in her bereavement and sorrow.

We hope that every Sunday-school within our bounds will avail itself of this means of helping our cause, and awakening a missionary interest among the children. The Exercises will probably be ready by the time this notice appears in print. Send orders at once to "Secretary of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church, P. O. Drawer 457, Nashville, Tenn.," and state number of copies wanted. They are furnished free of charge. By sending promptly you can receive them in time to prepare thoroughly for Children's Day which is the last Sabbath of May.

S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

It is easy to guide a horse by his mouth; but in the case of man you trust to his mouth and he will run away with you.

Reflect that it is only the fervent and diligent soul that is prepared for all duty and all events; that it is greater toil to resist evil habits and violent passions than to sweat at the hardest bodily labor; that he who is not careful to resist and subdue small sins will insensibly fall into greater, and that thou shalt always have joy in the evening if thou hast spent the day well.—Thomas a Kempis.

"Am I Married or Not?"

asked Mr. A., despondently, "I declare, my wife is so nervous and irritable that I don't stay in the house a moment longer than I can help. My home isn't what it used to be." "Mrs. A. is suffering from some functional derangement, I presume," said B. "Yes, she has been an invalid for years." "Exactly. Her experience is that of my wife, but she was cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Get this remedy for Mrs. A., and the happiness of your home will soon be restored." Mr. B. was right. For prolapsus, painful periods, irregularities—in short, all "complaints" peculiar to the female sex—the "Favorite Prescription" is a sovereign specific.

Rupture, or Hernia, permanently cured, or no pay. For Pamphlet and references address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

The advertising agency of N. W. Ayer & Son, of Philadelphia, is unquestionably the largest and probably the best equipped of any in the United States. It has more and larger patrons than any other, and, taking one thing with another, it is unquestionable whether they are not entitled to the credit of securing for their patrons better service than can be counted on from any other.

It should be, and doubtless is, a great source of pride and satisfaction to Mr. Ayer and Mr. McKinney that they have been able, while remaining in Philadelphia, to build up a larger advertising business than has ever been secured before by any advertising agency in New York or elsewhere.

RESTITUTION.

The selection and agreement to use in our Sabbath-schools the series of lessons from the International Committee has many incidental advantages. One of these is brought to mind and gives opportunity to commend it to all our readers in connection with this subject. It is the selection of daily readings parallel with the subject of the coming Sabbath. These readings may be found valuable at morning or evening family worship as well as helpful in preparing the lesson. In suggesting this we take it for granted that all our readers feel the need of giving some time every day to the study of the lesson as well as the duty of every family to have family prayers. One of these parallel readings for the lesson of April 15th, 1894, was Psalm lxix. The subject is both DAVID and DAVID'S LORD. It applies also to JOSEPH sold into Egypt. In the fourth verse the Psalmist says: "Then I restored that which I took not away." As DAVID by his avoidance of strife and vengeance and by his endurance of wrong was treated as guilty, though innocent, and by devotion to GOD restored peace and prosperity to Israel which he had not taken away; and as JOSEPH an innocent sufferer through bondage and imprisonment restored the blessing of temporal supplies and spiritual training to his father's house, so, and much more, our LORD JESUS CHRIST by humiliation and suffering, by obedience and sacrifice restored what He had not taken away, peace with GOD, peace from GOD, the peace of GOD, grace by the way and glory in the end.

In the light of such restoring whose fruitage in part is to restore unto us the salvation of GOD and to uphold us with His free SPIRIT, we may see how justly the Bible teaches the duty of restitution. That is not only restoring as far as possible what we have taken away but replacing it in the conditions before existing and with something added to repay for what has been lost or harmed. This does not refer to fair compensation for services rendered, to equitable reward for blessings ministered, to just wages or remuneration for time or talents employed. It does not apply to gifts of friendship or testimonials of affection or appreciation. Restitution is rather restoring what has been unjustly taken away with compensation for probable losses occasioned by the robbery—for, whether we realize it or not, whatever has been unjustly taken away is robbery. In Leviticus the sixth chapter this appears in the ways by which this robbery may be committed. If any one receive property or valuable in trust to keep or improve and by telling lies about it, manages to retain or withhold what should be restored, or if any one take away by violence what belongs to another, or deceives in a trade or sale, or should find what is lost and with falsehood fail to restore to the proper owner, the law says, and we dare not say less than the law, that such an one must not only restore but add one-fifth more thereto. This law has a generous, special application in the case of kinsmen who get property through the misfortune of their kindred. Let all such read carefully and ponder Leviticus XXV:25–8. Several particulars of guilt are given in the twenty-second chapter of Exodus which should be carefully considered. In the third verse it is required that the thief must restore what he has stolen and if the guilt be clear, as it is both crime and injustice, he must restore double. So runs the law of feeding cattle in a neighbor's field or stealing what is given in trust only. The special cases are only so many ways of saying: "Thou shalt not steal," and if any do they must make restoration. NEHEMIAH in the fifth chapter applies this law to usury as the people who had money made slaves of their brethren by usurious rates of interest. Money has value and for the use of it, subject always to charity, and kinship and the fear of the LORD, the owner may receive fair remuneration, but for usury he must make restitution.

It was a sight worth seeing when the aged SAMUEL challenged all Israel in public assembly to declare and show if he had ever wronged any man or taken aught unjustly. It is sadly true that few of us can do the same. We need rather like ZACCHEUS to say to the LORD that what we have taken from any man unjustly we restore fourfold. That is a sign of genuine repentance. It is furthermore a condition of peace of conscience. The prophet EZEKIEL referring to this wrote (XXXIII: 15). "If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die." This is no promise that a man may reform and so live as to earn eternal life. It is rather a law of life to the regenerated man, in the keeping of which he may have joy and peace in believing, that he may have life, and have it more abundantly.

This is the case here and now that if we would have peace of conscience and joy of the HOLY GHOST, we must make restitution, we must restore that we have taken away and add thereto all in our power to replace the time or talents or possessions we have taken away. In the failure to do this, and sometimes it is stubborn refusal to do so, lies much of the unhappiness of professing Christians, much of the barrenness of their lives, and lifelessness of their prayers and service. The cause of CHRIST is suffering and its progress retarded by it. For our own peace, for the help we may give others, and for the sake of the Church it is high time we all make restitution and cry for forgiveness that we have so long failed or refused to do so.

REV. WILLIAM BROWN, D. D.

This venerable servant of GOD passed away at his home near Clearwater, Fla., on the 23rd inst., in the eighty-third year of his age.

Dr. BROWN was a graduate of Princeton College. In Union Theological Seminary he was in the class with Dr. J. M. P. ATKINSON, the noted President of Hampden-Sidney College, who preceded him into rest, and Dr. GEO. D. ARMSTRONG, of Norfolk, who still lives and labors in a mellow old age.

Dr. BROWN was one of the historic figures of the Church. From 1865 to 1884 he was Permanent Clerk of the General Assembly. From 1860 to 1879 he was editor of the Central Presbyterian, during which time his rare prudence, excellent judgment and vigorous pen, were of incalculable benefit to the Church in guiding its counsels during the stormy period of its infancy and youth. From 1853 he was a director in Union Seminary which he served with devoted fidelity until infirmity compelled his resignation. He served as President of the Board from 1870 to 1874. He was for many years one of the most important members of the Committee of Publication, and his services were of the greatest value during the period of its troubles. He was chosen to represent the Church in the first Pan-Presbyterian Council in Edinburgh, and to bear the salutations of the Southern Church to the Northern in session at Saratoga, when "Fraternal Relations" were re-established. His last appearance before the Church at large was as a member of the Assembly at Baltimore in 1888 when he took a prominent part in its proceedings.

For a number of years he has been totally blind, and has been living in retirement at his home in Florida. His letters and conversation have indicated great resignation to GOD'S will and ripeness for his change. He had fought a good fight and awaited the time of his departure with assurance of hope.

HERE AND THERE.

THE "ARMY OF THE COMMON WEAL OF CHRIST" as it is called seems to give no one special concern. It gives no trouble, but to all appearance moves forward, generally, in a perfectly orderly manner. The railroads necessarily are annoyed with requests for transportation which may at any moment grow into demands, but the lack of interference with personal or property rights is under all the circumstances surprising. One thing is to be remembered, however; up to this time there has been no lack of food. The people of the districts have been quite ready to supply their wants and find their reward in the departure of the army from their borders. Moreover the numbers, though gathering steadily have not been large. As they approach Washington City from different quarters, especially when they unite at that point will be the time of testing whether or not trouble will come.

THERE HAS BEEN NO TROUBLE YET, but there is the making of trouble in this movement, possibly. Nothing like this, at least nothing on so large a scale, so deliberately planned and so persistently prosecuted has ever been undertaken heretofore in this country. The latter years of GEORGE III and the earlier of GEORGE IV., show cases as nearly analogous as the difference in the attainments in civilization will permit.

HE IS WISE WHO CAN FORETELL whereunto this shall grow. The politicians are scanning its proportions and not failing to measure its probable influence and power, while assuming an air of indifference which they hardly feel. The tincture of religion, or the counterfeit of it, which the army takes unto itself, may furnish just enough of conscientious, though utterly fanatical zeal, to make them dare and do when it is fanned into flame.

With all these possibilities of evil, wise and prudent management may disperse the army as with a puff of wind; and yet the wisdom and the prudence may be wanting. Who knows? History furnishes illustrations of both outcomes—results ludiciously trifling and results seriously tragic.

THE APPOINTMENT OF HON. THOMAS J. JARVIS to the U. S. Senatorship made vacant by the death of Senator VANCE, seems to give wellnigh universal satisfaction. The undoubted ability of Senator JARVIS commends him to the position, especially as this essential qualification is associated with the highest Christian character.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES—A MUCH NEEDED REFORM.

As the close of the seminaries approaches, we beg leave to suggest a sad weakness in our otherwise solemn and blessed setting apart of our young ministers by the laying on of the hands of the bishops; we refer to the superficial and fragmentary examinations.

These Presbyterial examinations are both a surprise and disappointment to the candidates, and often a mortification to the audience. For they are not a test of the student's capacity, and they make the impression of feebleness upon the auditors. I well remember the utter disappointment of a young elder, as, at the close of a feeble examination on theology, he said "I could have answered every question from the Catechism." Nor is theology the worst, but the reverse. Sometimes the examination on Church History comes no nearer the present time than the close of the New Testament! We forbear to specify further; but we know whereof we affirm, for we have contributed more than once to these performances.

We also know, from experience, the difficulty: it is that the examiner has not previously prepared an examination. Sometimes he does not know; usually forgets that he is a member of this special committee. As some one has well said, the present practice proceeds upon the theory that every preacher is omniscient, at least within the range of our comprehensive course; with a wave of the hand the moderator requests a brother to conduct an examination upon any one of these various branches; including Latin, Greek and Hebrew; to say nothing of those modest subjects called "science" and a "literary course." No professor in one of these departments would care to offer an examination upon his course, without at least an hour for arrangement; but the omniscient preacher is allowed only the time it takes the candidates to face the audience! In our earlier ministry we too contributed to these performances; but now we refuse to conduct any examination (save possibly theology) unless due preparation has been made—feeling that the whole thing is a farce.

We remember to have heard but one thoroughly satisfactory examination; it was upon theology and conducted by that priceless presbyter, Dr. E. D. Junkin. Dr. Junkin drew from his pocket a note-book, in which was written down carefully prepared suggestions; being upon this committee, he was prepared. Such a system of questions could be varied and improved upon year by year. That the excellence of this custom may commend itself to our committees is the purpose of this article. That our examining committees may speak, not out of the abundant fullness of a universal omniscience, but from careful detailed study and specific preparation.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Two Secretaries for Foreign Missions.

In several of our contemporaries the question has been raised, earnestly, as to the necessity for the election of two secretaries, by the General Assembly, for its Foreign Mission work.

For ourselves we have persistently maintained, for several years, that this was a growing necessity, demanded, by the rapidly increasing work and interest, in this department. There has been an addition of about thirty missionaries, $30,000 dollars, and of course, of correspondence with new supporters not easily measured, within the last two years. It is not denied that the duties can be discharged, in some fashion, by one man.

But it is strenuously asserted and no one, who is familiar with the situation, can deny it, that it is not possible for any one man to attend, properly, to all the present and ever enlarging demands of this position.

He must correspond with and visit applicants for appointment, he must visit churches and church courts, as well as correspond with many of these constantly, besides answering fittingly the multitude of letters from individuals, ministers, ladies, and ladies' societies. In addition to all this he must visit the colleges and seminaries and more time ought to be given to this than it has been customary to give to it.

In fact we think that the time has come when a short course of lectures should be begun, in all of our seminaries, on the history, problems, methods and results of Foreign Missions, with some brief consideration of the Ethnic religions and the social and moral conditions under them. But all this only looks toward the work, in the field at home. There are also 130 missionaries to correspond with, the official correspondence, with the missions and the careful consideration and study of the great questions of "ways and means" and policy and methods in each field, as well as the many matters, which are constantly coming up, of courtesy, comity and co-operation in connection with other bodies—in the field abroad.

Besides all this, whatever arrangement is made about the Missionary, the secretary is the only one who has that firm grip of the whole work, which will enable one to write with the confidence, force and patience, which the first pages of that magazine demand.

There is also a large field, still undeveloped, in the preparing of matter for Church papers, as well as secular papers—a method which has been adopted and presented so successfully by our Methodist brethren.

It is absolutely impossible for one man to do all of this work. Some of it must be neglected and the rest will be done in a less satisfactory manner, while he feels driven beyond endurance. We have given careful consideration to all sides of this matter and have a right to speak, with some confidence, about it. There is ample work for two men and they will have their hands full, with little time for necessary study, while the two spheres of labor will preclude any necessary clashing or friction.

But the question, at once arises, will not the expenses be very much increased? Yes, assuredly, if the two are paid at the rates paid one in the past. But many in the Church feel, and we think justly, that the salary of the Secretary may be and should be reduced, especially when the labor and responsibility is divided, and that $1,800, with a house, will be as much as will be necessary. We are at least confident with all the figures before us that for the work, here mapped out, two competent men should not cost much, if any, over $4,000 and the expenses of the office could be easily kept at less than 8 per cent of the receipts. Last year they were much larger than this amount.

Nor is it contemplated that either Secretary should be clothed with any of the duties of a financial agent. The experience of the Synod of North Carolina has abundantly demonstrated that there is a great deal to be done, on other lines, in developing the interest and cultivating the systematic generosity of our churches, especially in the country, by personal visits of those more familiar with the work, and its results, than the average pastor has been or can be. Many instances could be given where contributions have been doubled, or quadrupled even, in the year, simply by the systematic use of the old methods, hitherto neglected, with no special appeals and no damage to the other causes, rather helping them in most cases.

If this is true, in North Carolina, where the average per member was already high, what is it not possible to hope for, in some other States, where the average is still so low?

The Northern Presbyterian Church elected a Field Secretary, two years ago, in addition to its three or four other secretaries and the report to the Assembly, in Washington, was to the effect that the first years experience had abundantly vindicated the wisdom of the step. Whoever undertakes to do the whole work alone will be an object of pity. Only a very brave man would consider it. He will be foredoomed to failure or collapse from over work.

Our late hard working Secretary, as well as our worthy, acting Secretary, both have ardently advocated the importance and necessity of a Field Secretary. They ought to know something about the necessities of the situation.

The Church will come to see it.

A SILENT PRAYER.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen;
To make the music and the beauty, needs
The master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.

Great Master, touch us with Thy skilful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, thy form within us lie!

Spare not this stroke! do with us as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete Thy purpose, that we may become Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord.

AN HOUR WITH INSECT LIFE.

BY HENRY C. M'COOK, D. D.,
Author of "Tenants of an Old Farm," etc.

A Peep Within an Ant Hill.

Early in Spring, when frost has well vanished from the soil under the kindly influence of softer airs and warmer sun, one notices little heaps of sand or pellets of soil raised here there along the garden path, or above the joints that mark where paving stones have been laid against one another. Whence have these little heaps come? Always it will be noticed that in or near the center there is an opening, into and out of which numbers of yellowish ants are passing. They are members of the genus Lasius, and for popular purposes we may call them the yellow Lasius.

Let us follow one of these workers down the central shaft. We find ourselves in an inner chamber, or cavern, of irregular shape. Passing through this we are introduced into a gallery not unlike the tubular sewers underneath our city streets. Hurrying on we come to another and smaller chamber. Here our emmet guide pauses, and turning to the jagged sides of one of the walls begins with great energy to dig therefrom particles of soil. Comrades are engaged in like work all around the sides of this underground room. How is the digging done? By the mandibles; the tool for all work which kindly nature has bestowed upon ants. These are two strong, palmlike organs, toothed along the outer margins, concave underneath, and lashed to the vigorous jaws by stout muscles. They move backward and forward like the jaws of higher animals, except that their motion is horizontal instead of vertical. The sharp teeth tear into the earth, loosening particles of sand which are kneaded together in the hollow mandibular palm, a work which is aided by moisture secreted from the salivary glands. When the soil has been formed into a tiny ball the worker seizes it with its mandibles, which now become tools of carriage, and turning back upon her path hurries through gallery and cavern, mounts the shaft and dumps the pellet upon the fast growing heap outside.

What is the explanation of this process? The family necessities have required an enlargement of the family apartments. That is all. And the worker ants, or neuters as they are sometimes called, are busy making room for the large increase to the community which the coming summer will bring. The amount of work accomplished by a single ant is not great; but when this is multiplied by the host that constitutes a large formicary, and this again by the innumerable families and colonies that occupy the earth, the aggregate is enormous.

Nor is this without value to mankind. If one will walk across a meadow in early spring, and note carefully the surface, he will be surprised at the number of ant hills, great and small, within the field. All these are busy pulverizing the soil, shifting it from its position underneath the surface to a place on top of ground; and thus, in course of time, serving the agriculturist by giving to his farm a good top soil. The last book of Charles Darwin showed how the earthworm serves mankind by thus disintegrating and shifting the soil, and gave us valuable calculations of the amount of elevation accomplished within a given space by this useful but despised servant of our race. The writer of this paper many years ago made somewhat similar studies of like work wrought by the emmet hordes, with the conclusion that they deserve an honored place among the beneficiaries of agricultural man.

But of course our little insect is not to be credited with a philanthropic motive. It is only intent upon the role which nature, in some mysterious way, has impressed upon that wonderful bit of nerve organism which serves it for a brain. It knows—how it knows who shall say?—that there shall soon be need for larger rooms; that the family mansion must be increased to accommodate the coming younglings who are to add to the number and power of the community. This work goes on not only underneath the ground by excavation, but within trees and wood, where carpenter ants work by a somewhat similar process, and upon branches of trees, where paper-making ants, like paper-making wasps, are busy enlarging their communal bounds. The civic domain is enlarged under the spur of a communal instinct which forecasts the future. Certainly the moving force is an affectional one, or at least that analogue of affection, however termed, which exists in the ant's mental organism. The whole wondrous economy of insect architecture is, at its pivotal point, the instinctive purpose to provide for the young members of the household. It is the spirit of education that "forms the common mind" of an ant hill, and moves the common actions thereof, even perhaps to a greater degree than in human society. We might well take the emmet community as a model for ourselves in this regard.

Thus one comes naturally to consider that individual of the ant community around whom more than any other the social life is organized. The ordinary reader is familiar with the idea of a "queen bee" and a "queen ant;" but it may be doubted whether the exact value of the terms is well understood outside the circle of special observers. One's idea of a queen is that of a ruler, with power absolute or limited. No such being has place within an ant hill. The queen's sole function is to produce eggs, from which the ant family is recruited. Except in the very first stages of a new community she does not take care of these eggs; for the workers, who are themselves undeveloped females, seize them as soon as they are dropped, and bear them away to the nurses, that none of these precious atoms may be lost.

The queen may be seen surrounded continually by a circle of guardian workers, who by courtesy are known as "courtiers." It is curious and interesting to watch the manner of these courtiers toward their queen. No doubt they are careful of her and watchful in the extreme. No doubt they would lay down their lives at any moment to protect her from harm. But none the less their office seems to be to keep the queen within bounds, rather than to contribute in any wise to her administrative power. The guardian circle never leaves her. If the queen moves they move with her; if she stops, they stop with her. Indeed her movements are more or less regulated by her attendants.

I have often watched, in my artificial formicaries, the methods by which a queen ant would be persuaded here or there, to this or that behavior, by her courtiers. One would seize an antenna, the most sensitive part of the organism, and by a gentle pull thereon would persuade her majesty to turn her head to this side. Another would co-operate in this persuasion by nipping in its mandibles the last joint of a royal leg, and by tugging thereat add the weight of its influence to turn the royal head into the course desired. Still a third would gently nip the skin upon the abdomen, and by a persuasive pinch and pull join with the associated courtiers in advices to their sovereign lady. If by any chance, as I have sometimes seen it, the queen should escape from her attendants, and attempt a solitary promenade upon the upper surface of the formicarium, she would soon be followed by an eager if not indignant group of courtiers, who by the process just described would succeed, though sometimes with difficulty, in convincing the errant monarch that her duty to her subjects required her descent into subterranean regions to resume her functions within the sacred circle of guardian courtiers. Surely, if this be a monarchy, it must be a constitutional one—a very constitutional one indeed!

I have sometimes wondered whether her Imperial Majesty of Great Britain has ever studied the habits of an ant queen? If so, has a sympathetic smile brightened her kindly face as she has perhaps considered the wonderful analogy between the methods of prime ministers and courtiers generally, as they are illustrated in English history, and the analogous methods that prevail among the pigmy courtiers within the catacombs of an ordinary ant hill?

No doubt our emmet friends are governed by the wisest instinct in thus watching their queen's actions. Certainly, without her the community would soon be extinct. The waste of life in an ordinary formicary is great. Multitudes are continually perishing beneath the careless tread of human beings and cattle. A man or woman can hardly walk the garden without destroying many lives of busy creatures intent upon errands of their daily life. Birds pick them up as a delicate morsel; toads and serpents are fond of a menu of living ants, and other creatures prey upon them. Therefore it becomes necessary to recruit the community day by day; and the number of recruits must exceed the daily waste, if the social power of the family is not be diminished. No wonder, therefore, that the fertile queen is a person of such consequence and is so carefully guarded. But it may be asked "Is she able to meet such demands upon her fecundity?" Quite so. The number of eggs which an ordinary queen can lay in any one season amounts to many thousands; and the possible capacity of a single queen no doubt reaches scores of thousands of fertile eggs.

I was permitted to note the touching interest which focuses upon the queen of a formicary, while visiting Sir John Lubbock, one summer morning, at his home in London. This distinguished naturalist had succeeded in preserving two ant queens to a marvelous age, one of these having reached the vast antiquity of fourteen years! This longevity was due to the careful protection extended by Sir John and his attendants; for it is true of emmet herds, as well as of domestic animals, that they thrive under human protection. As I greeted Sir John on the morning referred to, in response to an invitation to breakfast with him and some of his friends, I inquired at once about the health of his ancient queen.

"Alas, Doctor," he cried, "I have sad news to tell you. My old queen is dead."

"Dead?" I exclaimed. "That is sad news indeed. When did she die?"

"Only last night," was the response, "and I have not yet told even my wife about it; for I dare say she will feel as badly over the loss as myself."

Perhaps this may seem trivial to the ordinary lay mind; but to Sir John Lubbock and the writer it was a serious matter, for it ended one of the most interesting experiments as to the prolonged life of invertebrate creatures that the world has ever known.

"May I see the queen?" I asked.

"Yes, she is just here in the adjoining room."

Turning aside from the waiting company of distinguished persons who were to sit with us at breakfast, we went to see the dead queen. She lay in one of the chambers, as I have described them, resting on her back, with her six legs turned upwards and bent in the rigor of death. A crowd of courtiers surrounded her. Some were licking her as though in loving care of her toilet. One would nip an atenna, and another a leg, and by various other solicitations sought to arouse her. Alas, there was no response. It was curious and touching, as well, to watch their methods.

"They have not yet accepted the fact," said Sir John, "that their queen is really dead. Indeed, I doubt if they are fully persuaded thereof. They have been surrounding her thus, and trying to get some response from her ever since she died."

So we left the royal death room. Whether this interesting creature was taken by its kindly guardian and placed in a collector's bottle or upon an entomological pin, or left for interment at the hands of her devoted courtiers, I never learned. But no one who witnessed that scene could doubt the strong interest and affection with which the venerable queen ant was regarded by her subjects.

Speaking of interment it may not be amiss to say that ants have a curious habit of carrying the dead of their own community from the confines of the formicary depositing them together in a convenient spot outside the bounds. So far as I have observed they do not treat the carcass of an alien ant in this way, but appear to show this mark of respect to those of their own community alone. This is the basis of the popular notion that ants have cemeteries for the burial of their brotherhood. I have verified the fact to the extent above stated, and the point opens an interesting field for larger and more accurate study by some enterprising lover of emmet life.

It has been said that the ant egg when dropped by the queen is seized by one of the attendants and carried away to the nurses. These receive it, and place it in one of the chambers along with others of its kind. In a little while the egg becomes a little white worm, or larva, with a greedy appetite for sweets. It is as helpless as a human baby, and as dependent upon the care of adults. That care is not wanting. It is pleasing to see the fashion of these nurse-ants with their younglings. They cleanse them carefully with their tongues, which are well fitted by their roughness for that purpose, the necessary moisture for the bath being supplied by the salivary glands. No particle of dust is permitted to cling to the delicate pubescence that covers the soft skin of the tiny antlings. They are constantly shifted from point to point, apparently with a canny regard to the degree of heat or the amount of moisture that may be most wholsome for their development. In fact the architecture of some of the more finished structures of these and other insects is, no doubt, due to an instinctive regard for the necessities of the young, and is so arranged that the varying degrees of moisture and warmth, in the external world, are regulated by the varying positions and structure of the internal arrangements. Thus an even degree of temperature is secured by shifting the sensitive antlings nearer to a sunny spot on the surface, or farther away from a moist place, or to a deeper point in the interior where the heat is less intense, or to which the moisture and cold do not penetrate.

One can hardly fail to notice, also, the common characteristics of maternal fondness in dealing with these baby ants. The nurses shift the little ones back and forth, from one position to another, as far at least as a human being can judge, without having bettered the matter in the least. Seemingly they have only indulged the fancy of a mother to move about her baby just to gratify her own affections. They even appear to me at times to take the little things up and dangle them, as though they loved to fuss over them, after the fashion of a young mother with her first infant. However all this may be but "anthropomorphism," a state of mind from which the observer of social insects can scarcely ever wholly escape.

But how are these helpless creatures fed? A full explanation would require a better knowledge of emmet anatomy that can here be given. Let it suffice, therefore, to say that ants, like bees and some other hymenopterous creatures, store away food within what is known as a crop or false stomach. The contents of this crop are under the control of the proprietor, who reserves them almost exclusively for the benefit of the emmet public. A squeeze upon the little lace-like bag of muscles that surrounds the crop operates like the pressure of a lady's hand upon the bulb of a spraying bottle, and the sweet contents thereof are pressed through the œsophagous, out of the mouth, and thence into the mouths of the baby ants, who perk up their blackish brown heads and open wide their jaws to receive it. By the same method foraging ants who have gone abroad to secure nectar and other supplies and have returned to the formicary laden with the same, communicate of their abundance to the hungry workers and nurses who have been toiling within the community bounds, while their sisters were off upon their excursions. It is a remarkable and interesting example of the division of labor as it exists in these insect communities.

REV. G. D. PARKS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

This faithful servant of God passed away some months ago, but as his friend and former co-laborer, I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without adding my testimony to his worth as a man and as a minister of Christ. Whilst a student of Columbia Seminary I met with the Presbytery of Mecklenburg in the spring of 1873, then in session at Sugar Creek church, and was there taken under the care of the Presbytery. Here I first made the acquaintance of Dr. Parks, who as pastor of the church, gave me that thoughtful attention which a young man and a stranger feels so much the need of. The next spring, at the close of my second year in the Seminary, I was licensed and assigned work for the summer in Hopewell church. The pastor, Rev. J. C. Williams, being disabled. The following spring I became pastor of this church and for seventeen years labored in the Presbytery on most intimate terms with Brother Parks. From the very first I was drawn to him as a most genial companion, wise counselor and true friend. He was a man after my own heart. So sincere was he, so transparent, so hearty in his professions of friendship that I could not help trusting him implicitly and loving him dearly. I was very soon, at his suggestion, placed on the committee of Home Missions of which he was chairman, and the many hours spent with him, in Presbytery and in his home, prayerfully considering this vital interest of the Church will long remain with me as a precious memory. The better I knew him the more I esteemed him as an humble, devout, consecrated, servant of God. Great things for himself he never sought. He understood and appreciated and illustrated that divine saying: "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant." Nothing so much engaged his daily, constant thought, as his Master's worth and his Master's work. Always of frail constitution, frequently a great sufferer, yet his labors abounded in every charge to which he was called. He was emphatically a soul winner. This single purpose—the glory of God in the salvation of men—directed and dominated his ministry of nearly forty years. His life-long prayer seemed to be, "Lord withhold whatever may be meet, but fail not to give me souls for my hire, seals for my ministry." The Lord heard his cry and answered him in precious seasons of grace and great ingatherings. It is said that Dr. Thornwell, perhaps the greatest thinker and theologian of his age, was constrained again and again to lament a barren ministry. But not so with my, dear, departed, brother. His very first year's work was a Pentecost. Not less than two hundred persons were added to Steele Creek church during the first year of his ministry. His health failing him, he became evangelist in the mountain counties of Henderson and Transylvania. From this field he removed to Third Creek in Rowan county, and about 1866 he became pastor of Sugar Creek church in Mecklenburg county. Here he labored faithfully for ten years and at one time during this term of service there was a whole year of revival. The presence and power of the Spirit was constantly manifested in arousing careless Christians, reclaiming backsliders, and bringing sinners to repentance. "And the Lord added to the Church daily such as were the saved." His next field of labor was Sharon church in the same county and here as elsewhere his labors were greatly blessed. Not only at the church, but from house to house he went preaching the Word, and such was his kind and cordial manner that he won all hearts. None were so poor or ignorant or sinful that they should be neglected by Dr. Parks. The result was that in about two years there were over one hundred additions to this church. At Amity and Mulberry in the same county he effected new organizations and aiding in building new houses of worship. Mulberry and Williams churches, composing his last charge, were greatly strengthened by his wise and faithful ministrations. A writer in the Charlotte Observer says: "No one in this county has done more in the past forty years to build up Christ's kingdom than he whom the church and the city mourn to-day." Dr. Parks and Col. John L. Brown were members of the committee of Home Missions from the organization of the Presbytery in 1869 until their recent death, and I shall ever esteem it an honor to have been so long associated with two such men in efforts to establish and enlarge the Kingdom of Christ.

A SOLITARY WAY.

There is a mystery in human hearts,
And though we be encircled by a host
Of those who love us well and are beloved,
To every one of us, from time to time,
There comes a sense of utter loneliness.
Our dearest friend is "stranger" to our joy,
And cannot realize our bitterness.

"There is not one who really understands,
Not one to enter into all I feel;"
Such is the cry of each of us in turn:
We wander in "a solitary way."
No matter what or where our lot may be,
Each heart, mysterious even to itself,
Must live its inner life in solitude.

And would you know the reason why this is?
It is because the Lord desires our love.
In every heart he wishes to be first.
He therefore keeps the secret key himself
To open all its chambers and to bless
With perfect sympathy, and holy peace,
Each solitary soul which comes to him.

So when we feel this loneliness, it is
The voice of Jesus saying, "Come to me."
And every time we are not "understood,"
It is a call to us to come again;
For Christ alone can satisfy the soul,
And those who walk with Him from day to day
Can never have "a solitary way."

And when beneath some heavy cross you faint,
And say, "I cannot bear this load alone,"
You say the truth. Christ made it purposely
So heavy that you must return to Him.
The bitter grief which "no one understands"
Conveys a secret message from the King,
Entreating you to come to Him again.

The Man of Sorrows understands it well;
In all points tempted, he can feel with you,
You cannot come too often, or too near.
The Son of God is infinite in grace;
His presence satisfies the longing soul
And those who walk with Him from day to
Can never have "a solitary way."

MAGAZINES.

McClure's Magazine is filled with several timely articles. It is pleasingly illustrated each month and grows in interest.

St. Nicholas for April has a well filled table of contents. Among its interesting serials Tornett's Philip is concluded in this number much to the regret of its readers. Illustrations always abundant and good.

FINANCIAL AGENTS AND OUR HOME MISSION WORK.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

To carry the discussion of improvements in the management of our Home Mission work a little further (in view of the approaching meeting of the Assembly), I would like to add to one point made in my recent article. I can best introduce the matter by quoting from my last article the following: "Let the secretary (being relieved of a large amount of office drudgery) go out among the churches—on the one hand to visit the Home Mission field, and see its wants and prospects—and on the other hand to visit the stronger and wealthier churches, as many as practicable, and make personal appeals to them in behalf of Home Missions. Or let the secretary do the work of a treasurer (dispensing with the salary of officer) and let the Central Committee employ a suitable man to go out among the stronger churches and raise Home Mission funds. In other words, let the Central Committee be relieved of a large amount of detail work in disbursing the funds (and put that upon the Presbyteries), and let that committee turn its attention and energies more particularly to raising funds. The disbursement is comparatively easy (if we have the funds)—the gathering of the funds is the important and vital part."

To the above suggestion it is replied by some that our Assembly has repeatedly decided against the system of financial agencies. My answer is two-fold: (1) The laws of our Assembly are not like the laws of the Medes and Persians; one Assembly can reverse the decision of another. (2) These former decisions, so far as they apply to Home Missions ought to be reversed, because they discriminate unfairly against Home Missions in favor of Foreign Missions. In other words the Assembly is tacitly, and even by positive sanction—in the way of approving annually the action of the Foreign Mission committee—allowing the Foreign Mission committee to use personal solicitors to appeal to the churches, in the persons of the dozens of outgoing and returned missionaries, besides the Synodical agents for giving special information on Foreign Missions—all this in addition to the regular appeals through the pastors and sessions, and the printed appeals of the setretaries. Now I do not argue against this policy of the Foreign Mission Committee, for it has been successful, and well established experience and precedents for many years, in the management of the Foreign Mission work, proves the value of this course. But I argue that it is not fair for the Assembly to choke off our Home Mission Committee from pursuing a similar course to that pursued by the other committee, and it is an unjust discrimination against Home Missions, and is working badly.

Further, I would relieve the fears of some of my brethren who are horrified at the thought of financial agents, (and who are continually bringing up the experience of the old Church, before the war, as being disgusted with financial agents), by saying that my idea of the use of this means is that it should be used in such a modified form that it would not be objectionable. In the first place, I would not call such a minister a financial agent (as the Foreign Mission Committee is wise enough not to call its workers financial agents), although for the purpose of bringing my suggestion out distinctly, I have headed this article, "Financial Agents." I would have one man, at present, to work in this capacity, and let him be called co-ordinate secretary, or field secretary, or let the present secretary devote a large part of his time to this kind of work, if he can be spared from office work. Let it be understood that he makes a special study of Home Missions, and that he comes before the congregation to give them special information and Gospel instruction on the subject. Let him preach a sermon, or series of sermons, bearing on Home Missions, and bringing out the teaching of the Scripture on giving. Such a course of education would help the pastor in his own church finances, and help the Foreign Mission Committee, and other committees of our Church, by educating the people on the subject of benevolence, in addition to the education the pastor gives regularly.

Again, I would have such a field secretary to be a prudent man, who would not force himself and his cause upon a pastor and congregation in an obnoxious manner. Some financial agents may become nuisances, and to be dreaded, by the manner in which they present their causes. I would have this secretary by a prudent correspondence with the pastors of the stronger churches obtain their consent to allow him to present the cause of Home Missions before their congregations. Such a course instead of being objectionable would be helpful to the pastors. Nobody complains of being hurt when our Foreign Mission Committee gets up an enthusiastic meeting at Louisville, or New Orleans, and has two or three departing or returned missionaries to instruct the people and appeal to them; although these missionaries, or the secretary himself, may take off $2,000, or $3,000, as the result of the meeting, nobody is hurt, and the Foreign Mission cause is wonderfully helped. Why can we not pursue a similar course in Home Mission work? The writer recalls several instances in his own experience as pastor of a small church. By direction of a Presbytery an arrangement was made for an exchange of pastors for one Sabbath, in order to present a very urgent appeal for our home missionaries. The brother who occupied my pulpit for that occasion preached two good sermons to my people, and left a very pleasant impression, and raised nearly fifty dollars, while if the collection had been taken up in the ordinary way by the pastor it would have hardly amounted to more than ten dollars. At another time a president of a college visited my people, when my church was scarcely self-sustaining, and employing only half my time. He preached two or three good sermons, and in a pleasant way presented the claims of the college, from the pulpit, and by visiting a few members of the church. The result was he raised in money, subscriptions, notes and land over $600. If the cause had been presented in the regular way by the pastor the contribution likely would not have exceeded twenty-five dollars. A similar experience has occurred with me on other occasions, when the brethren who made a speciality of a certain cause appealed far more successfully to my people than I could have done, and my people were not hurt but benefitted. The argument could be fortified by referring to facts of this kind at much greater length. The plan that I suggest is not likely to overrun the Church with a dreaded army of financial agents, but to employ at present one, and at the most only a few gifted brethren, who would do the churches they visit a valuable service, leaving good gospel impressions with the people, and at the same time successfully drawing out liberal contributions. In this way only a few (a hundred possibly) of the stronger churches could be visited in a year, and the next year different churches, while the most of the churches of necessity must still be urged to contribute as liberally as possible through appeals of the pastors, and with information sent out by the secretary in circulars, and through the papers.

The plan I advocate has not only been proven to work well by the experience of the Foreign Mission Committee, and by the work of colleges in raising endowment funds, but is confirmed by our experience in preaching the gospel. The same truths of the gospel might be printed and sent out to be read by the people, and while they might be blessed in doing good, yet we all know that the effect of the living minister, facing his congregation, and appealing to them, is far more powerful in good results than printed appeals could possibly be. This shows the philosophy in the methods of our Foreign Mission Committee that have been so wonderfully successful even in the midst of a financial panic over the country, and when our Home Mission Treasury was running down to a disastrous point.

If it be said that my argument would apply to the other committees, I would say say: Yes. Let it so apply. As to Publication it might not be necessary (except in an emergency such as occurred many years ago), because the profits of publishing help to sustain that work. But our Educational Committee would do well, in my judgment, to imitate the methods of the Foreign Mission Committee, as far as practicable. They would not then be telling us so often the doleful tale of an empty treasury, and candidates stopped in their education. As only a few churches would be visited each year by each secretary, it could be so arranged that only one secretary should visit a church in a year; or even if three secretaries should visit the same churches in a year, our strong churches would not be likely to be hurt, but rather helped by this work.

Another feature of success might result from the plan that I urge. When the secretary would visit the strong churches (and even some of the weaker churches have individuals that are very wealthy) he would have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with some of the elect ladies and gentlemen whom God has endowed with large wealth. He might by his public appeals, or in private conversation, get some of them interested so that they would be willing to leave large legacies, at their death, to Home Missions—or give in large sums while yet living. In this way much of the endowments of our colleges has been raised.

Well Shod.

Thousands of Church members need now to be shod anew with the stout shoes of allegiance to Christ, well spiked with his commandments, "He only that walketh uprightly walketh surely." A Christian must not only be held himself, but help to hold others and to draw society Godward. Unless the Christian has a strong foot-hold, he is liable to be dragged downward into conformities with evil customs. The shoes which our loving Master provides for us are of divine manufacture. They are an "easy fit" to every consistent follower of Christ; are lined with love so that we can walk without being galled or become footsore on either rough roads or icy paths. These are the sandals of alacrity, such as the Word commends, and the wearer of them is swift to "run in the way of God's commandments."—Dr. Cuyler.

One hour of solitude passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or the conflict with and conquest over a single passion or subtle bosom sin, will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the schools without them.—S. T. Coleridge.

A NEW YORK ESTIMATE of the ELECTROPOISE.

Electropoise.
TRADE MARK.

An advertisement of the Electropoise appears in another column. There have been so many curative instruments put upon the market, ostensibly merely to cure disease, but really to cure the leanness of the manufacturer's pocket, that this article deserves a special word of praise. Not wholly convinced by what the Electrolibration Company's agent said, the Observer's representative sought an interview with Dr. De Puy, of the New York Christian Advocate. This gentleman said that with no personal interest in the Electropoise, save that inspired by the wonderful good that it had done him, he gave the Company the letter published in another column of the Observer. He was enthusiastic about the system; and has recommended it very heartily to others. Accounts of similar enthusiasm come from other quarters, and as far as we can learn, we feel sure that our readers may safely and with great benefit use the Electropoise. Mr. Du Bois, the Company's agent, at 345 Fourth Avenue, New York, will cheerfully forward all information.—N. Y. Observer, Feb. 22nd, '94.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Enoree Presbytery, held its spring session at Woodruff, S. C., April 10-13, and the meeting was pronounced on all sides to be the finest of the many fine meetings which this body has held. The attendance was unprecedented, every minister on the roll except three in the Foreign Mission field, was present and thirty-seven out of fifty-three churches were represented, giving a total enrollment of fifty-six, besides seven visiting ministers. The house too was crowded every day by the people of the town and country around, who evinced a hearty interest in the proceedings. A most excellent spirit prevailed throughout the meeting and all the business and discussions went forward smoothly, pleasantly and successfully. Two conferences, one on the State of the Church in the Presbytery and the other on Foreign Missions proved exceedingly interesting and profitable, and the many reports from the churches gave encouragement and promise. The Home Missions Committee reported a balance in the treasury and the prospect of success under the Assembly's new plan, which went into operation the 1st of January. This committee also proposed a system of grouping of the weak and vacant churches of the Presbytery, and the arrangements for the supply of several of these groups were effected at this meeting. Calls from Bethany and Old Field churches were placed in the hands of Licentiate B. R. Anderson, and he was examined with a view to ordination and installation as pastor of these churches on the 2nd Sabbath in May. Mr. J. E. Milner, of the Senior Class in Columbia Seminary and Prof. J. F. McKinnon (late of North Carolina), President of Chicora College, Greenville, S. C., were licensed to preach the gospel.

A call from Nazareth church was placed in the hands of Rev. R. E. Henderlite, and the pastoral relation between Rev. J. W. Query and Wellford church was dissolved.

The Presbytery adopted the same overture which Bethel Presbytery had adopted to send up to the General Assembly in regard to changing the constitution with regard to the licensing of candidates.

Rev. Tho. H. Law, D. D., and Elder F. M. Farr, of Union were elected commissioners to the General Assembly, with Rev. T. M. McConnell, D. D., and Elder F. L. Anderson as alternates.

The next regular meeting of Presbytery is to be held at Glenn Springs on September 11th.

Savannah Presbytery, met in Waycross, Ga., Wednesday, April, 11th, 1894, Rev. J. P. Wood preached the opening sermon, Rev. C. C. Carson was chosen moderator, and Elders Hansel, of Thomasville, and Preston, Marlow, clerks. Present, eleven ministers and sixteen ruling elders.

Commissioners to Assembly: Rev. C. C. Carson and Elder W. O. Waite, principals; Rev. L. C. Vass, D. D., and Elder C. S. Wood, alternates.

Dissolutions: Granted between Rev. R. S. Brown and Brunswick church, and Mr. Brown dismissed to Columbia Presbytery; and between Waycross church and Rev. W. S. Porter, who contemplates entering the Foreign Mission field.

Installation: Rev. W. A. Nisbet was received from Cherokee Presbytery, and accepted the call from Second church in Savannah. Order was taken for his installation on Second Sabbath in May; Rev. L. C. Vass, D. D., to preach the sermon and charge the people; and Rev. R. Q. Way to charge the pastor; Rev. E. W. Way to be alternate to both.

Directory for Worship adopted.

Foreign Missions: Rev. W. A. Nisbet was made chairman of the Foreign Mission Committee in place of Rev. R. Q. Way, who resigned on account of feeble health. A commission, with Mr. Nisbet as chairman, was appointed to consider the practicability of the Presbytery supporting a Foreign Missionary, and arranging to do so, if possible.

Home Missions: An elaborate report of the exact condition of the Presbyterial field was presented by Rev. L. C. Vass, D. D., and the resources for the current year. As chairman of the committee Dr. Vass was authorized to proceed with the work on the lines proposed.

Colored Evangelization: One colored minister is at work in the only colored church in Presbytery. He also teaches a school, and the work is progressing slowly but surely.

Narative: The general state of the churches is encouraging. Additions 146 for the year; the largest being in First church, Savannah, which reported thirty-three added.

Rev. J. G. Griffiths, D. D., was granted permission to labor at Bainbridge until the next meeting of Presbytery.

Next Meeting: At Flemington, Friday, November 16th, 1894.

The Home.

The road to home-happiness lies over small stepping-stones. Some men are at home everywhere; others are at home nowhere. He is happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home. The first indication of domestic happiness is the love of one's home. Some persons can be anywhere at home; others can sit musingly at home and be everywhere.

A Bethel.

Many an old, despised school-house has been a Bethel to many a soul. Bare walls, bare seats, bare floors prove no hindrance to heavenly glory. If you could hear the tender tone and see the gladly lighted eye and realize something of the contrast between the peaceful, praiseful days and days not far distant, you would say with me: "Enough, enough for much labor and prayer."

FOREIGN MISSION NOTES.

A postal card received at the Foreign Mission Rooms, Nashville, April 16th, from Rev. R. B. Grinnan, of our Japan Mission, contains the following information:

"MADISON MILLS, Madison county, Va.

"I arrived here safely with my two little girls after our long and tiresome trip. We had a very quick and pleasant trip across the Pacific reaching San Francisco April 1st. I was detained several days in San Francisco because one of my little girls was quite unwell. I just send this postal card to let you know of my arrival.

Yours in Christ,
E. B. GRINNAN."

"All well in Japan when I left."

Mrs. W. M. Thompson, of Smithville, Va., expects to return to Brazil on Wednesday, the 18th inst., accompanied by her child. They are to sail from New York city in the afternoon of that day per S. S. Gregory, of Booth & Co.'s line. Mrs. Thompson writes that she is feeling very much better than when she came from Brazil.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Concord Presbytery:—We publish official proceedings in another column. A friend writes that the Sabbath-school convention was a decided success. The annual report to the Presbytery shows decided improvements in every department of the work.

Lincolnton:—A friend writes that during the recent sessions of Mecklenburg Presbytery most excellent sermons were preached and the sessions were closed by a beautiful exhortation from the moderator. On Sunday, 15th, the new house of worship was dedicated. Rev. J. L. Williamson preached a timely sermon from the words: "Watch and Pray," &c. He delivered a charge to the people. Rev. R. F. Campbell made the dedicatory prayer.

Second Church, Charlotte:—"Your foot note to the statement of the Second church is an error. We raised $23,000 church debt in addition to the $9,862 for congregational purposes. In your issue of 19th."

The foot note referred to above: "This includes amount collected on the church debt subscriptions," we simply copied from the Deacon's Report as it had been published. Of course we knew nothing, but supposed that the amount collected included, probably, only a few hundred dollars at most of the church debt subscription.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Danbury Church:—Rev. C Miller writes that Danbury church was orgaaized April 8th, 1894, with thirty members. Mr. A. H. Joyce was elected, ordained and installed elder. Three other members were received on certificate on Sunday night, April 15th. We are hoping soon to begin work on our church and school.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Fayetteville Church:—Rev. A. J. McKelway, pastor, has had a prosperous year in spite of the hard times—perhaps because of them. It has raised $5,000 for all purposes; has completed a new lecture-room for the Sunday-school and prayer-meeting services; has given more largely to Foreign Missions than before and besides helping in the erection of two churches in the Presbytery, has been active and successful in its own mission work. All the organizations of the church are now committees for special work, responsible to the session, and the whole church meets once a month in the interest of Home and of Foreign Missions. At the annual congregational meeting the pastor reported sixty-nine additions to the church—fifty-three on profession, and thirteen by certificate; infant baptisms, fifteen; adult baptisms, eighteen; sermons and lectures, two hundred seven.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Henderson:—For some weeks past in connection with protracted religious services in different churches in Henderson, there has been an unusual degree of religious interest. The Presbyterian church has shared the blessing from God's Holy Spirit. The officers and members have been aroused to extraordinary activity and zeal. At the last communion service, on the 15th of April, Rev. Dr. W. D. Morton announced the names of thirteen persons whom the session had admitted to baptism and to the Lord's Supper.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Graham Street Church, Charlotte:—The annual report of the Graham Street church, Charlotte, for year ending April 1st, 1894, shows a very gratifying progress, and is as follows: Elders, 2; deacons, 5; members added on examination, 45; on certificate, 22. Total additions, 67. Total membership, 215. Officers and teachers in Sabbath-school, 17. Scholars, 182. Total of funds collected for all causes, $709.30.

During the year we added three to our board of deacons which is now more efficient than ever before and we closed the year free of debt.

Beginning with January last we celebrated the Lord's Supper on the first Lord's day in each month and call the church roll to see who is absent.

So far this has resulted in a very gratifying increase in the attendance on that ordinance. On Monday, the 16th of this month, we organized a Ladies' Missionary Society, as the result of Bro. Sampson's visit to us a few weeks ago.

Charlotte, April 20th.

Durham:—Two persons were received into the church of Durham upon profession of their faith in Christ on Sunday morning the 22d inst. Rev. L. B. Turnbull, the pastor, is preaching with great acceptability to the congregation and is steadily growing in the affections of the people.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Fayetteville Church:—Was delighted at the large attendance at Presbytery and was edified by the unusually good preaching with which it was favored. Four candidates were licensed to the gospel ministry and preached their trial sermons to large and appreciative congregations. The sermon of Mr. A. A. McGeachy, who has taken the regular course at Union Seminary, was most favorably criticised. The Presbyterial sermon, preached this year by Rev. J. H. Johnston, upon the Importance of Church Discipline, was a thoughtful and scholarly discourse. Sunday the pulpits of the sister churches; of the town were occupied by our ministers; Dr. Hill, Mr. Eldridge, Mr. Arrowood and Licentiate Campbell being distributed liberally and impartially. The Presbyterian church was crowded to hear the morning sermon by Rev. W.M. Eldridge, and Dr. Hill administered commnion to perhaps the largest body of communicants in the history of the church. Among them might have been noticed sitting together three old ladies who have been members of the church here for more than fifty years. The pastor announced the names of five new members. At night Rev. W. B. Arrowood preached an excellent sermon, and then was ended a week of delightful Christian fellowship and sound, instructive, Scriptural preaching.

TEXAS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Items from Texas:

The Church at Crockett:—Is steadily increasing in membership The Sabbath-school, prayer-meeting, and Ladies' Missionary Society are kept up with a lively interest and zeal. The town and surrounding country are steadily increasing in population. The country that sustains the town is good farming land, producing corn, sugar-cane, peas, goobers, hay, &c. A considerable number of cattle and hogs are raised. A cotton-seed oil mill located in Crockett makes considerable business, and has furnished feed for fattening nearly one thousand beef cattle. The schools in Crockett are well maintained, with a full corps of teachers, and a high grade of instruction. The Mary Allen Female Seminary for colored girls is doing a grand educational and Christian work for the colored people. The Bible is a regular text-book in that institution, and the girls are taught to sew and do house-work. Im igrants coming to Texas would find desirable homes at Crockett, and in the surrounding country. While there are not many openings for other lines of business, yet there is a large amount of good farming land in the country that can be bought cheap, or rented at moderate rates. This county is on the whole healthy (except on the creeks and rivers), is well watered, and is not liable to long droughts. It is also fairly well supplied with free schools and with churches.

Lovelady:—Also in Houston county, and on the International and Great Northern railroad, is a small growing town, supplied with a good school, and with Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Campbellite churches. It is also located in the midst of a good farming country. The Presbyterian church while yet weak has been steadily growing. Rev. W. K. Marshall, D. D., has been assisting in a protracted meeting. While he is eighty-five years old he still preaches with clearness and force the sound truths of the gospel. The people have attended well, and seem interested, but no additions to the church. Yesterday was our communion day. A large congregation was present, and a goodly number of communicants at the Lord's table.

Nevill's Prairie:—Is the name of a small Presbyterian church, six miles west of Lovelady. This little church also has been steadily gaining in membership. It is located in the midst of a small and thickly settled prairie, with a population mostly of farming people.

On the whole the prospects are quite hopeful for steady growth in the Presbyterian churches of this county (ten Presbyterian churches in the county), and for the growth of other Christian churches. The Methodists and Baptists have more churches and a larger membership than we have.

The Churches Generally:—In Eastern Texas are improving and gaining ground, and this section of the State is either prospering, or at least holding its own very well, in the midst of the generally prevailing financial depression. While the larger number of immigrants go into the large cities, or into the western portions of the State, yet the eastern section of the State is rapidly developing and affording advantages that might well attract a large immigration.

ALABAMA.

Dedication:—On Sunday, 1st inst, as we learn from the Alabama Presbyterian, the new Central Presbyterian church in Montgomery was dedicated. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Wallace, of New Orleans, and Rev. E. P. Davis, pastor of the First church, Montgomery, and Rev. W. E. McIlwain, superintendent of Synodical Home Missions took part. The history of the church, was read. It was organized on July 30th, 1891. In the fall of that year Rev. Neal L. Anderson became pastor. One hundred and twelve members have been added since its organization The church which is an exceedingly tasteful and comfortable one capable of seating 400 persons, cost $23,000.

DEATH OF MRS. DICKSON.

[EDITORIAL.]

Mrs. Margaret M. Dickson died at her home in this city on the afternoon of Monday last at 3 o'clock, in the 74th year of her age. For several weeks past she had been suffering from a painful affection of the heart, and it was only too evident to those who watched beside her that her life was drawing to its close.

Mrs. Dickson, with the exception of her surviving sister, was the youngest daughter of Gen. James Owen. In her youth she was noted for her personal beauty, evidence of which was seen to the end of her life, in the clearly chiselled features, expressive eyes, and the general air of dignity and refinement that characterized her countenance. She was endowed with fine mental gifts that were carefully cultivated in the best schools of New York. The grace of God early added the charm of piety and the graces of Christian character.

In 1845 she was united in marriage to Dr. J. H. Dickson, who rapidly rose to a position of highest eminence not only in this community but throughout the State. His life and labors constitute one of the proudest elements in the history of this city. As the mistress of his home, Mrs. Dickson dispensed its hospitalities with a grace and dignity that is remembered by all who partook of it, among whom were the most prominent visitors to our city from this and other States. As the daughter and wife of Presbyterian elders and the sister of a minister, she especially delighted to extend the hospitalities of her home to the minister of the gospel, to whom this home was always a delightful haven. For many years one of the features that added interest to her household was Uncle Moreau, the Arab slave, whose liberty Gen. Owen had purchased, but who always remained with them in grateful service.

The death of Dr. Dickson, as a martyr to the yellow fever, changed all this For months it was feared that Mrs. Dickson would not survive the strain and shock of that time. But when she re-opened her home under altered circumstances, it was only to show more beautifully the nobility of her character; no more as the dispenser of lavish hospitality, but as the gentle, considerate, thoughtful friend, striving—though often with slender means—to bring into the lives of others all the happiness she could. A bunch of flowers or a basket of vegetables from her garden, a kind message, or a loving inquiry—these were the kind offices that made up her life, and with them she brought more of love and sunshine than wealth could buy.

This meagre sketch would be incomplete were no mention made of her devotion to her church. No rain was too heavy, no heat too intense to keep her from the services of God's house. On Sunday, morning and evening, and Thursday prayer meeting, the pastor knew that there were two faces that he would see—those of Mrs. Dickson and the sister that was ever at her side, and often when he went to preach at the Mission chapel that was distant from their home, their faces were the first to greet him.

She bore her last illness, which was one of great suffering, with exemplary patience, showing through it all, and to the very end, the same thoughtful consideration for others that had characterized her whole life. It was from her bedside that on the last Sunday of her life, and with her example before his eyes as a living illustration of his subject, that her pastor went into the pulpit to preach upon the text that was so richly fulfilled in her: "Let patience have her perfect work; that ye may be perfct and entire, wanting nothing."

CHEERING.

Since the first of April I have sent our candidates about $3,000. The heart of the Church is warming up to her sons. We wish to pay the seminary candidates in full if possible by the first of May, and those in the colleges by the time their terms close. Let us not be weary in well doing. Ere our month of April closes we wish to remind all churches and pastors who have sent us noth this month, how great is our need of their help. Any amount sent us by the 10th of May will go into this year's report.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

LETTER FROM CHAPEL HILL.

Chapel Hill has been in luck of late. We have gotten several things that we have been wanting a long time, and never had before, and we have had several valued visitors, some of whom came to criticise us, and some came for the express purpose of doing us good; all of them we were glad to see whatever their errand.

First, we had the Rev. Dr. McGilvary so long a missionary to carry the Gospel into the regions beyond. He is a man whom we must esteem for his work's sake and must love for his own. It is a great privilege to see such a man, to have him for a guest, to hear him discourse. He gave one interesting lecture in the Presbyterian church. In conversation the Doctor is especially agreeable. Overflowing with information—with affectionate zeal for his work and his great church of Siamese Presbyterians over yonder, still there was apparent the inextinguishable love of North Carolina and her people that fires the very citadel of his heart. For one who has been thirty-eight years in heathen lands, he has a wonderful amount of information about this State and its affairs, its prominent men and the churches. He accounted for this when he said he had been a faithful reader of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN in all these years of exile from home.

Next we had the usual spring visitation from the Board of Trustees of the University. These are they who came to criticise. Among them was David Worth, of Wilmington. Everybody is always glad to see Mr. Worth, but I think the University is specially glad when he comes, for he comes as friend and lover and the old poplar and the oaks must wave all their tops when they see such an alumnus treading the accustomed walks.

This body of visiting critics gave only words of approbation for the direction of affairs in the University. President Winston has, as he well deserves, their full confidence and support, and they endorsed his administration in every particular.

In fact the President has developed an unexpected amount and degree of ability all around his lines, and has shown a vigilance, sagacity, and energy which have surprised those of his friends who know him best. The students of the University endorse him as heartily as the trustees— and when a man's pupils and children do that, he may face the world outside.

Then we had a visit from Dr. Smith, of Greensboro, who gave us two such sermons as our young men do not often hear. And I wish some of our young preachers would take a hint and endeavor to learn to read a hymn as Dr. Smith reads it. He makes that reading a part, and a very impressive and precious part of the service.

After sixty, if a man is of any 'count at all he grows continually more and more interesting, and more and more valuable and lovely. He ripens. He has not the glory and the freshness of his prime, but he is ripening, and as every day in passing adds a touch of benignity, or of wisdom, or of self-renunciation, his face assumes more and more the look of those who have preceded him a little way—the happy souls

"Gone home to God in autumn time."

One of the things we dwellers on the Hill top have long been wanting and now have at last attained is a printing press for the use of the University. It should have been placed here ten—fifty years ago. A printing press is a civilizer, a radiator of light, heat and electricity and several other of the imponderables which we all know move the world.

And the Presbyterian church has called and secured the services of a pastor, Rev. D.Currie, graduate (and valedictorian) of the University, 1889, and now on the eve of graduation at the Columbia Seminary. Our congregation gave him a unanimous call. New Hope will join with us and we hope to lift up our heads once more.

Second Quarter.—Lesson VI.

May 6.—Joseph's Last Days.

Gen. l. 14-26. Commit vss. 24-26.

Golden Text. The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.—Prov. iv. 18.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Review rapidly the intervening history: The preparation for Jacob's journey and his reception of the news (xlv. 16-28); the journey and God's approval (xlvi. 1-7; the list of those who came (vss. 8-27); the meeting betweem Jacob and Joseph (vss. 28-34); the presentation to Pharoah, the arrangements for Jacob's household and Joseph's subsequent administration (xlvii. 1-26); Jacob's last days, prophecies, death and burial (xlvii. 27-l. 13)

Second Step. Master the points of the passage before us, noting: the unworthy distrust on the part of Joseph's brethren and the (probably invented) message from Jacob, vss. 15-17; Joseph's wounded love, magnanimous forgiveness, recognition of God's purpose and Providence, and tender care for them (17-21); his peaceful and happy old age (22, 23); his dying faith (24-26.)

Third Step Take up any points of difficulty and examine them with all the light you can get from your helps.

Vs. 14. Returned into Egypt. They could have remained, but God's purpose in taking them into Egypt was something more than to preserve them from famine. It was to train them into a nation, and for that cause He sent the famine and ordered all the circumstances of Joseph's life.

Vs. 15. Will hate... and requite. After living for years upon his bounty they were still incapable of appreciating the nobility of his nature. They judged him by their own lower natures.

Vs. 16. Sent a messenger, cowardly now just as before (xxxvii. 32) when they sent the coat.

Thy father did command. An improbable story; the confidence between Jacob and Joseph was too close for him to have sent a message through them, even had he thought the admonition necessary.

Vs. 17. Joseph wept. Grieved at being misunderstood, and disappointed that all his kindness and God's providential dealings had worked no more change in their natures.

Vs. 20. The Golden Text of Lesson III, and the key to this whole history.

Vs 25, Ye shall carry up my bones. Jacob wished to be immediately buried beside his loved ones (xlvii. 29, 30; xlix. 29-31). Joseph's family ties were in Egypt, and here he was content to repose until God visited his people.

Vs. 26. Put in a coffin in Egypt. That unsepulchered coffin entrusted to the care of the Israelites was a perpetual reminder that in Egypt they had no continuing city.

Fourth Step. Make a summary—including the connecting links of history—and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. Pharaoh having provided transportation for Joseph's family, Jacob with all his children and grandchildren and cattle ar brought down into Egypt, and Jacob's last days are spent in peace and blessing in the land of Goshen. He blesses his children with prophetic insight into the future, and charges them to bury him in Machpelah, which is done with almost royal honors. Joseph's brethren fearing that his forgiveness was only forbearance for his father's sake concoct a message from Jacob, which deeply wounds Joseph's love, but brings out new assurances of pardon and promises of protection and care. Joseph's last days, like those of Jacob, are full of all the blessings that old age can bring, and in dying he declares his faith in the restoration of Israel to the land of promise, and requires that his bones should be carried with them. His body is embalmed and "rests in hope"

Fifth Step. Take up the leading topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

A peaceful old age.

a. Its causes.
   - Filial piety. Eph. vi. 3; Gen. xlvi. 29.
   - Keeping God's commands. Prov. iii. 1, 2; Gen. xxxix. 9.
   - Finding wisdom. Prov. iii. 13, 16; Gen. xli. 39.
   - Trusting in God. Ps. xci. 1, 16; Gen xli. 16; xlv. 7.

b. Its blessings.
   - Peace. Ps. xxxvii. 37; Gen l. 22.
   - Honor. Prov. xvi. 31; Gen. l. 26.
   - Children's children. Prov. xvii. 6; Gen. l. 23.
   - Spiritual illumination. Golden Text; Gen. l. 24.
   - Hope beyond. 2 Tim. iv. 6-8; Heb. xi. 22.
   - A witness and inspiration to other generations. Heb. xii. 1; Ps. xxii. 31; Ex. xiii. 19.

Sixth Step. Lay to heart the practical teachings. In Joseph's life see the secret of his honored end. In the strange failure of his brethren to understand the fulness of his pardon let us see how often we wound our Elder Brother by the same lack of confidence. If we could only understand the fulness of his forgiveness, we would never doubt his love or seek to propitiate him with poor excuses, but would come boldly (Heb. iv. 15, 16).

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Point out the further parallel this lesson gives between Joseph and Christ as shown in the Sixth Step, and in the Bible Reading show how every point given about old age is illustrated in the last days of Joseph.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF APRIL 5.

46. A variety of correct answers may be given. We give all that are found in the answers of our correspondents. Some answers we had to count out as too indefinite, such as "Jacob," "Christ" without giving any incident. References to Joseph are of course ruled out. The Questions are based upon the lesson that the lesson may be illustrated from other parts of the Bible.

a. In the Old Testament.
   - The attempt to destroy the boys of the Hebrews resulting in the exaltation of Moses. Ex. i, ii.
   - The banishment of Moses preparing him to lead out the Israelites. Ex. ii, iii.
   - The persecutions of the Israelites in Egypt making them ready to be led out. Ex. iv. 31.
   - Balaam called to curse is led to bless. Num. xxiv. 10.
   - The destruction of Baal worship through Jehu's false pretense. 2 Kings x. 18-31.
   - The captivity of the Jews. Ezek. xiv. 22, 23.
   - The persecution of the Hebrew children by Nebuchadnezzar. Dan. iii. 29.
   - Casting of Daniel into the den of lions. Dan. vi. 25-28.
   - The plotting of Haman, Esth. iii. 8-10; viii. 15-17.
   - The afflictions of Job. (Job. xlii. 12).

(We cannot receive Jacob's deception as an instance. Jacob did not get the blessing through his deception as we have pointed out in these lessons. Evil never brings good to the one that works evil. The law there is Gal. vi. 7).

b. In the New Testatament.
   - The death of Lazarus. John xi. 15, 45.
   - The crucifixion of Christ. Acts ii. 23.
   - The sin and death of Ananias and Sapphira purifying the Church. Acts v. 11-13.
   - The persecutions of the Christians spreading the gospel. Acts viii. 1, 4.
   - Saul going to Damascus. Acts ix. 1-18.
   - The Imprisonment of Paul at Philippi. Acts xvi.
   - Paul's shipwreck, Acts xxvii, xxviii. 1-10.
   - Paul sent to Rome as a prisoner fulfilling his purpose to preach Christ there Acts xxviii. 16, 30, 31; Rom. i. 13, 15.
   - John receiving the Revelation when banished to Patmos. Rev. i. 9, 10.

47. Jeremiah, Jer. xxxviii. 6. (Some gave Daniel, but why should we think the "den of lions" was a "pit"?

48. Daniel, prime-minister in Babylon, Mordecai, prime-minister in Persia. Dizraeli, prime-minister in England. (The first was the one I had reference to as Mordecai's ministry may only have been for this special occasion, and Dizraeli's is outside of the Bible, but the other answers were given and both are correct.)

Correct answers have been received as follows:

Chas. P. Russell, Rockingham 46, 47, 48.
Lila Lane, Mt. Vernon Springs, 46, 47.

Fannie Bouchelle, Patterson, 46, 47, 48.
May Bouchelle, Patterson, 46, 47, 48.
Annie Cromartie, Garland, 46, 47, 48.
Mary Knox Johnston, Lincolnton, 46, 47, 48.

Tribute of Respect.

Our senior brother elder, WILLIAM MURDOCH, having passed his own generation, by the will of God fell on sleep and was laid unto his fathers;" we who remain behind would offer as a tribute to his memory the following testimonial:

William Murdoch was born at The Knowe, near Ochiltree, Ayrshire, Scotland, on 4th of November, 1811, and died at his home in Salisbury, N. C., 30th of December, 1893, aged 82 years, 1 month and 26 days. His boyhood was spent on his native heath and after learning the trade of stonemason, he, at about the age of 21 left Scotland and came to New York City, and soon afterward moved to Raleigh, N. C, and was employed in rebuilding the State House which had burned down in 1831.

In 1838 he was married to Miss Sarah S. Colburn and the union thus formed remained unbroken for nearly three-score years and was severed by his death. For a number of years he followed his chosen profession of master builder and contractor in stone work, and the many substantial buildings and railroad bridges now in daily use attest the superiority of his work.

During the civil war he engaged in the manufacture of iron at The Gulf, Chatham county, N. C., and in this he was successful and furnished the Confederate States Government with many tons of iron.

By sturdy application and persevering labor he amassed a considerable estate, but the bulk of this was swept away by the vicissitudes of the war and the reverses of fortune.

He was an active member of the order of Free Masons and warmly attached to the brotherhood and was honored with the highest offices in the gift of the order.

He had a natural fondness for plants and flowers and spent the greater portion of his latter years in the cultivation of his favorites, and it afforded him much pleasure to give them to his friends, especially to the sick to whom he very often carried hem.

Mr. Murdoch settled in Salisbury, N. C., in 1852, and it was here that he spent the greater portion of the remaining 41 years of his life. At an early age he connected himself with the Church in Scotland, and after he came to America he was actively engaged in church work in the various places his duties called him.

When he came to Salisbury he was received into church membership, and in 1856 was elected and installed a ruling elder. For 37 years he faithfully discharged the duties of that high office and was especially diligent in visiting the members of the church, and we would all do well to follow the good example he has set us, as his labors in this line of official work surpassed the combined labors of his brother elders.

He was often selected to represent his church in the various church courts, and as a delegate, assisted in the formation of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, in Augusta, Ga., in 1861, and 25 years later was again a delegate to that body which met in the same city.

The Sabbath-school found in him an earnest and devoted worker, and for a long term of years he was the beloved superintendent of the Sunday school, and under his skillful direction the number of scholars was the greatest in the history of the school.

He loved his church and was diligent in his attendance on the services of the sanctuary, and earnest in his supplications when called on to lead in prayer, and those of us who have so often heard him address the throne of grace will long remember his warm petitions rendered doubly impressive by his strong Scottish accent.

During the late years of his life it was a source of much grief to him that his deafness prevented him from taking an active part in the proceedings of the session, and though he was seldom absent from the services on the Sabbath he was often unable to catch more than a sentence or two of the sermons, but his soul was in communion with his Saviour, and he often unconsciously gave audible utterance to his communings in the sanctuary. At the close of the service he was accustomed to obtain from the pastor the manuscript of the sermon and read it over carefully at home.

Much of his time was spent in reading God's Word and in prayer, and when the summons came it found him ready to go up higher.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."—Psalm 37: 37.

FOR THE FAMILY.

JUDGE NOT.

Judge not—the honest and sincere,
Wherever they may stand,
Should have a brother's word to cheer,
A brother's helping hand.

Judge not—what if we judge aright
A thousand in a throng?
'Twere better left undone than blight
One heart by judging wrong.

Judge not—the motive lies too deep
For other eyes to scan;
'Tis ours to watch our own, and keep
It pure toward God and man.

Judge not—although the deed be one
By which one stood or fell;
It may be that we should have done
No better, if as well.

Judge not—'twere vain to search the cause
That underlies the deed;
The soul must answer to its laws,
And not to any creed.

Judge not—remember it was He
Who came from heaven to save,
And taught great truths so lovingly,
This precept also gave.

A Sabbath Recreation for the Little Ones.

Knowing how glad all loving Christian mothers are to receive any help in the training of the immortal souls committed to their care, I relate the following little incident with the hope that it may prove a helpful suggestion to those who are striving to train up their little ones in the way in which they should go. The Sabbath morning service had been attended, and the Catechism, Bible verses and hymns had been recited, for the mother, who was, what might now-a-days be called an "old-fogy Presbyterian," believed in drilling children in the Catechism as well as hymns and verses, as soon as they were old enough to talk. But as she also realized the fact that these exercises should not be made irksome to the little ones, but as pleasant as possible, they had been interspersed with the singing of various much-loved hymns and the reading of interesting stories. Then little Elsie and May, aged six and three and a half years respectively, were told that they could amuse themselves awhile, and let mother read some to herself. Little May at once suggested her favorite game of "hide," but the older sister ran to her mother saying: "We oughtn't to play hide on God's day, ought we mother?"

"Certainly not," replied the mother, "hadn't you rather play Sunday-school?" "Oh yes mamma!" they both answered in a breath. "But where can we have Sunday-school?"

"Pull out your trunk a little way from the wall, put your little chairs behind it for seats, and that will be very nice for a Sunday-school room, and the trunk will do for an organ." "Yes ma'am that's nice, and we both play on the organ when we sing?" "Yes, I think that will be very sweet."

They opened their Sunday-school with the hymn, "Jesus Bids us Shine," raising the tune themselves, and both singing every word clearly and distinctly, while their little fingers glided over the trunk in imitation of the playing of the organ. "Now what next?" asked May. "You be teacher," said Elsie, "and I'll be a little girl in your class, 'cause I know the most catechism and hymns." "Well," said May. Then in a most patronizing tone, she added: "You got any hymn to say little girl?" "Yes ma'am." Then followed the reciting of the sweet hymn, "I've two little hands to work for Jesus." "You said that berry nice," said the juvenile teacher. "Can you say any more?" "I can say all but two verses of "Just as I am." After that was recited, both hymns were sung and played as before. Then little May wanted to be a scholar and say her catechism, and before the teacher could commend her, she suggested: "You say, that's berry nice little girl." "Now it is time for the lesson," said Elsie, "and I'll be the scholar 'cause I know it best." Well, Jacob had to run away from home 'cause he cheated his brother out of the blessing. He went on fast as he could till night came, and he had to lie down in a field and put his head on a rock. And he had such a strange dream, angels going up and coming down and God on the top of the ladder, and God said, 'I'll give you and your children this land and all around here.' And Jacob said, 'Surely the Lord was in this place and I knew it not, and I'll give God one out of every ten things I get.'" "Let's sing some more now," said May, so "Come to Jesus" and several other hymns were sung, the 23d Psalm recited, and after an hour or more spent in this pleasant and entertaining manner, the Sunday-school was informally closed. Items for Lady Readers.

In Lockport, N. Y., there is a circle of King's Daughters in which each member has a little purple bag made out of a piece of satin ribbon folded and sewed at the sides and frayed out a little at the top with a string run in. In that little purple bag goes 1 penny each day. If those who have more pennies to spare than others put 1 penny a day more in the bag no one knows it. One a day is all that is asked for. At the meetings all the bags are emptied, and the contents of these little purple bags sent ten little sick children into the country last summer and they returned happy and restored by the breath of fresh air for which they were pining to death. The same circle has a place at each station given them where every week they place their leaflets and papers, so that any one may go there and get literature provided by the King's Daughters. Then each of the circle have a card Maltese cross with their mottoes on one side and their names on the other, telling the day when certain ones of the circle will be prayed for by the members of the circle and so arranged as to admit of change from week to week. Thus one can see on which day she will be especially remembered. At the top of the card is written, "Pray for one another."

Sculpture as an art is almost unknown in New Orleans. But there is one modest little woman in this city who, in the years gone by, when every woman studied what pleased her because it pleased her best, took the first prize in sculpture at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. This lady is Mrs. Tebault, wife of the well-known physician, Dr. Tebault. Mrs. Tebault was the child of wealthy parents and developed when only a child a remarkable faculty for fashioning faces and figures out of dough, which she begged from the cook, or more frequently out of the red clay found on her father's plantation. She also showed a wonderful taste for painting and designing, and by dint of much coaxing and persuading prevailed upon her parents to let her take a course of the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. She succeeded so well that after the second term she carried off the first prize for a beautifully sculptured marble figure of Michael Angelo's Madonna, and also took several gold medals for painting on china, one especially for a lovely dinner set painted from natural objects—fish, flowers, etc. It was just at this promising period of her girlish career that she met Dr. Tebault in Philadelphia, and the fair girl sculptress, who loved her art for its own sake, laid down her chisel at Cupid's bidding, and the delightful doctor often declares now that the world of art lost a promising sculptress and artist in Mrs. Tebault, but he gained a most exemplary and perfect wife. Mrs. Tebault, like many other married women, has devoted herself entirely to her home and children since her marriage, to the neglect of her early talent, for home duties, she says, come first.—*N. If you feel weak and all worn out take BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

Things Useful.

For a grass stain on children's clothes, while it is fresh, wash it out in alcohol.

For Tired Eyes.—You've no idea how refreshing to tired eyes are a few drops of witch hazel in a little warm water.

To clean black cashmere, wash in hot suds, in which a little borax has been placed. Rinse in bluing water, very blue, and iron while damp. If carefully done, the material will look as well as new.

Frozen oranges will be found a most delightful dish with which to begin a breakfast. Pare a dozen sweet oranges. Cut the fruit in thin slices, beginning at the stem. Sprikle over these a cup of sugar, put in the freezer and keep packed in salt and ice for two hours. If three pared and thin sliced bananas are added to the oranges the dish is even better.

To scramble eggs with chopped green peppers: After preparing the eggs in the usual way, stir gently in the frying pan, flopping in the chopped green peppers, from which the seeds must be removed before chopping. Do not let the eggs cook too much, but let them be soft, and serve hot.

Grilled Sirloin.—Cut the steak an inch thick, from the sirloin. Brush it on both sides with butter seasoned with pepper and salt, and grill fifteen minutes to twenty minutes. When sufficiently cooked lay the steak on a very hot dish, place under and over it some dainty little pats of specimen butter, surround it with a border of smoking hot potato croquettes, and serve at once. To make the specimen butter put about ten ounces of perfectly fresh butter on a plate and work it thoroughly and patiently with the point of the knife, a rather high seasoning of cayenne pepper, mushroom powder, mixed herb powder, lemon juice and minced parsley, with a pinch of salt; then set the butter in a cold place, and when quite firm stamp it out in tiny fanciful shapes and use.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

In two little beds in a garden, are many fair flowers blowing;
Some things not flowers among them, are rough and unlovely showing;
And ever small seeds are dropping into the ground, to break—
Some into weeds, some into blossoms, "for Jesus' sake."

Where is the garden? The beds are two little lives I know;
New little lives where the seeds of good and evil will easily grow.
Dear little lives that the Father has put in the world, to make—
Music, and sunshine, and gladness, "for Jesus' sake."

Good thoughts, sweet words, kind actions, burst into lovely flower;
But the faults, dark weeds beside them, are opening every hour;
Some one must draw them out quickly, and nourish the blossoms, to make Fragrance, and brightness, and beauty, "for Jesus' sake."

Plant in only the seeds of the good, and the pure, and the true;
Water the flowers of gentleness, love—coax the sunlight, too;
Root out the weeds of ill-nature, unkindness, before through the soil they break,
Never forgetting the whisper motto: "for Jesus' sake."

Ah! my two little workers for Jesus, souls fresh and fair,
Two little bits of God's garden are given into your care.
Watering, weeding, planting, patient your labor take,
Cherishing only the sweet and lovely, "for Jesus' sake.

Homely Stella.

Little Stella Barber had one big trouble—at least she thought so. Every day it weighed upon her. She was unhappy because she was homely. At first she only thought about her forehead, and said to herself, "Oh, why did I have such a wide, ugly forehead! Oh, dear!" Then she forgot her forehead for a time, and thought about her eyes. "Why couldn't I have pretty brown eyes like Chester?" she said. Then forgetting both forehead and eyes, she gave her attention to what she called her "horrid little nose."

After a time she gave up lamenting over each separate feature, and thought of, what seemed to her, "the general ugliness of the whole," Her mamma was a kind woman, who loved both of her children, but she had unconsciously gotten into the habit of caressing her pretty boy oftener than her plainer little daughter. Stella had sometimes heard visitors speak of "Mrs. Barber's beautiful boy," and often had seen them giving him attentions, while she, made shy by thinking about "the general ugliness," stood looking on, a neglected unhappy child. Chester was beautiful, it is true, with brown eyes and soft hair, rosy cheeks and a sweet little mouth. People used to say with enthusiasm, that he resembled some of the pictures of the little St. John in the old paintings. He was naturally an affectionate child, and as he had never been repelled he would often draw near to a visitor with a winning assurance, while little Stella would find it impossible to approach uninvited. The visitors, absorbed in the pretty boy, would often forget the little girl entirelyy.

There arrived a visitor one evening, however, who had a bright smile and loving kiss for Stella—her cousin Margie, who had come a long distance to see her New England friends. The child was charmed with this cousin whom she had never seen before. A great sorrow had made Margie thoughtful. She seemed to divine the burdens of those around her by instinct, and she seemed to possess a fairy wand to lighten them, a wand that all may possess, since it is made of love and sympathy. When she had seen Stella, that very evening, patiently holding her doll, waiting to show it to a visitor, while Chester received his accustomed petting, she understood it all. Just in time to prevent the look of disappointment that so often on similar occasions had come over the child's face, she said:

"I must make that pretty doll a hood, Stella." Stella was delighted.

"You like people, even if they haven't pretty brown eyes, don't you, Cousin Margie?" she said.

From that moment Margie took the girl into her very heart. She made her a companion. She arranged her hair in a more becoming way; she begged her mamma to dress her oftener in blue, a color that suited her fair complexion. She did not preach any sermons, but without any apparent design, said many comforting words to the child. "God does not give all his good gifts to one person. His best gifts he gives to all, the power to trust and obey."

Stella went with Margie to seek the sick and poor; she helped Margie to collect autumn leaves to make the home attractive. She worked with Margie on gifts that were to be stowed away for the coming Christmas. The new thoughts and the pleasant occupations caused her nature to expand, like a plant that is brought into the sunshine after a poor existence in the shade. She wished no longer to be beautiful like Chester, but to be good like Cousin Margie, whom everybody loved, who made everybody happy. She could not hope to look like Margie, for Margie too, she thought, was beautiful, though unlike Chester.

Stella's face had now such a bright and happy expression that Chester ceased to receive all the atttention.

Cousin Margie's home was at grandpa's. In the midst of her visit at Stella's home, grandpa came to see her. After he had been there a few days he said:

"Stella, you and Margie are as much alike as two flowers on one stem. You look alike and act alike. Margie's true name, Margaret, means pearl. I call her my pearl, because she is so precious to me. Your name means star. I shall call you my star, for I am sure whenever I see you, you will be sending a friendly light into somebody's life."

Stella was too surprised and too happy for words.—The Christian at Work.

"Coonie"

Modie was perfectly happy. She had reached grandpa's at last. As she sat before the fire, munching an apple, she heard a soft, purring sound behind her.

"O kittie!" she said, turning hastily, for she and the great white cat were old friends. But, instead of the cat, there stood beside her a creature so strange that Modie cried "Oh!" very loud.

"What is the matter?" asked grandma, coming into the room just then.

Modie said nothing, but pointed to the funny creature beside her.

"That is a raccoon," said grandma, laughing; "he will not hurt you. He's kind and gentle. Give him some of your apple. His name is 'Coonie.'"

Modie held toward "Coonie" a tempting piece of the fruit. He took it in his funny little paws, which looked as though they were covered with fine black gloves. He then sat up on his hind legs, like a squirrel, until the apple was eaten. Then he jumped into Modie's lap, purring softly while she smoothed his soft, black fur.

Later in the day Modie found him in the kitchen, standing on his hind legs before the milk-safe. He was turning the button on the door with his naughty black paws. He meant to have a fine feast of milk.

He was a sad thief. Modie soon found that if she watched all "Coonie's" pickings she would have enough to do. One day he climbed up on a chair and snatched a loaf of bread from the table, Modie saw him backing down the steps of the kitchen porch with the loaf hugged up to him under one of his fore-legs.

Another time Modie found him carrying off in the same way a large and sharp butcher-knife. One day he followed her to one of the neighbors. The lady took down the box to give him a cake. As she bent over him with the box "Coonie" jumped at it and pulled it to the floor. Seating himself in it he ate his fill, growling and showing his teeth if any one, even Modie, came near him. After that "Coonie" was left at home.

But he had one excellent trait. He would not come into the house until he had carefully licked his feet clean. He would sit on the door-step and make himself very neat. Then he would shake his head and rattle the little silver bell which hung about his neck. This was his way of saying "Let me in, please!" Then Modie would open the door. If it was evening "Coonie" would curl up in a little black heap beneath grandpapa's chair. There he would lie, purring, until he was put out in the wood-shed, at bedtime.—Clara J. Denton, in Our Little Ones and the Nursery.

To make nice brown bread take three cups of Indian meal, one and a half cups of flour, one cup of molasses, one quart of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt. Steam three hours.

Climatic Influence on Health.

It cannot be denied that the influence of climate upon health is great, and it is in recognition of this fact that physcians send patients suffering with pulmonary diseases to great distances for "change of air." But when the sufferer happens to be too poor to act upon the advice his lot is hard indeed. But it is not necessarily hopeless. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery can be had at any medicine store, and to it thousthousands whose cases were considered desperate owe their lives.

Up to a certain point in the progress of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a positive remedy. But delay is dangerous with Consumption. In all the conditions that lead to it, the 'Discovery" is the remedy. With severe lingering Coughs or Weak Lungs, nothing acts so promptly. Every disease that can be reached through the blood yields to this medicine, The Scrofulous affections of the lungs that's called Consumption is one of them. For this, and for every other form of Scrofula, for all blood-taints and disorders, and all chronic Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so certain that it can be guaranteed. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Can anything else be "just as good" for you to buy?

Don't you believe it.

Butter contains a variable quantity of water. The proportion in commercial samples ranges from 6 to 20 per cent., but the great bulk of these give from 8 to 16 per cent. A greater amount of water in butter than 12 per cent., is unnecessary, so far as attaining a good appearance is concerned, and anything over 16 per cent. is injurious to the keeping qualities of the butter. Twenty per cent. or above should be considered adulteration.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have berries. grapes and peaches, a year old, fresh as when picked. I use the Cold Process; do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over 100 families; anyone will pay a dollar for directions, when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars, round home, in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for 23 two cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of sample, postage, etc., to me. I ask nothing for the directions.

WHEREAS Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick has recently left this field to labor in another part of the Master's vineyard, aed whereas this society is one of the results of his work in our church, we the members of the Ladies' Missionary Society do adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved 1st. That it was with sadness that we assembled on the fourth Sabbath afternoon in January just after the parting scene of the morning when Mr. Kirkpatrick's farewell sermon was preached.

2nd. That the mere existence of this society shall always remind us of his zeal and love for the Master's cause.

3rd. That we pray that he may continue to be the means of brightening the hearts and lives of other homes; for we feel that his labors among us, both as a pastor and as a member of this society, have not been in vain.

4th. That we all, by the help of God, will redouble our zeal and energy in order to make up, if possible, for the loss of so faithful and earnest a worker.

5th. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Mr. Kirkpatrick.

Signed: N. J. THOMPSON,

March 25th, 1894.

WHEREAS, Presbytery has seen fit to dissolve the pastoral relations existing between the Rev. M. R Kirkpatrick and the Morven church, the members of said church have adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved 1st. That this church believes that Mr. Kirkpatrick was honest and sincere in his convictions as to his duty to the church at large, and to himself and family, when he decided to leave this charge for a new field of labor.

2d. That it was with sad and heavy hearts that this congregation united in the request to Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relations.

3d. That this church testifies to their pastor's zeal for the cause of Christ, and his devotion to the Master's work not only here but in other places.

4th. That we take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of Mr. Kirkpatrick's work in our midst.

5th. That by his removal from this church a vacancy is rendered that will be very difficult to fill.

6th. That the united prayers of this people shall go up to a throne of grace for our beloved pastor—that the spirit of God may accompany him to his new field of labor, and that he may have many souls for his hire.

7th. That we ask a blessing not only upon our pastor, but upon his entire family—that they all may be blessed both spiritually and temporally, and that their life in their new home may be pleasant and happy.

Signed.

CHOOSE YE.

If we would possess the peace of GOD we must choose the conditions and be conformed to them. If we would find rest we must choose the yoke of service and enter the school of study and training. If we would have our worship acceptable we must choose and seek reconciliation with our offended brother. If we would be used in service we must choose to restore what we have taken away unjustly. So far we have sought to suggest in preceding studies. We wish now to emphasize all this from a different stand point. What we have written has reference to the advantages, necessities and conditions of true service. Now we suggest that we are invited to make choice of this service. This was the purpose of the parting words of JOSHUA to all Israel. We have the record in the last chapter of the book of JOSHUA. The great general, the trusted leader, had called the heads of the people to Shechem. With religious solemnity he reviews in retrospect all the way of Providence by which their generations have been brought from the far East to this present settlement in the Promised Land by the way of bondage in Egypt and the discipline of the wandering. This made evident that, however great any nation might become, it had not been always great but had been made great by the mercy and might of GOD. It further appeared that however religious a people might become they had not always been so, but were so by the blessing of the goodness of God. Israel was pointed backward to a time when ABRAHAM and his father's family were idolaters, that they might now see the hand of GOD in all their history. We may well consider anew the way in which our nation has grown from a few and feeble founders to a mighty republic, not by our inherent greatness but by the blessing of GOD; and that our foundations were laid in religious principles and our progress has been the outgrowth of these. It will further appear that however great or successful any individual may be, it is not by his own power or goodness. In a secular or sacred sense the gentleness of GOD makes men great while the converse is true that for discipline and development it is good to bear the yoke in youth.

Seeing thus the dependence of the nations and of individuals on the blessing of GOD for goodness and greatness the call to choose the service of GOD is most reasonable. It was the more apparent by the blessing of GOD in the life of JOSHUA who, with CALEB, had chosen the will and had been faithful to the service of GOD in trying times and now remained a notable illustration of GOD's blessing. That doubtless, had much weight with the people to decide so earnestly and resolutely to serve the LORD. The call is reasonable to us because we are creatures and our CREATOR has the sovereign right to us as His property; because He has so mercifully cared for us and ministered to us in all temporal things; because He has loved us and sent His SON to save us; and because with Him in the manifold ministry of the HOLY SPIRIT, He has freely given His children all things.

This call to choose is first of all to any who have not accepted CHRIST as SAVIOUR to behold Him the chiefest among ten thousands, to accept His salvation and enter His service. That is the first necessity. There must be choice between GOD in CHRIST reconciling the world unto Himself and all neglect or rival or opposition. There must be a choice whom we will serve. It may even be upon the question whether the service be evil, whether it will harm us to serve the LORD. It is a marvelous condescension to our fallen natures to challenge our faith upon the question whether the LORD is a hard MASTER. Nevertheless it seems warranted at least in the case of JOSHUA to Israel. If the LORD is a hard MASTER, if his service be evil then the call is to choose from among His rivals some one who will give a good time and good results. Failing to find such and upon the necessary confession that the service of the LORD is not evil we repeat the call to every one to choose the LORD as MASTER.

Having made this choice the call reaches yet further and demands the resolution to serve the LORD. Having taken the LORD as our LORD we are called to serve Him. This resolution must not be hastily or carelessly taken. The LORD is not a hard MASTER and never makes unreasonable demands, but He is strict and jealous; jealous of all rivals and strict in demands of unfailing faithfulness. If we are convinced of His claims upon us in all things to serve Him it becomes us to enter that service heartily and with desire and determination by His grace never to turn back. It will be a blessed hour when we read that resolution and the beginning of a blessed experience without comparison in sweetness, strength and success. That is the positive answer to all doubts about our acceptance and difficulties about what ought to be given up. It removes the false issue entirely. It replaces the so-called hardship of having to give up something or anything with the riches of grace in service and the hope of glory in the end.

We wonder that this is made a matter of choice. There was no necessity for it. We might be compelled. But we are called to choose. That is because we are wanted not as slaves, but as sons. This is not the demand for hands and heads, but for hearts. It is not proposed to make men miserable by a life of enforced unwilling service, but to beseech them to render a happy, whole-hearted, joyful obedience to every command and a cheerful, loving consecration to a reasonable service. There is nothing to be compared with this. Dear fellow Christian, if you have become entangled with the affairs of this life so as to manage your business on the principles of worldly wisdom, if you have been blinded by the GOD of this world so that you cannot see the beauties of such a service, if you have become fascinated with the delusive charms of worldly amusements and the claims of irreligious society, if you profess and hope to be saved by CHRIST and yet serve SATAN, let me call you with a word of love to chose this day the service of JESUS. Take this word for it, that if you have never entered fully into this service, and will now begin and henceforth continue in it you will have a new taste and a new joy, and will become a new blessing to others and joy to JESUS.

God puts consolation only where He has first put pain.—Madam Swetchine.

HERE AND THERE.

WE OWE MANY THANKS TO THOSE who have sent us reports of the Presbyteries. On account of the fact that the Presbyteries have been held on so nearly the same days, the accumulation compels us to condense or abridge very many which under favorable circumstances we would gladly publish in full. The pressure on our columns in other ways is also unusual.

IN OUR ASSEMBLY SOME VERY IMportant questions will be discussed, but we do not anticipate anything likely to interfere with harmony. The matter of co-operation between the two assemblies in work for the colored people will not cause even a ripple of excitement probably. So far as the Presbyteries have noticed the matter at all it is, as far as we have seen, with disapproval.

THE REVISED DIRECTORY FOR WORship has been adopted by an overwhelming majority; as much perhaps because the church is tired of the matter and wants to get rid of it, as anything else.

A PROPOSITION FOR UNION WITH THE Northern Church [or any other when the way may be made clear] we can hardly think will amount to a great deal. Just why we should want to get into embroilments from which we now are happily free is not apparent, even, if the other difficulties which have proved insuperable, were put out of the way.

BRITISH POLITICS PRESENTS SOME queer anomalies. For months upon months a comparatively small contingent of Irishmen have succeeded in absorbing the legislation, ostensibly in the interest, of the Emerald Isle, and in making England, Scotland and Wales look on patiently if not altogether approvingly. Things are fast changing now.

Another matter of singularity is that two Scotchmen should be leaders and such masterful leaders of the contending forces. T. P. O'CONNOR notes it as a curious reflection "that the struggle for the government of this mighty Empire is, to all intents and purposes, a duel between two young Scotchmen—neither yet fifty; neither yet wholly without youth of look, feature, and character? They are a great race, these Scotchmen!"

WHEN THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN Church changed its Form of Government so as to make ruling elders distinctly eligible to the moderatorship of the Church courts it was supposed by some in our Church, and even predicted by one or more of the Northern papers, that in a year or two the old rule and practice would be restored. It has not proved so; on the contrary the election of ruling elders as moderators is becoming very frequent. We shall not deny if one should say the service has not been improved—very far from it; we are merely noting that the change has been accepted without serious dissent.

AND NOW OUR NORTHERN BRETHREN, despite the decision, virtually, that ruling elders are ineligible to the moderatorship of the Church courts, do occasionally elect these officers to the position. Within eight years the Presbytery of Freeport has been three times presided over by a ruling elder, and recently the Presbytery of Philadelphia, North, elected a ruling elder as moderator—the second time it has been done. The first time an attempt to get the Synod of Pennsylvania to condemn the act of Presbytery was ineffectual; Synod in fact approved it.

THE APPROACHING ASSEMBLY OF THE Northern Church will be even more conservative, it is said, than the last. So we will probably soon hear the last of the BRIGGS and SMITH controversies and the Cleveland coterie will ingloriously retire.

THE VANGUARD OF THE "ARMY OF the Commonweal" has reached Washington and are corralled to be exhibited at the cost of 25 cents to those whose curiosity will stand the expense. The affair thus far is simply farcical. Numerous other bands are heading toward the Capitol City, but with slim chance, as regards many, of their reaching their destination. In a few days—a very few days—the pressure of hunger will determine whether the affair is to become tragic or not. It looks now like the army will merely melt away.

BUT THERE ARE POSSIBILITIES OF trouble in these things, if not now in the future and it may be the not distant future. The army thus far has been an army of peace. It is composed, however, without doubt of men who are not peaceably disposed—of men who will, if circumstances favor, give an immense deal of trouble. The papers are calling attention to the fact that these tramps are mostly foreigners, having no interest in the country and having no respect for its laws.

IT IS BECOMING MORE AND MORE evident that the unrestricted immigration, which so far from discouraging we have been inviting has become a curse to this country.

IT IS GRATIFYING TO KNOW THAT immigration has decreased over one-third within the past year. Some immigration might well be encourged. The Waldensians, for instance, who come to colonize and settle, who bring their pastors, buy or lease the land and build churches and schoolhouses are a valuable accession to the country. They make us stronger and better, but most of our immigrants are the offscourings of the countries they leave and a curse to any country which they make their stopping place.

THE ALABAMA PRESBYTERIAN CALLS attention to a matter which is a source of weakness throughout our Church. It is that of persons moving, to permanently reside, beyond the bounds of a congregation and still retaining indefinitely their membership with the church from which they have removed. Our contemporary above referred to says: "Experience has shown that such persons do not, as a rule, become a part of the organizable force of the church in whose bounds their lot has been cast, and the fact that they are not members of that particular church is often an excuse for a neglect of the fundamental duties of the Christian life.

"But more particularly in the case of young men and women, who form such 'a large proportion of the great army, which every year marches up from the country to the city,' would we urge our pastors and sessions to see that this recommendation is carried out; that when John or Mary leaves home the pastor of one of our churches in the town or city whither he or she is going be at once informed, that the Church of Christ may be the first to welcome the stranger. It is a sad fact that unless this is done—unless the church welcomes the newcomer—the church ties thus severed from the associations of childhood, are often never renewed, and under the pressure of temptations in the new surroundings, with all the old safe-guards taken away, 'many of our young men and women yield, and thus swell the human wreckage of the great maelstrom.'"

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Work for May.

Our worthy Acting Secretary of Foreign Missions has already, by a timely article, called the attention of all the brethren to the duty, laid upon them, of preaching on this subject, the first Sabbath in May.

We sincerely hope this forceful reminder will be heeded, and are confident that their Bibles and the Missionary will afford all, who look for it, abundant material for this service. But we also earnestly request or beseech the brethren, that they will not let this one sermon and the subsequent collection, be the end of the matter for the year.

Announce, on that day, that the Monthly Concert for Missions will be observed, continued or commenced as the case may be, and such other effort made as will secure the maintenance or increase of the interest awakened at this season.

The Sabbath-school has been defined as—"The Church Studying God's Word." The Monthly Concert is the Church studying God's work. Just as no church can be said to be alive, to its duty, which has no Sabbath-school, so no church is alive to its duty which has no monthly Concert.

Out of this will grow what is absolutely necessary to its success: subscribers and readers for the Missionary and such organizations as the congregation will require or admit of.

It is impossible to have a successful Sabbath-school without literature and lesson helps. The Missionary is for the Monthly Concert what the International Lessons are for the Sabbath-school.

The Sabbath-school demands different classes for different elements in the congregation, a class for men, one for women and one for children. Common sense and the different capacity of each grade dictating the peculiar methods for each.

In the same way different organizations will, ordinarily, be required for the women and children, at least. Make the interest then, awakened during this month, to crystallize into some such institutions, calling them what you will, societies, bands, guilds or workers and have them all unite, once a month, in the Concert. Thus seed will have been planted, in May, in God's house which will continue to flourish and bear fruit, in the courts of our God, all the rest of the year.

Do not rest, or let your congregation be satisfied, until in every church, there are copies of the Missionary and something, besides the basket collection, to feed, and to indicate the measure of, the interest of, the Church in this matter.

Knowledge of the Bible will alone create a love for it. Knowledge of missions can alone arouse and sustain a love for and interest in them. Ignorance of either must be disastrous to the Church. Inform yourselves. Inform your people on this subject. A minister once asked us, who are the Zenanas? Only yesterday an intelligent professional man asked us the question, exactly as it is written; "Did you ever hear that negro speak, who is a missionary of Dr. Hoge's church, of Richmond, somewhere in Africa, at Hongkong, I believe it is?"

No one who was a reader of the Missionary, or whose pastor had a monthly concert and a map, could have asked such questions.

The people will always feel an interest in, and contribute to, the objects to which the pastor is interested. Then knowledge and interest will not often be much beyond his. The most signal advance in North Carolina has been in those churches where the pastors have followed up the work, after the visit of a missionary or the secretary. Where this has not been done the influence has soon been lost. Preach but follow up the sermon with other work!

The Presbyterian.

WHAT TIME IS IT?

What time is it?
Time to do well—
Time to live better—
Give up that grudge—
Answer that letter—
Speak that kind word to sweeten a sorrow;
Do that good deed you would leave till to-morrow.
Time to try hard
In that new situation—
Time to build upon
A solid foundation.
Giving up needlessly changing and drifting;
Leaving the quicksands that ever are shifting.

What time is it?
Time to be earnest,
Laying up treasure;
Time to be thoughtful,
Choosing true pleasure.
Loving stern justice—of truth being fond;
Making your word just as good as your bond.
Time to be happy,
Doing your best—
Time to be trustful,
Leaving the rest,
Knowing in whatever country or clime,
Ne'er can we call back one minute of time.

ABSTRACT OF THE MINUTES OF THE PRESBYTERY OF FAYTTEVILLE.

Held at Fayetteville April, 17th-21st, 1894.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. W. B. Arrowood, the retiring moderator. There were fifteen ministers and forty-five ruling elders enrolled.

Ruling Elder J. M. McIver, of Gulf church, was chosen moderator and Rev. W. B. Arrowood and Ruling Elder A. C. Monroe, temporary clerks.

Churches Organized. Churches were reported organized at Sanford, Spout Springs and Hope Mills and enrolled.

Licensures. Candidates J. L. Wicker, K. A. Campbell, M. D. McNeill and A. A. McGeachy were licensed as Probationers for the holy ministry—the first three as extraordinary cases.

Commissioners. Rev. A.J. McKelway, Fayetteville, N. C., and Frank McNeill, Esq., Rockingham, N. C., were chosen commissioners to the General Assembly. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., Maxton, N. C., was chosen alternate to Rev. A. J. McKelway and L. McDonald, Roslin, N. C., alternate to Frank McNeill, Esq.

Minister Received. Bev. A. M. Hassell was examined and received from Enoree Presbytery.

New Candidate. Mr. J. E. Ward, a member of McPherson church, was examined and enrolled as a candidate for the ministry.

Bible Cause. The report in behalf of the Bible cause showed that only seventeen churches reported collections therefor and the aggregate contributed only $96 which nevertheless showed a gain of $20 on last year.

The following recommendation was adopted:

Resolved. That Presbytery enjoin upon all its ministers and sessions to have the claims of the Bible cause fully set forth before the churches and that a collection for this cause be taken up in accordance with the directions of the Synod and General Assembly.

Revised Directory. The Revised Directory for Worship was adopted.

Assessments. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., Rev. D. D. McBryde, Rev. W. F. Thom and Ruling Elders S. C. Rankin and J. A. McAllister were appointed to revise the assessments upon the churches for the Presbyterial Fund and report to the fall meeting and also to collect the arrears to this fund or make some settlement of the same.

Place and Time of Next Meeting. Rockingham was chosen as the place and 7.30 p. m., Tuesday, October 16th, 1894, the time for the next meeting.

Colored Evangelization. The report on Colored Evangelization showed a slight advance in contributions to the cause. Thirty-five churches contributed and the aggregate of their contributions was $190. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved. That in the opinion of this Presbytery the plan of co-operation adopted by the Assembly's ad interim committee is impracticable and tends to lessen the interests of our Church in the work.

Resolved. That the present management of the Assembly's secretary is heartily commended for its efficiency and economy.

Resolved. That the non-contributing churches be reminded of their duty and all be asked to contribute more largely to this cause.

Overture Answered. In answer to an overture from the session of Fayetteville church for advice with regard to the discipline of church members who frequent drinking saloons, for the purpose of moderate drinking, the following paper was adopted:

1. The Presbytery of Fayetteville would earnestly entreat the members of all its churches to abstain from all such practices as injurious to personal piety and morals, and dangerous in its tendencies and example, bringing dishonor and reproach upon themselves, the Church and their Lord.

2. That the sessions in all such cases use all diligence to awaken the conscience, enlighten the understanding, and convince the judgment, of the sin of such practices, by earnestly and tenderly presenting such Scriptures as Romans 12:2; 1 Corinthians 10:31 and Colossians 3:17. But if all means fail to correct the evil then the session should purge the church, by suspension from her communion, the persistent offender who prefers the indulgence of his appetite to the honor of religion and the glory of God.

Colportage. The indebtedness of the Presbytery to the publishing house of the Assembly was shown by the report of the agent of Colportage to have been reduced from $308.58 to $271.80. And that as an offset to this debt there are on hand Bibles to the value of $172.22, other books to the value of $141.78, and $3.30 in cash with a credit of $2.00, which was cancelled, leaving an aggregate of cash and books on hand to the value of $272.30.

It was resolved to employ Candidate P. R. Bridges as a colporteur during the summer months. During the year twenty-six churches contributed to the General Assembly's colportage work $104.04, and to the cause of Presbyterial Colportage $83.00, making an aggregate of $187.10. Forty-eight churches made no contribution to the cause.

North Carolina Presbyterian. The following paper was adopted:

The Presbytery of Fayetteville would again most cordially commend the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN to all our ministers, sessions and congregations as a most important and indispensable agency in furthering the highest interests of the Redeemer's kingdom.

The Presbytery would gratefully record its appreciation of the increased usefulness of this already excellent paper, resulting from the addition of the Sabbath-school department and its wise, judicious and suggestive treatment by its editor, Rev. Dr. P. H. Hoge.

Ministerial Education. The report on Ministerial Education showed thirteen candidates on the roll, one of them being a licentiate. The amount contributed to the cause during the year was $463, being $263 less than was pledged to the cause and $137 less than was asked of the Assembly's Committee by the Presbytery for the benefit of its candidates.

The Home Missions Committee. Report showed that the amount contributed to Presbyterial Home Missions during the past year by forty-eight churches was $534.39. There was $253.86 in the treasury April 1st, 1893, which made an aggregate therefore of $788.25. This fund was disbursed as follows: To Rev. W. F. Thom, balance due for year 1892, $150; to Rev. W. F. Thom on appropriation for 1893, $50; to Rev. K. A. McLeod, appropriation in full for 1893, $150; to Rev. J. A. McMurray on appropriation from November 1st, 1893, $150; to Rev. D. W. Fox on appropriation for six months in 1893, $25; to Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., for postals, printing, etc., $3.75; to Sharon church building, $75; to Culdee church building, $20; to Bethlehem church building, $25, making a total of disbursements $648.75, and leaving as a balance to the credit of the fund, $139.50.

Amounts due from Presbyterial Home Missions to January 1st, 1894: To Rev. W. F. Thom balance for 1863, $100; to Rev. D. W. Fox balance for 1893, $25; to church building at Egypt, $150, making an aggregate of $275.

The following appropriations were made last fall from this fund for the year 1894: To Rev. W. F. Thom's field, $50; to Rev. K. A. McLeod's field, $150; to Rev. D. W. Fox's field, $150; Rev. J. A. McMurray in Johnston county for the year beginning November 1st, 1893, $525, making a total of $775. To Smithfield church $100 was appropriated at this meeting if the funds will permit, which increases the total to $875. In view of the increased need of funds to keep an evangelist in Johnston county and sustain local evangelists elsewhere it was resolved to urge our churches to raise $1,000 for the cause and that this amount be apportioned among the churches by the Home Missions Committee as a guide to liberality.

The amount contributed to Synodical Home Missions during the year by forty-nine churches was $1,105.57. The amount sent to the Synodical treasury was $1,042.57. The amount therefore left to the credit of this fund April 1st, 1894, was $63.53. It was recommended that $900, that is about 12 cents per communicant, be raised for this cause during the year.

The amount contributed to the General Assembly's Home Missions during the year by fifty-one churches was $424.78. The amount forwarded to the Assembly's Committee was $388.04, leaving a balance on hand April 1st, 1894, of $36.74. Amount borrowed from the General Assembly's Home Missions and to be returned $44.51. It was resolved that the churches be urged to raise $1,500 or 20 cents per communicant for the General Assembly's Home Missions work during the current year.

Fifty-two churches contributed to the Invalid Fund during the year $224.11. The amount sent the Assembly's Committee was $219.73, leaving a balance on hand April 1st, 1894, of $4.38. Appropriations asked for 1893 from this fund are as follows: For Rev J P McPherson, $60; for Mrs. James McQueen, $75; for Mrs John H Coble, $50; making a total of $185. Of these amounts the first installments were fully paid, but only 35 per cent of the second installments have so far been paid on account of deficient funds.

The following supplies for vacant churches were recommended and ordered: That Rev M N McIver be sent to the following churches until the fall meeting of Presbytery on the terms mentioned: Marks Creek for $60 per annum for one Sabbath per month, to Shiloh for $60 per annum for one Sabbath per month, to Haywood for $60 per annum for one Sabbath per month, to Pittsboro for $100 per annum for one Sabbath per month.

That Rev W M Eldridge be sent one Sabbath each month till fall meeting, Carthage consenting, to Union church on a salary of $250 per annum urging the payment of all arrears and that he be directed to give a Sabbath evening appointment monthly to Cameron church till next meeting on a salary of $100 per annum.

That Ellerbe Springs and Mt. Carmel churches be directed to employ Candidate Lacy Little to give each church a service on the same Sabbath every month during his vacation, the first church paying $6 for the morning service and the second $4 for the afternoon service.

That Rev. D. D. McBryde be instructed to supply Cypress and Spout Spring churches one Sabbath in the month till fall meeting each month paying $150 per annum.

That Rev. D. W. Fox be instructed to supply, according to request, Rockingham church two Sabbaths each month for a year on a salary of $350, Jackson Springs one Sabbath per month for a year on a salary of $200, and that he be sent to Lumberton church for six months one Sabbath per month and the fifth Sabbaths on a salary satisfactory to him and the church, but not less than $250 per annum.

That Sherwood church be directed to endeavor to get in co-operation with Fayetteville church session, Candidate C M Richards, to give them a monthly Sabbath service paying him $10 per week for service given.

That Galatia church be directed to make an effort to employ for the summer months with the approval of the Home Missions committee, a candidate for the ministry to give them religious services paying him at least $125 and board for the summer.

That Buffalo, Pocket, Sanford and White Hill churches be grouped for the purpose of employing a pastor.

That Jonesboro, Salem, St. Andrew's and Mt. Pisgah be grouped with a view of securing a pastor and that these churches, if the way be not open to secure a pastor at present, be instructed to procure the services of a candidate or licentiate with the aid of the Home Missions committee, for the summer months, paying at least $10 per week for service rendered.

That during the summer Rev D Fairley be sent to Ashpole church for one Sabbath and sacraments and Rev H G Hill, D D., one Sabbath.

That between now and fall meeting Rev P R Law be sent to Iona church for one Sabbath and sacraments and Rev H G Hill, D D., one Sabbath.

Presbyterial Evangelist. The following paper was adopted:

In order to guarantee a fund for the purpose of employing a Presbyterial evangelist Presbytery directs all her ministers and church-sessions to canvass their respective congregations and take subscriptions to be paid in the fall or sooner, provided a Presbyterial evangelist is in the field, and when a sufficient amount has been subscribed the Home Missions committee is authorized to employ a Presbyterial evangelist at a salary not exceeding $1,200. The treasurer of each church is directed by the first of June to send the amount of this subscription to the chairman of the Home Missions committee, Rev H G Hill, DD., Maxton, N. C.

Church and Christian Education. The report on Church and Christian Education showed that one-fourth of the stock needed to re-open Floral College had been subscribed and the committee was ordered to continue its canvass until the remainder was secured.

Calls and Supplies. Ida Mills church was granted permission to employ Rev W B Arrowood two Sabbath afternoon appointments a month on a salary of $200 per annum. Sardis church was granted permission to employ Rev J S Black one Sabbath per month on a salary of $200 per annum. Dunn church was granted permission to employ Rev A M Hassell one Sabbath per month on a salary of $200 per annum and McMillan's chapel one Sabbath afternoon per month on a salary of $50 per annum. By request of pastor and flock the call of Summerville church was changed from one-half of the pastor's time to one-fourth with a corresponding change in the salary. By request of pastor and flock the salary paid by Laurinburg church was reduced one-hundred dollars.

Committees. The following committees were elected in place of agents: For Foreign Missions, Rev A J McKelway, J W Johnston, W B Arrowood, and Elders J C McCaskill and J M McIver. For Publication and Colportage, Revs. W B Arrowood, S M Rankin, J A McMurray and Elders R McCaskill and J A McKay. For Sabbath-schools, Revs J S Black, P R Law, D W Fox and Elder A D McGill.

Foreign Missions. The report on Foreign Missions showed an increase of contributions among the churches notwithstanding the aggregate was less than last year. The aggregate was less this year solely because of the absence of a large contribution by one man last year. The aggregate of contributions by church collections last year was $1,315, this year $1,279; by gentlemen's missionary societies last year $399, this year $350; by ladies' missionary societies last year $1,687, this year $1.785; by Sabbath-schools, children and other societies last year $403, this year $526. The aggregate of contributions last year was $4,673, this year $4,135.

Visitors. The following brethren were present and invited to seats in the Presbytery: Rev Messrs W F Craven, T H Sutton and R A Willis, of the M. E. Church, South, and J H Edwards, of the Mission Baptist church as visiting brethren, and Rev Messrs R P Pell, of Concord Presbytery, and Joseph Evans, of Wilmington Presbytery, as corresponding members.

Dismissed. Licentiate J L Wicker was dismissed to the care of Mecklenburg Presbytery, D J Currie to Orange Presbytery, and A A McGeachy to LaFayette Presbytery in the Synod of Missouri.

Ordination and Installation. Calls by Buffalo, Pocket and Sanford churches for the pastoral services of Licentiate M D McNeill were placed in his hands and he signified his willingness to accept the same. The following order was then made for his ordination and installation: That Presbytery adjourn to meet at Buffalo church Thursday at 11 a. m., 31st day of May, 1894, to conduct the examinations. That the following commission be constituted for his ordination and installation at Buffalo: Rev J W Johnston to preside, preach and propound the constitutional questions. Rev W M Eldridge to charge the people, and Rev W F Thom to charge the pastor and Elders J W Scott and G Cole to participate in the ordination. That he be installed at Pocket and Sanford churches by the following committees at such time as they may select. At Pocket, Rev W M Eldridge to preside, preach and propound the constitutional questions, Rev W F Thom to charge the people and Rev J W Johnston to charge the pastor. At Sanford, Rev H G Hill, D D., to preside, preach and propound the constitutional questions, Rev D D McBryde to charge the people and Rev D Fairley to charge the pastor.

Home Mills church was granted permission to employ Rev J S Black as stated supply for one Sabbath night appointment each month on terms agreeable to him.

Licentiate M D McNell was directed to preach at White Hill church one-fourth of his time on terms mutually agreeable.

Sabbath Schools. The report of the agent of Sabbath-schools showed that fifty-five schools had been reported, in which there were 453 teachers and 3,603 scholars and of this number 131 had been admitted to the communion. That the schools had contributed $977.03 to their own expenses and $450.10 for other purposes.

Rev J S Black and Rev W B Arrowood were added to the committee to conduct the Elders' and Deacons' Institute for 1894

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Buffalo church at 11 a. m., Thursday, 31st of May, 1894.

Stated Clerk.

God's Promises

A promise is like a check. I have a check, what do I do with it? Suppose I carried it about in my pocket, and said, "I do not see the use of this bit of paper, I cannot buy anything with it," a person would say: "Have you been to the bank with it?" "No, I did not think of that." "But it is payable to your order. Have you your name on the back of it?" "No, I have not done that." And yet you are blaming the person who gave you the check! The whole blame lies with yourself. Put your name on the back of the check, go with it to the bank, and you will get what is promised to you." A prayer should be the presentation of God's promise indorsed by your personal faith. I hear of people praying for an hour together. I am very pleased that they can; but it is seldom that I can do so, and I see no need for it. It is like a person going into the bank with a check and stopping an hour. The clerks would wonder. The common sense way is to go to the counter and show your check, and take your money and go about your business. There is a style of prayer which is of this fine, practical character. You so believe in God that you present the promise, obtain the blessing, and go about your Master's business.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Fault-Finding.

Some persons are cursed with a genius for fault-finding, and they ought to be put out of the sanctuary until they have learned the first elements of decency. HOURS WITH NATURE.

An Hour with Plant-Life.

BY DR. CHARLES C. ABBOTT,

Author of "Waste land Wanderings," "Upland and Meadow," etc.

Crossing a wide meadow at noon-tide, I was glad to reach a huge hickory tree that stood quite alone, yet within sight of a little forest, and on the other side, the broad, shallow channel of the river. It was early in May, and the leaves were young, but the grass was green, the flowers bright, and nowhere in the wide landscape was there evidence of anything but youthful active life. For the new leaves upon the wooded hillside make the old hills and gnarly oaks new again. Why, I cannot tell, but as I rested in the hickories, I heard no bird, and saw no butterflies; and for a brief moment was alone with plant-life. I sat upon the mossy root of the tree, and noticed, by mere chance, that the bark far above the ground was green; clothed with a growth that would have needed a microscope to detect it, had it not been present in untold millions of individual plants. A single one is little more than a single cell, with an infinitely small trace of the green that nature is so lavish with, when she carpets the meadow and clothes the mountain-side. All the chlorophyl in a handful of these cells on the tree's bark would not color more than one blade of grass; and yet the insignificant growth is a plant, as well as the hickory that towers just eighty-two feet above me. What a world of variety between the mould on damp bricks and trees! But wide apart as they are, there is no break in the chain from the one to the other. The meadow was very uniform in appearance as I carelessly glanced over it, wondering what had become of the birds; but how common it is to get an erroneous impression by contenting ourselves with careless glances. Nature never rewards a languid interest in her.

What I called a "grassy" meadow was in truth a weedy wilderness. This was very plain when I took the trouble to scan my surroundings a little more closely. There were pale-blue flowers in great abundance, the Houstonia of the botanists, and pale spring beauties, pink and white; and just beyond, nodding in the light breeze, dog-toothed violets, a lily in fact and over the hedge there is a ruddy glow that I knew to be phlox. Here we have half the colors of the rainbow, and yet talk glibly of the green meadows, as if the rose and white lily were myths. But what of the growths between the green stain upon the hickory's bark, the flowers and a perfect tree? I do not know how many distinct forms of plant-life there are in the world; it is immaterial. I do know that there is a gratifying variety in this essentially commonplace corner of a mountainous region; a variety that gives us blossoms, green leaves and queer growths for nine months of the year, and provides us in midwinter with a series of plant skeletons that are as delicate, intricate, symmetrical and beautiful as the orchids, of which strange plants, one, a huge purple affair, is now in bloom in the little woods near by. If a single tree and its surroundings become tiresome, which I do not admit, what of the little woods just mentioned? Every tree in it is a grandchild. That is, it is a third growth, or the second since the primeval forest was filled by the first white settlers of this region. An over-practical falls—they had no ideas beyond dollars, and left no trace of the original grandeur that was convertible into cash; excepting of course the oaks in the meeting-house yards, and those owe their existence to the fact that they were almost if not quite a necessity. But it is scarcely worth the while to scold about our predecessors, when we are doing so little to preserve what remains of our forests. But this, my little woods, near by—it contains good examples of nine species of deciduous trees and four evergreens. All are fairly thrifty, and yet one, the sour gum, has a grievous burden to bear, in the unsightly mistletoe that crowd i:s outer branches. What a strange freak is this! A thrifty growth of itself; it is unfitted for any condition but that of a parasite, and must have the life-blood of another, to sustain its own existence. We associate in literature the mistletoe and the oak, but here, except occasionally on an apple tree. I find it only on the tupelo or sour gum. Why this preference is a problem past finding out.

There is a road through the woods, seldom used and so should be grassy, but the ruts are lined with sun-dews instead: grass-like, in a general way, but with club-head or shepherd's crook endings; but what mischief they are up to, when small insects come their way. The glistening freshness is sweetened even that it may be more tempting, and woe to the fly that stops to take a sip. It is not only caught but eaten! Not all plants are content with air and water for a food supply. These sundews are carnivorous, and so is their cousin, the fly-trap, that grows in North Carolina; but we need not travel so far to find these flesh-eating plants. The side saddle flower, that is a thrifty growth by the pond-side has an elaborate trap for flies, and even for the young salamanders that have been found venturing up their sides—or was it accidental?—and in the water of many a brook and pond the bladdermonts catch fish and eat them. Curious this may all be, but it is a bit depressing after all, death figures so prominently, and life is the key-note of a bright May morning. Glancing about for yet other forms of plant-life, I spy an enormous grapevine, one that has been figuring in all my life, for I love just as much to swing in it now at fifty as I ever did at five. Perhaps not quite so well, for the old familiar faces of forty years ago are now all gone and not all restropection is pleasant.

This grapevine where it leaves the ground, and for many feet, is eleven inches in diameter, and how long are the various branches can only be estimated. I tried such measurement once, but gave up in despair. I could only mark off one thousand feet, and the end was not yet in sight. How these vines climb to the tops of the highest trees and swing clear of the ground, often for one hundred feet between the tree and the root-hold of the vine, is not quite clear, but then who has traced the process from the beginning to the end. This grapevine is very old. It was here when the Indians were in possession; so much is positively known; but how much of a vine it was two hundred years ago, can only be conjectured. It is said a flint arrowpoint was found sticking in it, years ago. Be this as it may, trees are cut down now at times that have arrow-points embedded in their hearts. This is nothing strange. Arrows flew thick and fast at times in the woods, and that now and then a sapling should be struck is only natural. The tree would soon cover the stone point and the shaft would be broken off.

One need not be a botanist to find infinite entertainment in plant-life; and it is not likely we will ever wander for long where plant-life is wanting. Remember that red-snow is a plant, and birds carry seeds in the mud that stick to their feet; so if at sea a bird might bring you both a plant and earth to grow it in. Then there are sea-weeds, one that Bory St. Vincent says has branches fifteen hundred feet long; and even if we would we cannot get away from plant-life, for the late Dr. Leidy wrote a book entitled "A Fauna and Flora within Living Animals." It may be a little startling, but the microscopical anatomist can find out the trees and bushes that we carry about with us, as well as many a little animal. I say "we" for Leidy included man among the animals he studied when writing the book.

But this is May, and why deal in the world's uncanniness? I have often tried to determine what is the highest form of the plant-life within the range of wanderings, but it is a vain endeavor. When as to-day, all is so beautiful, why should one wish to make that which, if plants were conscious, would be an invidious distinction? Within a few paces are trees, vines, flowers, water plants, mosses, lichens and the green mould that tints the trees' bark and discolors the milk-white pebbles on the banks of the brooks. Not a form but is over-full of suggestiveness, not one that is unsightly. As I wandered among them I forgot the east wind, and that no birds were singing; but a change has come. The sun shines more brightly; the air is still. The thrush is tuning up in the near-by thicket, and a perfume distilled from many flowers greets me as I continue my journey after a restful hour with the plants.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Presbytery of North Alabama: Convened in the First Presbyterian church of Birmingham, Ala., on April 17th, at 7.30 p. m. Rev. J. G. Snedecor was chosen moderator, and Elder Montgomery, temporary clerk. The Revised Directory was approved. Messrs. G. W. Tollett and Robert Latimer were received under the case of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry. Rev. A. S. Doak was received from Tuscaloosa Presbytery.

Centre church was reported as having been organized in December last. Florence was selected as the place for the next meeting of Presbytery. Mr. C. O. Epperson, an elder in Somerville church, was licensed, under the extraordinary clause, as a probationer for the gospel ministry.

Two overtures to the Assembly were adopted. One of them prayed the Assembly to appoint a Committee of Conference to confer with a similar committee of any other Presbyterian church with a view to organic union, or closer co-operation. The other was with special reference to closer co-operation in Home Mission work with the Northern Presbyterian church. The Presbytery held conferences on Sabbath-school work, and the Home Mission work. Rev. J. H. Hammett was transferred to Knoxville Presbytery.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. W. G. F. Wallace was elected moderator, and Elder A. N. McCallum temporary clerk. Prof. W. S. Currell, of Davidson College was present, and addressed the Presbytery. The name of Great Pee Dee church was changed to Blenheim.

A committee was appointed to prepare and present at the next regular meeting a memorial of Rev. W. B. Corbett.

Arrangements were made to hold an Elders' and Deacons' Convention at Florence, August 8th. Rev. J. G. Law and Elder J. N. Drake were elected commissioners to the General Assembly. Alternates, Rev. A. H. McArn and Elder D. T. McNeill.

A conference on Foreign Missions was held, and a collection taken up for the cause. The cause of Home Missions was earnestly considered, and the following action taken:

1. That our people be urged to make liberal contributions to our own Home Mission work during the months of June and August; to the Invalid Fund during the month of July; and to the Assembly's Home Mission work during the month of September.

2. That our vacant churches be urged to form themselves into convenient groups, and use all diligence to have the pastoral relation established; and that the Executive Committee of Home Missions give them all the help that they can with the means at their disposal.

3 That our pastors, as far as practicable, establish preaching stations in connexion with their pastoral charges, and do all in their power to strengthen our stakes, and enlarge our borders, and stretch forth the curtains of our habitation throughout the length and breadth of our Presbyterial territory.

After a pleasant and harmonious meeting Presbytery adjourned Monday night, to meet at Blenheim, Thursday, September 13th, at 8 p. m.

We have found the Electropoise very valuable—especially for children. I got one last May, and I am sure I have saved three times its cost already in doctors and drug store bills. From my experience with it and observation, I can safely recommend it.

THE FOLLOWING PAPER WAS ADOPTED BY MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY, APRIL 4th, 1894.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg regards it as a solemn duty, in protecting and promoting the peace, purity and prosperity of the Church within its bounds, to utter once more, with no uncertain sound, its voice of warning, touching the great curse and the incalculable evils of strong drink.

It is simply a calm statement of stern and terrible facts to say, that the Liquor Traffic, in all its various ramifications, is doing more, directly and indirectly, than perhaps all other evils combined to increase and intensify human suffering and misery; to drain the country of its resources and to impoverish the people; to debase and brutalize the population; to promote illiteracy, and to keep the people in a state of sad and helpless ignorance; to crowd our insane institutions, our asylums, our jails, and our penitentiaries; to multiply crime in its many forms; to debauch our politics; to corrupt governments; to demoralize the masses; to arrest the progress of true religion, and mar the purity of the Church.

Moreover, we are confronted with the appalling fact, gathered from reliable and authoritative statistics, that this intolerable curse is on the increase. And it is true that this evil is to-day the most deadly foe of both the Church and the State, the most cruel and dangerous enemy of both God and man, in that it constitutes a general and stubborn barrier to the descent of heavenly blessing upon helpless man and in that it consigns annually its hundreds of thousands to drunkards' graves and to the drunkard's hell.

The Presbytery judges, therefore, that under existing circumstances, the only forcible and consistent attitude of any member of the Church is one of uncompromising and universal hostility to the manufacture, sale, and use as a beverage of any intoxicating drink.

And the Presbytery hereby enjoins the sessions of all the churches to refuse to admit to the Church, or to retain as members those who, after all due admonition and expostulation, persist in voluntarily occupying any position, which places them in the attitude of being responsible for, aiding or encouraging the manufacture, sale, or use as a beverage, by themselves or others, of any intoxicating liquors

In making this deliverance, the Presbytery is making no new departure, but is simply re-affirming its own judgment given at Rutherfordton, on the 20th of April, 1887, and endorsing the deliverances of our higher courts, notably those of our General Assembly, in 1867, and again 1877, and 1891.

Further, the Presbytery directs that each session be furnished with a copy of this paper and enjoins each session to see that it be read publicly from the pulpit to the congregation.

By order of Presbytery.

Attest: R. Z. JOHNSTON,
Stated Clerk.

As a Little Girl.

God knows me better than I know myself. He knows my weaknesses—what I can do and cannot do. So I desire to be led, to follow him, and I am quite sure that he will thus enable me to do a great deal more in ways which seem to me almost a waste in life, advancing his cause, than I could in any other way. I am sure of that. Intellectually, I am weak; in scholarship, nothing; in a thousand things, a baby. He knows this, and so he has led me and greatly blessed me; who am nobody, to be of some use to my church and fellow-men. How kind, how good, how compassionate art thou, O God! O my Father, keep me humble! Help me to have respect toward my fellow-men, to recognize these several gifts as from thee. Deliver me from the diabolical sins of malice, envy, or jealousy, and give me hearty joy in my brother's good, in his work, in his gifts and talents, and may I be truly glad in his superiority to myself, if God be glorified. Root out weak vanity, all devilish pride, all that is abhorrent to the mind of Christ! God hear my prayer! Grant me the wondrous joy of humiliation, which is seeing thee as all in all.—Norman Macleod's Diary.

Degradation of Politics.

There will certainly be no permanent municipal reform, so long as America tolerates the saloon. Men who know how political campaigns are managed in municipal affairs will not accept a nomination which by common custom makes them the prey of every beer-slinger. We have known reform candidates for judicial benches, who were without a stain upon their names or a vice of which they could be accused, led from bar to bar that they might win the vote of the slums by free beer. Nothing so speaks to us the degradation of politics as this. In many of our cities the Sabbaths before a municipal election are simply pandemonium let loose. The bar-tender poses as the dictator of American destiny. There is no candidate too lordly to do him obeisance. Between rival parties he consciously holds the balance of power. His royal sceptre is a beer-faucet. By a nod he makes or unmakes the credit of cities whose multitudes would once have constituted an empire. Shut up the saloons from the day of the first caucus until the election is decided and municipal politics would reform themselves. So long as the saloon door stands ajar at every corner of the street, the affairs of cities will probably be managed by men who are not above purchasing the privilege from the breweries. It is not a cheerful outlook even for the most confident optimist.—Interior.

AN APPEAL FOR CHINA.

Dr. H. M. Woods and Dr. H. C. DuBose, acting as a committee for the China Missions, appeal to the Church through the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, for twenty new missionaries to be sent to the help of that mission this year, of whom five shall be medical men.

The Executive Committee at its last meeting took action endorsing this appeal, and declaring its readiness to send these reinforcements, provided the men and women offer themselves, and the means are provided for their support.

Will not the Church have compassion on the perishing millions of China, and by the promptness and liberality of her response to this appeal, put it in our power to add these twenty to the number of those who are holding forth the Word of Life in that benighted land?

As the money required for the Congo Boat has now been about raised, it is suggested to the children of the Church who gave so liberally to that object last year, that they take for their special object this year the sending of these five medical missionaries to China. Let us see what child, or Children's Band, or Sunday-school, will be the first to answer this appeal.

Installation:—Rev. Joseph Evans was installed pastor of Clinton and Warsaw churches on Thursday the 26th, and of Rockfish and Duplin Roads, all in Wilmington Presbytery, on Friday, the 27th ult. The duty was performed by Rev. Dr. Hoge, Rev. A. D. McCluie and Rev. Peter McIntyre, the committee appointed by Presbytery. The programme was different at each point, the brethren alternating in the different parts. A good impression was made by the services, and the new pastor enters upon his work under most encouraging conditions.

First Presbyterian Church, Winston:—During the year ending March 31st, contributed over one thousand dollars to the cause of Foreign Missions. At the recent annual meeting the following officers were elected for the next year: President, J. M. Rogers; vice-president, Col. A. B. Gorrell; secretary; A. Bynum Glenn; treasurer, Capt. J. O. Magruder.

DOMESTIC.

The Scotch Church Case. This case, in the Presbytery of New York City, which has been, before, partly reported in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, has now been determined at the last meeting of Presbytery.

It was a case of peculiar interest to Presbyterians, as it involved, apparently, the clashing rights of session and congregation.

The matter came before Presbytery in the form of a complaint from a majority of the congregation against the session for refusing to grant their petition, asking for the calling of a meeting of the congregation to elect more elders.

The complainants argued the necessity of a larger session from the fact that it had been reduced by death and removal, and that all the four elders who had refused their petition, lived at a distance from the church, one of them—even in New Jersey, and seldom attending the ordinances of the church. They also claimed that a very large majority of the church had signed their petition.

The session (i. e., the majority complained of) tried, by an analysis of the petition to reduce the number of the actual petitioners. They also questioned the standing and influence of these. They argued too, the former custom of the session as the method of nominating and electing elders. Moreover they said that they did not refuse calling the meeting but only "for the present."

After a careful consideration of the whole matter, occupying the whole day, it was finally resolved "to dismiss the complaint, and to order a new election of elders to take place not later than the end of May, and also to advise the elders that nominations be made both by the session and the church members. S. G. L.

The national meeting of the Dunkards (German Baptists) will be held at the church in Myersdale, Pa., a town of 2,200 inhabitants, on 25th inst. A tabernacle capable of seating 5,000 people is building for their accommodation, also a building for book and tract work, a ticket and postoffice, a restaurant, lunch stand, dining hall and other houses. Entertainment has been provided for over $7,000 people. The town contributes seven acres of woodland, $400 in cash, electric lights and water.

FIRST CHURCH OF GREENSBORO, N. C.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

On last Sabbath morning I mentioned to my congregation, that the preceding Friday was the 20th of April—the day of may arrival in Greensboro in 1859, and therefore that this Sabbath was the first Sabbath of my 36th year in Greensboro. I briefly referred to the changes that had taken place during these 35 years—which I need not here repeat. My text on this occasion was Romans 14: 7, "None of us liveth to himself." A writer in our "Daily Record" of yesterday, referring to the pastor's reference to the day and the changes remarks how few of his large congregation that listened to him on yesterday, from that grand text, "No man liveth to himself," were present at his first sermon in the old church, which has given place to the handsome new one– and how few are left of us to remember the text of that day, "Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns," Jeremiah 4: 3.

At night, I recurred to the anniversary day again—and before preaching from Hebrews 11: 6, "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him," I stated that 35 years ago there was only one Presbyterian church in Greensboro—numbering 102 white members and 13 negroes—(115 in all.) Now, to say nothing of our present aad beautiful new church—and Westminster church—and St. James (colored) Presbyterian church—our First Presbyterian church reports 437 enrolled communicants—(of whom however 64 are non-resident.) Westminster reported last spring 215, and St. James, the colored church, reports 77 making in all 729—and after deducting the non-resident, we have 665, or nearly 6 times our number 35 years ago.

The following is the annual report that goes up to the Assembly next month from the First Presbyterian church of Greensboro, for the year ending March 31st, 1894:

Elders 9, deacons 10, added on profession 24, added on certificate 17, (=41), communicants on the roll 437, of whom 64 are non-resident, adults baptized 10, infants baptized 7, (=17), baptized non-communicants 150, children enrolled in Sabbath-school 266.

Moneys raised during the same period: Home Missions, $123.96; (Presbyterial, $70.26; Synodical, $29.55; General Assembly, $24.15); Foreign Missions, $341.44, Colportage, $20.00; Education for the ministry, $56.47; Church and Christian Education, $24.34, Invilad Fund, $18.50, Bible Cause, $18.24; Orphans' Home, $51 28; Colored Evangelization, $39.63; Presbyterial Fund, $40.00. These summed up make $733.86. For the two pastors—(the senior pastor one year and the co-pastor four months) $1,900.00. For Contingent and Poor Fund, and congregational expenses $1,607.07. For payment on the debt remaining for the new church, raised during the last year, $2,343,69. These three last items amounted to $5,850.76, which added to the $733.86, makes the sum of $6,584.62. Taking out now what was paid on the debt for the new church, it leaves $4,240.93 raised the past year ending March 31st, 1894—which exceeds, (even with the money paid on the debt taken out,) the amount raised during the year ending March 31st, 1893, (which was $3,220.) It would doubtless have been much larger, but for the stringency of the times, and the claims of the debt for the new church. There is at this time and has been for several months greatly increased interest manifested in every department of church work, and our congregations are larger than I have ever seen them. In view of all we thank God—take courage and are hopeful.

An overture to General Assembly to reject the report of the Birmingham committee on co-operation, &c., and to push our work among the colored people along our own chosen lines was adopted. A paper deprecating the tendencies to yield to Popish observances in certain quarters was adopted. Steps were taken looking to Presbytery's support of a missionary in the foreign field. Home Mission committees report approved and committee authorized to make such changes as the exigencies may demand. Narrative presents encouragement in all our churches.

ZEBULON BAIRD VANCE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The death of Senator Vance has called forth more widely extended expressions of love and sorrow, more glowing and beautiful heartfelt eulogies than that of any other citizen since North Carolina was a State.

Only a very remarkable man could have deserved or received such an ovation in death, and he was a remarkable man: all classes and parties of men could not otherwise thus be united in lamentation and loving tributes over his grave.

There are many readers of our Church paper who will not be displeased to see in its columns, something more than a bare announcement of our loss. A bright light has been extinguished—what made its brightness?

Gov. Vance was in the first place gifted by nature with an unmatched original genius. He had many fine traits of character, natural ability, generosity, good judgment, sound sense. These he possessed in common with many other of our foremost men whom we have delighted to honor. But he had more than these—that rare and brilliant faculty which elevates, expands and fires every other attribute of the soul. We call it genius, and it was this that gave the color and flash to every facet of his character.

Genius has too often led its owner astray. Gov. Vance was singularly fortunate in the setting that circumstances gave him. He was especially so in having been watched and guarded, and tenderly loved all his life by the strong heart of noble and deeply religious women. His mother whose memory was ever precious to him, gave him the habits of industry, the conscientiousness, the integrity, the religious principles; the familiarity with the Bible which became a part of his nature, added the needed balance to his character, and marked him always.

His first wife deepened these impressions. He married early before the world had worn him, and she so influenced him through the most dangerous part of his career that he regarded her as his guardian angel, and attributed to her unflinching consistency and unceasing vigilance, his escape in those early days from shipwreck.

In Foote's "Sketches of North Carolina" there is a warm tribute to the memory of Rev. Thomas Espy who was the pastor of several Presbyterian churches in the western part of North Carolina more than sixty years ago. He died young in 1833, of consumption, at the home of Robert Burton, of Beattie's Ford, leaving a wife, and an infant daughter who became twenty years afterwards the wife of a young mountaineer from Buncombe county, destined to become the foremost man of North Carolina. Foote represents Mr. Espy as a man of delicate physique but of very earnest and fearless character. Not enthusiastic, but deeply, unaffectedly pious, never hesitating at a duty, and blessed in his brief life and on his death-bed in being the means of conversion to many.

These traits this generation has seen reproduced in his daughter. Mrs. Vance was a woman of strong convictions. She had the courage of of them, and lived up to them. She died in 1878, at Raleigh, not long after her husband had been a third time installed Governor of the State. She had much to live for yet, but her work was ended, and she recognized it. When she was dying she asked to be turned with her face to the wall—and a little after, a friend in attendance heard her breathe to herself the well-known lines:

"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."

Another woman's hand was to finish the work which the simple North Carolina Presbyterian girl and the plain old mother in Buncombe county had begun and carried on. The second Mrs. Vance is a woman of fine culture and of wide and elegant social relations. Though not belonging to our communion, she is of the old "blue-grass" Presbyterian stock, and therefore of congenial fundamental principles with her husband. If these be assured noble natures may assimilate, and grow together and become helpmeets whatever differences in outward forms there may be. She is a religious woman, and to her tender and gracious companionship, her fine tact, her generous devotion we all owe it that many difficulties were smoothed from his path, and that his life has been prolonged in unspeakable domestic love and happiness.

Soon after the death of his first wife Gov. Vance joined on profession, the First Presbyterian church in Raleigh. In a letter I received from him at the time, he bitterly regretted that he had so long postponed this step that she had not the joy of winessing it. He retained all his life strong and sound religious belief. Speculative infidelity never assailed his mind. His faith was like that of all great souls, as simple as a child's, and as unwavering. He was satisfied to believe, where he could not presume to know. I feel quite sure that his great familiarity with the Bible was the secret spring of all that made him so peculiarly the man of the people. It was the source of his manliness, his broad and genial recognition of humanity, his love of truth, his honesty, and his simplicity of mind. That ploughshare went through and through him and did its work effectually.

But whatever Vance owed to his genius, to his good fortune, or to the circumstances of his life, there was still another factor, to which they who aspire to be like him would do well to turn their gaze. He was a laborious worker, a diligent student. When he found himself settled in Washington with leisure for such work, he told a friend that he proposed to give himself to hard study, to reading, to the full understanding of his duties as a U. S. Senator. So close, in the years that have elapsed, has been his application, that the loss of his eye not only was attributed to overwork, but also the steady progress of the nervous affection which has now ended his life, we may say prematurely. For at sixty-four a man should be doing his best work and should be continuing it for ten or fifteen years to come. It all depends however on what he has taken out of himself in the previous half-century. Nature being a bank at which one may easily and insensibly and immediately overdraw one's account.

Gov. Vance always gave the people his best, he spared no pains to learn what the best was. That he erred sometimes is probable, as he was human, but very few indeed of us have been competent to detect these errors, and none of us may sit in judgment on them now. He has long been considered the peer of the greatest of our great men, and if he had lived ten years longer in health he would have been by far the greatest of them all. Take him all round I myself doubt if North Carolina has ever produced his equal.

The loss of his public services is for the present a loss irreparable. His official successors there will be, but no man can fill his place during this generation either in the Senate, or in our hearts. "Eclipse was first, and the rest nowhere."

We will endeavor to console ourselves with the spectacle of a brave and manly and noble life well rounded to its close. He died well assured that he possessed the unbounded love and confidence of all good men and women in his own beloved North Carolina, "this great and gallant State" as he called her, and he must have known and felt that he deserved this devotion, being himself a true son of the soil, and so we heap his grave with laurel and leave him to his rest.

For when the mighty pass away,
What is it more than this,
That man who is from God sent forth
Doth yet again to God return.

Second Quarter.—Lesson VII.

May 13.—Israel in Egypt.

Exodus i. 1-14. Commit vss. 8-10.

Golden Text. Our help is in the name of the Lord.—Ps. cxxiv. 8.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The important consideration now is the chronology. When Abraham had been in Canaan a while God tells him that his posterity should dwell in a strange land 400 years (Gen. xv. 13). In Ex. xii. 40, 41, the period is exactly fixed at 430 years. In neither case is this said to be the duration of their stay in Egypt, but Gal. iii. 17 interprets it to be the time from Abraham to the Exodus, or the whole period in which they were pilgrims and strangers. The birth of Isaac was 25 years after Abraham came into Canaan (Gen xii. 4 and xxi. 5); and Isaac was 60 years old when Jacob was born (xxv. 26), and Jacob was 130 years old when he stood before Pharaoh (xlvii. 9) making in all 215 years of sojourn in Canaan and leaving 215 years for the sojourn in Egypt. As the great Oppressor is now known without doubt to have been Rameses II, the "new king who knew not Joseph" must have been Seti I, the founder of the 19th dynasty who overthrew the last king of the 18th dynasty in an uprising that grew largely out of revolt against the Semitic tendencies of those kings. This would require Joseph's Pharaoh to have been a king of the 18th dynasty, which is much more in accord with the historical allusions of Joseph's history, than the common theory that Joseph's Pharaoh was one of the shepherd kings that preceded the 18th dynasty. Joseph's career was evidently in a time of internal peace, and the manners and customs of the kings were thoroughly Egyptian. The only difficulty with this theory is the short time allowed for Israel to grow into a nation, of which we will speak below.

Second Step. Note carefully the statements of the lesson; the names of Israel's sons, vss. 1-5; the passing away of that generation, vs. 6; the phenomenal multiplication of the people, vs. 7; the change of dynasty, and revolution of sentiment towards Israel, vss. 8-10; the policy adopted, vss. 11, 13-15; see also vss. 16, 22 below the lesson; its failure, vs. 12.

Third Step Take up points requiring explanation with your helps.

Vs. 1. Every man and his household. The household consisted not only of the women and children, but of the servants, who were included in the covenant (Gen. xvii. 27). Abraham's household included 318 men capable of bearing arms (Gen. xiv. 14). These facts must be borne in mind in considering the increase of the Israelites.

Vs. 5. Seventy souls. The list in Gen. xlvi, includes 12 sons, 53 grandsons and 1 granddaughter and 4 great-grandsons. Er and Onan who died in Canaan are counted—probably because households were allotted to them according to the custom of keeping up the names of males. There must have been many other grand-daughters and this one was mentioned for some special reason.

Vs. 7. Were fruitful. There are five expressions in this verse to indicate that the increase of the Israelites was phenomenal and unprecedented. Reasonable calculations show that it was possible, and it is unreasonable to seek for parallels to what the record tells us was unparalleled.

Vs. 8. A new king. Rather "a new dynasty." The persecution began in the reign of Seti I and continued through the long reign of Rameses II and until the Exodus in the reign of Menephtah. Rameses was associated with his father in administration from his early manhood, and he may have been the originator of the policy of persecution. The discovery and identification of his mummy which is now in the Boulaq Museum at Cairo is one of the romances of our day. His features show great strength and sternness of character.

Vs. 9. "More and mightier than we;" either this has reference to the particular province in which they were, or it is an exaggerated expression meaning "unmanageably numerous."

Vs. 11. "Treasure cities, Pithom and Rameses," The discovery of one of these cities is another romance of modern learning. M. Noville in 1883-'84 uncovered a treasure city on the bricks of which were marked the name Pi-tum, "devoted to Tum" and inscriptions showing that it was built by Rameses II. This conclusively identified Rameses as the oppressor, and accounts for the name of the other city—as yet undiscovered. The walls are 650 feet square and 22 feet thick and the whole space is divided into chambers without windows and doors and divided by walls 8 or 10 feet thick.

Vs. 14. They made their lives bitter. The pictures on the monuments show the same scene constantly—toiling laborers with taskmasters over them armed with whips to spur them on. These pictures are not made by their enemies but by the kings themselves to perpetuate the memory of their greatness.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours.

SUMMARY.—The generation of Joseph passes away and the seventy souls that came into Egypt with their households have increased into a numerous nation. A change of dynasty is followed by a revolution of sentiment towards Israel and Joseph's services are forgotten. Fearing lest the people of Israel should prove unfaithful subjects in time of war the Egptian counsellors decide to reduce them by persecution and heavy labors, during which time they build the stone cities of Pithom and Rameses. The failure of this policy only makes their persecutors more vigorous, until their lives are made bitter by the severity of their labors.

Fifth Step. Instead of the ordinary topical Bible Reading, review the history of Israel in Egypt, noting the steps in God's plan. (This reading is taken from the S. S Times.)

Israel in Egypt.

A subject of prophecy, Gen. xv. 13; Acts vii. 6.
Joseph carried there, Gen. xxxvii. 28; xxxix. 1; Acts vii. 9.
Joseph exalted there, Gen. xli. 41-44; Acts vii. 9, 10.
Joseph's brethren arrive, Gen. xlii. 1-6; Acts vii. 12.
Jacob and family arrive, Gen. xlvi. 1-7; Acts vii. 15.
Israel located in Goshen, Gen. xlvi. 34; xlvii. 11, 27.
Israel's wonderful increase, Ex. i. 7, 9.

Sixth Step. Prayerfully contemplate the slow unfolding of God's plan and learn the lesson of trust. Meditate on the hymns, "God moves in a mysterious way," and "Great God, how infinite art Thou," especially verse 4; also on 2 Peter iii. 8. Of this same truth the finding of Rameses and the identification of Pithom, almost at the same time, after all these ages, is a striking illustration. Full accounts of these events are found in, "The Finding of Pharoah," Century Magazine, May 1887, profusely illustrated, in the article by Dr. W. W. Moore in the Union Seminary Magazine for Sept.-Oct., 1891, and in the "Pharoah's of the Bondage and Exodus" by Dr. C. S. Robinson.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Make much of the historical discoveries bearing upon the lesson. Bring one or more pictures of Rameses and show them to the class. They are found in Peloubet's Notes for 1894, the Sunday School Times containing this lesson, and the Century article above mentioned. Some of your friends may have copies of the photograph sold in the "Streets of Cairo" at the World's Fair.

NEW QUESTIONS.

55. Several answered Q. 49, "the captive Jewish maiden," which was correct in fact but not in expression. Why?
56. Seventy heads of families are mentioned in the lesson. What Israelitish assembly preserved the number.
57. At what other time did some one seek the destruction of the Israelites for their growing wealth and power.

Believe in God's love, and, you, like many another wounded soldier, shall yet win the battle. To say, "I cannot," in matters of daily duty is weak and feeble; to say it of spiritual duties is blasphemy and death. It is blasphemy, for it charges God with sins which you pretend to be unavoidable; it is death, because it is the inevitable prelude to self-abandonment and to despair.—Archdeacon Farrar.

Perhaps it is one of the best tests of one's unselfish love or friendship, if when opportunity offers, he is able through regard for another's feeling, to refrain from saying either by word or look, "I told you so."—United Presbyterian.

On April 5th, 1894, at Oxford, N. C., Mr. W. T. LAWRENCE. No young man's death could have cast a sadder gloom over our entire community, or left a vacant space so hard to fill in the hearts of his associates. In him a kind and faithful friend, a true and devoted companion has passed to his reward.

J. E. T.

About 8.45 p. m., April 20th, 1894, at his home in Matthews, N. C., in the 49th year of his age, Mr. J. T. BARRETT fell asleep in Jesus.

Mr. Barrett was a native of Anson county. On January 11th, 1865, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah M. McLaughlin, of Union county, which union God blessed with one son and two daughters—all of whom survive him. He had been unwell for some time, but no one felt alarm about his condition until about two weeks before his death, when it became evident that he was suffering from a disease which would alike baffle loving care and tender nursing together with the skill of leading physicians. The Master had need of him, therefore called him, and in obedience to that divine call he laid down his weapons of Christian warfare and betook himself to the shining court of heaven.

He was a devoted, genial husband, companion; a tender, sympathizing, loving father; a modest, retiring, humble, loyal Christian; a kind, considerate employer; a true and tried friend to the poor; a business man in whose honesty and integrity every one had unbounded confidence.

Truly a great man has fallen; a happy home circle broken—bereaved; a community caused to mourn and the Church militant to lament their loss, while the Church triumphant opened wider her arms to receive him.

The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church, which he so dearly loved, and whose services he so faithfully attended. The house was filled to overflowing by one of the largest concourses of people ever witnessed in our town.

The colored people, realizing that they also had lost a friend came in goodly numbers to pay their tribute of respect and veneration.

But few will miss him more than his pastor, whose heart he so often cheered and comforted, especially by his faithful attendance upon and appreciative attention to the usual services. He was one of a faithful few who attended and enjoyed the weekly prayer-meeting, a faithful and earnest Sabbath-school scholar. His place in the choir is left vacant, his voice hushed on earth but to be attuned to the melodies of heaven.

When asked if he knew his condition and told that he must soon leave his beloved family, kindred and friends he was not alarmed, but bore up with Christian fortitude. And when one of the stricken family, whose hearts were being wrung by the consciousness that he whom they so dearly loved must soon leave them, would come to minister to his wants with eyes red from weeping and tears still flowing, he would admonish them not to weep for him, that he was ready. "Be ready." "Be ready" was a favorite expression with him.

A few hours before the summons came he wearily exclaimed: "Let me go where I can rest." Who can doubt that he—

"Heard the voice of Jesus say,
Come unto me and rest,
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast."

Taste

has lost lives. In former years people wouldn't take Cod-liver Oil on account of its bad taste. Now we have the Cream of Cod-liver Oil, which is palatable and easier on the digestive organs than plain oil, besides being more effective. Physicians, the world over, endorse it.

Scott's Emulsion

HOUSE-CLEANING.

From cellar unto attic, all is clean :
Nothing there is that need evade the eye ;
All the dark places, by the world unseen,
Are as well ordered as what open lie.

From winter's revelry and summer's ease,
Souls seem to get as foul as houses do ;
Each spring, each autumn, revolution sees ;
And they are "swept and garnished all anew."

Spirit, how is it with those rooms of thine ?
What front the world look very clean and fair ;
Thy curtains are so white, thy windows shine,
Are dirt and cobwebs hiding anywhere ?

Ah ! souls are houses ; and to keep them well,
Nor, spring and autumn, mourn the wretched plight,
To daily toil must Vigilance compel,
Right underneath God's scrutinizing light.

Items for Lady Readers.

A STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL.

The room being decorated and the tables arranged, let us suggest a few items for the menu cards themselves, as follows :

Strawberries and Cream
Strawberry Wafers Strawberries a l' Anglaise
Strawberry Cake
Strawberry Ice Cream Strawberry Ice.

writes Caroline Atwater Mason in an article on "A Strawberry Festival" in the May Ladies' Home Journal.

In addition to the above menu, various salads of salmon or lobster, and delicate ham and tongue thinly sliced—carrying out the scheme of color—with rolls, coffee and chocolate, may be served. This would be almost demanded of the festival should be thrown open in the afternoon, in order to furnish a substantial supper to those who come early and wish to remain late.

The strawberry being, in my own opinion, too noble a berry to be taken many liberties with by way of mutilation or cooking, I shall give but one receipt, that for the strawberry cake.

For the strawberry cake use any rule which results in a good white cake, not over-rich. It should be baked in three layers. For filling and frosting, beat together hard for half an hour the whites of two eggs, one cup of sugar and one cup of fresh strawberries. If you can get field strawberries you will be happy indeed, but that is hardly likely. This is a very pretty cake and also a most delicious one.

The aids, or rather the pretty maids, who may have been selected to be merry and patient and wise waitresses at a strawberry festival, may be dressed alike in soft red dresses made of cheese-cloth —the skirts made plain and very full ; the baby waists and puffed sleeves sewed with yellow dots of silk to imitate the seeds of the strawberry. The sashes should be of soft green cheese-cloth. On their heads these dainty waitresses, to make them still more attractive, may wear small green paper caps, made from a pattern cut from a strawberry hull.

Strawberry and vanilla ice cream, angels' food, sponge cake, small blocks of cake iced in pink and white, are all suitable dainties for strawberry festivals. The strawberries themselves may be served either hulled or unhulled. If served unhulled only the most carefully-selected berries should be used. They look most inviting arranged upon shallow glass plates, in the centre of which is placed an after-dinner coffee-cup of powdered sugar. At a strawberry festival it would be an excellent plan to have plates of berries arranged in this way ready to hand to any purchaser.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Things Useful.

To renovate scratched furniture dissolve beeswax in turpentine, making it of the consistency of molasses ; apply with a woollen cloth, then rub briskly with a dry piece of flannel. The improvement is wonderful.

To stiffen ginghams, muslins and calicoes, drop a piece of alum the size of a hickory nut into the starch. The alum is dissolved, then stirred into the starch. The fabrics so treated will retain their beauty of coloring for a long time.

Cream of Pea Soup.—Shell half a peck of green peas, wash the pods, put them into a soup kettle with plenty of cold water ; boil until tender ; drain and throw away the pods. Put the peas into the water and boil them three-quarters of an hour. Take out one cup of the peas and mash the rest through a sieve. Put them back again into the soup kettle (the soup should now measure about a pint) ; add three pints of rich milk and the cup of peas ; let it come to a boil. Rub a quarter of a pound of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour to a smooth paste and stir into the soup ; add a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, season with pepper and salt. A tablespoonful of white sugar and a sprig of mint are pleasant additions.

White Cabbage Salad.—Set a firm white cabbage in cold and let it stand some hours, then dry well and shred very fine. For the dressing take a piece of butter the size of a walnut and a tablespoonful of flour, mix well, and add two tablespoonsful of vinegar or sour lemon juice ; scald for a minute, then add the beaten yolk of an egg and two tablespoonsful of cream, with seasoning to taste. Pour over and serve.

A SURGEON'S KNIFE

gives you a feeling of horror and dread. There is no longer necessity for its use in many diseases formerly regarded as incurable without cutting.

The Triumph of Conservative Surgery is well illustrated by the fact that RUPTURE or Breach, is now radically cured without the knife and without pain. Clumsy, chafing trusses can be thrown away ! They never cure but often induce inflammation, strangulation and death.

TUMORS Ovarian, Fibroid (Uterine) and many others, are now removed without the perils of cutting operations.

PILE TUMORS, however large, Fistula and other diseases of the lower bowel, are permanently cured without pain or resort to the knife.

STONE in the Bladder, no matter how large, is crushed, pulverized, washed out and perfectly removed without cutting.

STRICTURE of Urinary Passage is also removed without cutting in hundreds of cases. For pamphlet, references and all particulars, send 10 cents (in stamps) to World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous ; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

SPRING-SONG FOR THE CHAUNCEY HALL KINDERGARTEN.

Old Mother Earth woke up from sleep,
And found she was cold and bare;
The winter was over, the spring was near,
And she had not a dress to wear!
"Alas!" she sighed with great dismay,
"Oh, where shall I get my clothes,
There's not a place to buy a suit,
And a dressmaker no one knows."

"I'll make you a dress," said the springing grass,
Just looking above the ground;
"A dress of green of the loveliest sheen,
To cover you all around."
"And we," said the dandelions gay,
"Will dot it with yellow bright;"
"I'll make it a fringe," said Forget-me-not,
"Of blue, very soft and light."
"We'll embroider the front," said the violets,
"With a lovely purple hue;"
"And we," said the roses, "will make you a crown
Of red, jewelled over with dew."
"And we'll be your gems," said a voice from the shade,
"Where the ladies' ear-drops live—
Orange is a color for any queen,
And the best that we have to give."

Old Mother Earth was thankful and glad,
As she put on her dress so gay;
And that is the reason, my little ones,
She is looking so lovely to-day.

Miss Lucy Wheelock, in Our Dumb Animals.

"Two Are Better Than One."

Dwight was very anxious to start for school.

"I wish I could go now," he said. "Sanford had just gone by."

"O, well!" said his mother, "you know the way as well as Sanford does."

"Yes, mother; but 'two are better than one,' you know. What if Sanford should fall down, and have no fellow to lift him up?"

Mrs. Crawford laughed. She understood this somewhat bewildering sentence. Dwight had been learning his "junior" verse for the day, and had repeated it to her in wonderment; he had not known there was such a verse in the Bible. "Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labor. For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellows: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth, and hath not another to lift him up."

"Very well," said Mrs. Crawford, after a moment, "if the case is urgent, go ahead; you can do the errands at noon. Only see to it that it is not you who fall, instead of Sanford."

Then Dwight kissed his mother, and made a rush for the door. It was easy to overtake Sanford. They jogged on together after that, at an easy pace. They were just entering the school grounds when Sanford nudged his friend's elbow. "Look there," he said, "up in that tree. I'll bet you a cookie that that is Joe Burke's paper with his corrected sentences on that he made such a fuss about. They blew out of the window when he opened it yesterday, and have lodged in that hollow. Let's get a look at them."

The boys made a dash for the tree. Sanford went up its bare branches like a squirrel. "Yes, sir!" he called out; "these are the very papers. Good for him—mean scamp! he is always cheating, or doing an ill turn of some sort to a fellow. I wouldn't steal his papers, though he glared at me as if he thought I did; but I'm awful glad he hasn't got 'em. It's the only lesson he is sharp in; he won't beat me now."

"I'm glad too," began Dwight. "Isn't it a lucky thing he had the window open when he ought not to have had? We'll come off with flying colors this morning, if he hasn't written them out again, and I don't believe he could get anybody to dictate for him to copy. We'll keep dark until after"—and here Dwight came to a sudden pause. "For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow." Were they two on the very edge of a tumble? It looked like it. And what was that his mother said?

"Look here, Sanford," he said; "don't let's do it. That would be putting ourselves on a level with Joe, for meanness. Let's take them in and tell him where we found them; they are all wet and muddy, but he can copy them before class."

There was a short argument, but Dwight prevailed, and the two marched into school, rescued papers in hand.

"I wouldn't be a bit surprised if you put them there yourselves," was Joe's gracious reply to this kindness.

"There's gratitude for you!" said Sanford as he moved away.

"Never mind," said Dwight, "we know we didn't; but, do you know old fellow, you came pretty near a tumble this morning?"

"What! from that tree? Nonsense! I never thought of such a thing as tumbling."

Dwight laughed; but he knew what he meant, and he said to himself that mother would understand, but boys weren't so quick as mothers.—The Pansy.

Why the Lawrence Children Had No May-Day Party.

They were all sitting in Polly's room, talking over the party. It was to be "perfectly lovely," as little Bessie had said. They were even to have German mottoes. These were a great treat to the children of the Lawrence family. It was nearing May-day, and Mamma and Papa Lawrence had told the children that they might celebrate it by a May-day party. The children had all hopped up and down with glee, even to little Bessie, who had "never seen a party before," as little Dick expressed it, and now they had come up in Polly's room to talk it over. There were six of them in all. Pauline was the oldest, then came Polly and Belle, Rob, Dick and Bessie, the pet of the family, and if ever any one looked like a pet she did, with her long, golden curls, blue eyes and rosy cheeks.

"Won't it be just lovely?" cried Bob, jumping up off the edge of the bed.

"And we're going to have Dutch mottoes," piped up little Bessie. This, of course, made them all laugh, and just in the midst of their fun Pauline entered.

"O, Pauline, isn't it just lovely," exclaimed Polly, running up. "Why, what is the matter, can't we have it," she said, as she saw Pauline's sorrowful face.

"If you like," she said quietly.

"Of course we like," said Rob.

"All sit still while I tell you something," said Pauline. "You all know of the poor family at the end of our street. The father has just died and left them without a penny in the world. They have nothing to eat, nor anything to make food out of, how many of you are willing to give the money which would go for preparations for the party, to help this family! Papa says not to urge you, but to let you give it if you like; how many of you will?" she asked, looking around at the little group before her.

"And not have any party?" asked Belle, anxiously.

"Why no, not if you give the money to this family, are any of you willing?"

"I am," said Polly, stoutly although a struggle was going on in her heart.

"O, dear," said Dick, "I want it awful bad."

"I will, Lina," said Bessie. That settled it, at any rate when they came trooping out of Polly's room about a half an hour later, all had said "yes."

On the afternoon before May day, if you had been there, you might have seen six merry children run down the street, two of them carrying a basket between them, stop at a little, old house, set the basket down in front of the door, knock, and then run around the corner of the house. The Lawrence children thought it well worth their sacrifice to see the basket brought in and unpacked by the mother, while tears of joy ran down her cheeks. All this, and more they saw, slyly looking in the windows. The children in both families went to bed that night with happy hearts.—Presbyterian.

Eliza and Matilda Ann.

Eliza grew up so fast and high that she could soon look away up to the gardens on the hillside. Matilda Ann's growth was so slow that she could only peep at the flowers in the neighbor's yard.

"And it's just because you are not me," said Eliza one day with a toss of her head. "Of course you're three years younger than I am, but that wouldn't make much difference if you tried to grow as I do, instead of letting your strength go into your fat arms and feet. I should think you'd have some ambition to be delicate and lady-like. Just see how slender and graceful I am."

"Yes, indeed," pleasantly answered Matilda Ann as a breeze swept through the garden and swayed her sister's arms very gracefully, while hers scarcely moved at all.

"And people always look at me first," said Eliza, "though you do have such fine bouquets of flowers in June, and try to coax the children to praise you for the great heaps of nuts you throw down to them in the fall. The sun shines on me ever so many minutes before it even touches you. And see—there's a robin flying this way with some straw in her bill. I know where she wants to build her nest."

"I saw her looking up at you the other day," smiled Matilda Ann.

And sure enough the robin at once began her nest on one of Eliza's graceful arms, close up to the finely-shaped brown shoulder.

"I should think you'd see how foolish you are not to grow slender and lady-like as I do," cried the tall sister, triumphantly.

"See there now," she called again, when the nest was all ready for its soft lining, "I shall soon be full of songs."

And she gave her arms such a proud toss that the mother robin flew off to her mate with a sharp cry.

"It shakes—it shakes!" she seemed to say. And the father bird seemed to think she was right when he looked up and saw how the nest was rocking.

But they nodded to each other as they glanced at Matilda Ann's strong arms and noticed how little the wind moved them.

"They'll do, they'll do," was the chorus of their happy song when they had examined them with care. The very next day they began to build a nest there, and made the garden echo with their happy songs, while Eliza was very much ashamed at the empty nest which she could not shake down for a long while.

When I looked up at her the other day she nodded to me as much as to say, "I don't mean to behave so proudly again, if I am a graceful elm and my sister a horse-chestnut, for we were named after the two little girls who used to live in the house where you are spending the summer. And they're both kind, gentle-hearted women now."—Morning Star.

"I positively will not use cosmetics," said a lady to the writer, "yet my complexion is so bad that it occasions me constant mortification. What can I do to get rid of these dreadful blotches?" "Take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," was my prompt reply. "Your complexion indicates that you are suffering from functional derangements. Remove the cause of the blotches and your cheeks will soon wear the hue of health. The 'Favorite Prescription' is a wonderful remedy for all diseases peculiar to your sex. Its proprietors guarantee to return the money if it does not give satisfaction. But it never fails. Try it." The lady followed my advice, and now her complexion is as clear as a babe's, and she enjoys better health then she has for many years.

To permanently cure constipation, biliousness and sick-headache take Dr. Pierce's Pellets. Of dealers.

Bergen, in Norway, boasts of a church built entirely of paper. It has been rendered waterproof by a solution of quicklime, curdled milk and white of eggs, and it will seat 1,000 persons in comfort.

Proud of His Business Co-workers.

"Yes, I am real proud of the splendid body of men and women we haye to represent us in the various parts of the country; many of them are among the best men and women that ever walked the sod, and we wish to employ a few more." This is the explanation that Mr. B. F. Johnson of the firm B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., gives of their advertisement.

THE REST.

Men by nature lost and ruined in The Fall are taken captive with the pleasures, or seeking the riches or in bondage to the cares of this present world. The regenerate are tempted by these things. All seek after those things that gratify the appetite or lusts or increase the possessions or serve sentiment. The present or at best the present world, occupies the attention, dominates the thoughts and controls the efforts of most men. They live as if this life were all and the body supreme. In this mind and life they seek rest, and do not find it. It is not to be had in this world. The rest remaineth. Here the earnest of rest, its foretaste and warrant and assurance are received but its fullness remaineth to the people of GOD. "'Tis found alone in Heaven." There are many evidences before us that this is not our rest. This world is as a sea driven of the wind, drawn by the tides, rolling and tossing in its might and majesty. It is a wilderness with many flowers, though blooming in the midst of thorns, with fruits, though subject to blights and blasts of winter and frost, growing and good. It is a field with good soil but to be subdued and cultivated only by much toil and trouble. Each life is as a frail bark set out upon this trackless sea, requiring a compass and pilot to direct strong arms and brave hearts to struggle through its storms, seeking a distant harbor. It is as a stranger and sojourner passing through this wilderness with only food for the passer by and flowers for the moment of coming and going. It is as a laborer with a corner of the field to make a harvest for the present needs and the later sowing and reaping. In no view is there the idea of rest There may be idleness and dull indifference or stupefaction or momentary sensuous gratification but this is not rest, the rest of the soul. The patriarchs and prophets did not find it. ABRAHAM was in a land of plenty with no intimation of lack of any worldly good when he was called to leave all and go to a land to him unknown. His descendants were wanderers, save ISAAC, who found no rest with reckless ESAU and wrestling JACOB. JOSEPH came to the throne of Egypt not by his goodness, but by the hatred of his brethren and through many temptations and snares. MOSES was in the way of promotion and power. He had great learning, But he was flung out from these into a wilderness that he might become a great law-giver. So runs the history of great and small. There is no rest in fame, or learning or wealth or power. If in a measure attained these never satisfy, but rather increase envy, opposition and even persecution. When they or any of the desires of our worldly ambitions are attained they must be discounted by the losses and crosses, the poverty and persecutions the afflictions and trials common to men. Bereavements do not wait on the consent of men to cast their shadow on the hearthstone, to leave vacant seats at the table or an empty cradle by the bed. Even the fairest scenes are shaded or saddened by some unwelcome presence. When the wedding bells ring, and the sun shines that the guests may say, "Blessed is the bride that the sun shines on," the very pride of the groom in his fair bride is the sorrow of the mother at parting and the cause of the father's anxious look to the future and the half faithless wish of friends that such a cloudless life as they feel cannot be may always be theirs. In the home of wealth, convenience, good taste, elegance and comfort snatched from pitiless fate by toil and talent, where the envious eye of those less successful pictures bliss, will always be found something of sickness or sorrow to take away a real rest.

This world cannot satisfy. The nobler natures that see the truth and hear the call of duty are never satisfied. There often comes to GOD'S children contentment and a blessed sense and experience of GOD'S goodness, but these are never satisfied with this at its best but look higher and further on for rest. The mind does not have time and scope for all its duty, meditation, plans and hopes. Its best hopes are rarely realized and beyond, in the lines of others, appear blighted hopes, uncompleted plans and labors, unfulfilled ambitions and wasted strength, and still beyond misused. talents, perverted gifts and misapplied energies. The lives of greatest promise, where rare mental powers with much careful preparations have wrought a special fitness for some high trust and great deeds of nobler achievements, are cut off in their strength, and the mystery of it is not solved if we expect rest in this life. Nothing lower than GOD and nothing short of eternity can give rest to a man immortal and created in the image of GOD.

Since this world is not and cannot be our rest the firm persuasion that a rest remains for the people of GOD to be complete in Heaven becomes of the highest importance and a choice of that rest as our desire and a definite, distinct determination to seek that rest is most important. In comparison with this, wealth or any other worldly securities or success is as nothing. These things may come as added blessings and means of usefulness and are not to be undervalued in their places. But the higher aim of seeking the rest eternal must make the getting of any worldly good secondary and its holding as a responsibility to GOD and our fellow-men. We may have and hold these only as stewards who must give account, only as borrowers who may use and return with interest.

Since the soul is satified only in proportion as it finds rest and this world cannot give that rest there is a new meaning and force in the words: "What shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" It is therefore important to arouse ourselves to seek the rest that remaineth lest any fail to enter after the example of unbelieving Israel in the wilderness. The rest we seek is eternal, sacred, sure. At the last we may well covet to say with the dying STONEWALL JACKSON: "Let us pass over the river and rest under the shade of the trees."

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The annual meeting of the Trustees of this institution was held on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week.

The public exercises were of unusual interest and profit. On the Sunday night preceding the address before the Society of Inquiry—the students' missionary association—was made by Rev. J. F. CANNON, D. D. We did not have the privilege of hearing it, but it was spoken of in terms of highest praise. On Tuesday night the inauguration of Dr. ENGLISH as STUART ROBINSON Professor of the English Bible and Pastoral Theology took place. The charge was delivered by Rev. L. B. TURNBULL, late of Richmond, Va., and now of Durham, N. C. The Inaugural of Dr. ENGLISH was on the subject of the Preacher; his physical, mental and spiritual preparation. It was replete with sound, practical sense, earnest, Scriptural and spiritual. Its effect was most happy and satisfied the Board of the wisdom of their choice.

On Wednesday certificates were delivered to the graduating class. It was a fine, earnest body of young men who stood up to receive them. The address was made by Rev. W. D. MORTON, D.D., of Henderson, N. C. His subject was the choice of a field, and it was based on the biography of PAUL, on the four critical periods of his life. Those who know Dr. MORTON will know its deep spiritual earnestness, and how profitable to young men about to enter the ministry he would make such a theme.

The most important duty awaiting the Board was the election of a Professor to succeed the honored and lamented Dr. PECK, who finished his course just as the last session was opening. Happily the way was made very plain. Dr. C. R. VAUGHAN who had been called to instruct Dr. PECK'S classes before his death, had given such eminent satisfaction, and had brought to the chair such admirable capacities for interesting and instructing his classes, that the Board could entertain no other thought than to retain him. On account of his advanced years it was not regarded as expedient to make the election for more than a year, and this arrangement was entirely satisfactory to DR. VAUGHAN.

Proposition having been made offering inducements to move the Seminary to some new point in Virginia the board expressed its willingness to receive and consider all such propositions and appointed a committee of five, viz: Rev. Dr. J. RUMPLE, Col. W. J. MARTIN, Rev. Dr. H. M. WHITE, Maj. J. HOGE TYLER and Col. J. P. FITZGERALD, to take into consideration any proposition relat to the subject.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were: Rev. A. C. HOPKINS, D. D., President; Prof. W. J. MARTIN and Mr. J.M. SYDENSTRICKER, Vice-President; Col. J. P. FITZGERALD, Secretary and Treasurer.

HERE AND THERE.

OUR NEIGHBOR THE Messenger COMmenting on the recent Senatorial debate with regard to exempting church fairs, etc., from the laws against gambling, is exercised that religious papers do not say more against it. We think our contemporary is on the wrong trail. In a very long and wide reading of various religious papers we do not know one that does not condemn the practice. For our part we are free to admit that we could not publish a long article excoriating this evil, because we prefer to keep our columns for living issues. Not only the principles but the practice of the Presbyterian church is so thoroughly settled that there is neither room nor occasion for discussion. Why, then the mealy-mouthed handling of the subject on the part of politicians! Because the Romish churches are so extensively engaged in it. These foreign elements in our population rejoice and revel in these things that we have outgrown and thrown aside. It is in Roman Catholic fairs, and in military and other similar bazars that the raffle still flourishes, and we hope that State and National laws will show them no mercy.

OUR READERS, THOSE AT LEAST WHO can go back to the thirties in the history of our Church in North Carolina, especially those around Wilmington, will be specially interested in "A Reminiscence" of Rev. Dr. D. McNEILL TURNER, on our fourth page. Dr. TURNER must be now well over eighty years of age, and his reminiscences would prove exceedingly interesting reading. He can tell us much about the churches of Fayetteville Presbytery over half a century ago and we trust he will favor us, and the readers of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN further.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH THROUGH A special committee of their House of Bishops, representing to both Houses of Congress that sectarian appropriations by the government are "impolitic, unwarranted and contrary to the constitution of the United States," asks that they be discontinued.

We would be glad to see a vigorous protest from our General Assembly on this same subject, addressed to our national legislators. It could hardly be construed as trenching on partisan politics. At least it does not in any way affect the liquor traffic.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH receives an appropriation for Indian schools of $400,000, and keeps a bureau of Indian Missions in Washington to look after the matter of getting the public money for the carrying on of its work.

THE DEATH OF GEORGE W. ABELL, managing editor of the Baltimore Sun, last week created little stir in the world. Yet the influence of Mr. ABELL as a director and controller of public opinion through the columns of the Sun, was greater than if he had been a United States senator. The Sun has been for years upon years a remarkable paper. Remarkable for getting the news—clear-cut, actual, reliable news from every quarter of the world, and giving it to its readers without regard to fear or favor. Its editorial columns have evinced the soundest judgment on the live, practical issues constantly arising and have presented them in terse, strong, simple language. For this general excellence the surviving partners give a very large share of the credit to the editor now passed away. They say:

"He brought to the great responsibility which his position involved, not only the experience acquired under his father's tuition, but the most generous enthusiasm and the noblest and loftiest conception of what the mission of a great newspaper and the duty of the publisher and editor of such a newspaper should be.

WE PUBLISH AN ARTICLE ON OUR second page from the pen of Dr. MARTIN for the St. Louis Presbyterian. We call special attention to it, because the matter of absenteeism from church services, on the Sabbath, not to speak of other occasions, has become a crying evil, as it is a grievous sin.

Very many Christians actually persuade themselves that attendance upon the services of the sanctuary is simply a matter of choice, and never obligatory as a command of the divine law. It is high time that the churches arouse themselves to the magnitude of this evil and that pastors lay upon the consciences of the people the imperative command that they forsake not the assembling for divine worship, as well as that they emphasize the blessedness of the privilege of meeting together for the worship of GOD.

WE INVITE ATTENTION TO THE article entitled "Two Overtures Touching Licensure and Ordination" to be found on our fourth page.

WE HAVE A LETTER FROM REV. J. WALLACE MOORE written on the S. S. City of Pekin, on 13th ult., and mailed at Yokohoma, Japan, on the 17th. The friends of Mr. MOORE and his sister, Miss LIZZIE MOORE—and there are many in North Carolina—will be glad to know of their safe arrival at their destination. We will publish the letter next week.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C.,

Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Some Fresh and Refreshing Facts From the Presbyteries.

Three weeks ago, while stating that Concord Presbytery had gone ahead, in 1894, of its contributions to Foreign Missions in 1893, we ventured to prophesy that Mecklenburg had done the same, although the figures were not then in hand to warrant any more exact statement.

We are glad to be able now, not only, to confirm that prophecy, but to make some further statements, which will be of interest to many.

The fullest returns, which it has been possible to abstain, still leave unheard from, ten churches in Concord, twenty-six churches in Mecklenburg and twelve churches in Orange Presbytery, but in those churches reported there has been a gain of about $2,000, in round numbers, or for Concord $400, Mecklenburg $1,000, Orange $600, which is a remarkable gain, for these three Presbyteries, all things considered.

In the other Presbyteries, there has been a falling off of about $1,000, or for Albemarle $300, Fayetteville $500, and Wilmington $200.

We regret that the returns, furnished us, from Albemarle and Wilmington, are so meagre as to make any analysis of the slight shortages there impossible; but we are informed that in Albemarle the falling off has been in the contributions of "one or two churches," to "special objects," and we presume they are Henderson and Nutbush, where the loss has been due to the great shrinkage in the business of the town and the absence of a pastor respectively. There has been a real gain in the other churches, we are confident.

With regard to Fayetteville, the figures show that the falling off is more than covered by the loss of one individual contribution of $600—from a worthy elder; so that there has been a real advance in the churches as a whole here too. These circumstances are sufficient to render this difference intelligible, but there are others which should be mentioned.

The cotton section of the State, covered by these Presbyteries has especially suffered during the financial stringency which has borne so heavily everywhere. Then the failure of the bank in Wilmington, added another peculiar feature to the general hardships of those in that whole section.

Beyond all this, however, it should be stated that the secretary has been able to spend much less time in that part of the State, than in the three Presbyteries just mentioned.

In the western part of the State all the work has been completed, which can be done, in fourteen months of the eighteen that have passed since the secretary entered upon the duties of his office. The remaining six months will all be given to the eastern part of the State, so far as the conditions laid down by the Synod, that the time be distributed in proportions to the contributions to the Synod's fund will permit.

Only four months have been given to the three eastern Presbyteries; but four more will be given, if the way is clear.

These facts are such as should encourage all who have an interest in the progress of this great cause.

A careful study of the figures, which have been before us, leads us to add two remarks, which, we think, should be emphasized and never lost sight of by those who are in authority:

1. Where individual contributions bear a very large proportion to those of the church, as a whole, they should be entered as individual, in order to prevent misunderstanding, while these contributions continue, and discouragement when they cease.

2. It is to the town and larger country churches, that we must look for benefit from such work as the Synod is now having done. For it is in them chiefly that there is lack of information and organization, without which there can be no constant interest and effort.

The larger sums of money and individual contributions come from the cities; but the regular patrons and societies, in these, leave far less to be done by any special efforts, and the advance in these in the last three years has been comparatively small, as compared with that in the others. Really there has been a falling off, due to the generally conceded fact that the cities have suffered more than the country, from the financial stringency.

We have visited many country churches which have never seen the face of a missionary. There is no city or considerable town in the State which has not heard a good many, even of our own church. From the country churches come the steady supplies of money—men and women, as any list will show. Let us help the country churches.

It has been possible only to give round numbers, in this article, since the returns were all imperfect as the stated clerks were careful to say.

The returns show that the number of churches contributing has increased, not only in those Presbyteries where there has been an increase of contributions, but even, as in Fayetteville, where there has been considerable falling off in the amount contributed.

BALANCE.

I fear no more the coming years
What they may bring,
Days will be sunless, nights bereft of stars:
Mayhap the brightest blossoms of the Spring
Shall first be bound with Winter's icy bars.
But still beyond the cloud is always light,
The stars are in the sky all night,
And deepest snows are they which hide the bright
Green heart of Spring.

Not all of life is dreamed away
In summer skies.
Time hold a loss, a loneliness for me,
But hope is strong, and faith dare not be weak
And love abides the greatest of the three.
Enough of sweet to-morrow will repay
The disappointment of to-day.
Light follows dark; sun rain; seas ebb away
Again to rise.

And if the rugged road of life
Doth wind around
The mountainside where heavy clouds hang low,
And as I climb the pilgrim staff be changed
Into a cross, still onward would I go!
The peaks of only highest mountains rise
Above the clouds to bluest skies,
And round the heaviest cross is hung the prize,
The brightest crown.

MEMORIAL SKETCH OF THE LATE REV. G. D. PARKS, ADOPTED BY MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

On the afternoon of March 2nd, 1894, the Rev. George Dickinson Parks, a veteran soldier of the cross, peacefully fell on sleep, in the 67th year of his age. The Presbytery of Mecklenburg, conscious that in the death of their dear brother, it has sustained the loss of a wise and conservative counsellor, an able and faithful presbyter; that the Church is deprived of an edifying, useful and successful preacher of the gospel; and that the community is called to mourn the loss of a most excellent and worthy citizen, a public-spirited patriot, and a man of integrity and uprightness: desires to put on permanent record its high appreciation of the character and service of our departed brother, its profound sorrow at his death; and its deep and tender sympathy with the afflicted widow and children, and with the many relations and friends of the deceased. Dr. Parks was born April 13th, 1827, in Providence Township, Mecklenburg county, N. C.

At the age of 18, he was graduated at Davidson College. He then studied medicine at the Louisville, (Ky.) Medical College; and practiced his chosen profession with much acceptance for more than a year in this country. But when it pleased God to reveal His Son in him, it was that he might preach Him to his dying fellow men. The physician of the bodies of men became, by the grace of God, the physician of their souls. He who was accustomed to minister balms to bruised limbs and diseased bodies, was led and qualified by the Spirit of God to bear Gilead's Balm to their wounded spirits and their sin-sick souls.

He studied divinity at the Columbia Theological Seminary; and was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of Concord at Morganton, in the year 1855. His first regular charge was Steele Creek. During his ministry in this church, he mentions in his diary the addition in one year of 102 members, nearly all by profession of faith, adding that only one other church in the General Assembly reports a larger gain in the same length of time, Because of ill health, he was compelled reluctantly to give up this charge.

He next ministered to churches in and around Hendersonville, N. C. He then served Third Creek, Rowan county. From which point he went to Sugar Creek, where he labored for 15 years. It was during his ministry there, that the present substantial and elegant church edifice was built, an edifice that remains a monument to his efficiency as a pastor and an honor to the community. At was also while at Sugar Creek that he was instrumental in organizing and building Amity church.

His next charge was Sharon church in this county, where he remained 5 or 6 years. At the close of his ministry at Sharon, Bro. Parks was appointed evangelist by the Presbytery of Mecklenburg, and rendered most efficient service in this work until he became pastor of Mulberry church and Williams Memorial chapel. It was largely through his instrumentality that Mulberry church was organized and built. In this field he finished his long, useful and highly honored career. So great were his zeal and fidelity that he overtaxed his bodily strength. In June 1893, after preaching in the morning at his usual appointment, he was riding on horseback in the afternoon to a distant point to preach again, when he received his first paralytic shock. From this he never recovered fully. The hour of his rest and his reward was drawing near. The Master, looking with the eye of commendation and approval on his fidelity, in this limited sphere, was saying unto him, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And so early in the month of March, the battle and way-worn soldier quietly lays aside that armor, which he had so long and faithfully borne and sweetly and peacefully sinks to rest.

"How blest the righteous when he dies!"

By order of Presbytery.

AN HOUR WITH THE BIRDS.

BY OLIVE THORNE MILLER.

Author of "Nesting Time," "My Tree-top Neighbors," etc.

If we can have but one hour with the birds, dear reader, we will spend it in the loveliest nook I know, a wild garden, forever green in my memory, on the banks of the "shining water" at the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

It is June, and we are sitting under a low tree, buried up to our shoulders in a luxuriant growth of weeds. Before us towers beautiful Cheyenne, its wonderful red rocks gorgeous in the morning sun; above us stretches the violet-blue sky, while all about us, filling our lungs and bracing and invigorating our whole being, is the glorious mountain air of Colorado. Outside our shady nook the sunshine glows and burns, but we are cool and comfortable.

The little field between our seat and the mountain is all given up to weeds, with here and there a small oak tree, and shut in by a hedge of oak saplings and low willows. I say weeds, but think not of an eastern weed-growing spot; imagine neither pig-weed, smart-weed, burdock nor sorrell. Rather, picture in your mind a flower-bed, more rich and gay than ever met your admiring eyes. Yellow daisies by thousands turning their shining faces to the sun, royal purple clusters of a blossoming mint glowing in the sun, larkspurs four feet high thrusting themselves above the rest, like blue banners here and there, while lower down peep out white and blue and lavender and other modest posies, and everywhere our familiar wood's flower the wild geranium (whose office it seems to be in Colorado to fill up vacancies), much larger and more luxuriant than ours, though quite as dainty and as impatient of handling. Almost within reach of our hand we easily count a dozen varieties of blossoms, while at the back of the little field are masses of a tall plant gone to seed. This departed bloom must have resembled our elder in shape and size, and now it makes a wonderful display of seeds in all shades of green, yellow, and golden brown, according to the various degrees of ripeness. It is very effective, almost more beautiful than blossoms, certainly more harmonious.

Over all this growing glory flutter butterflies and bees, and still higher zigzag of gay dragon flies. Behind us, a few steps away, in the brook Minnelowan, whose musical murmur is in our ears, but we will not turn around just yet. Truly it is good to be here, to rest from the world of conventionality; to get into harmony with nature; to steep our souls as it were in the wildness, the freshness, and the eternal youth of the growing world about us.

But we are seeking birds: we must subdue our expressions of admiration, we must control our enthusiasm and listen. Now we become aware of low, sharp, insect-like cries about us. They seem to come from all sides at once; we find it impossible to locate them till a sudden chorus of loud and excited "smacks" directs our attention to the tree over our heads, and our eyes fall upon a pair of frantic little fellow creatures in golden yellow hopping about on the branches, posturing and gesticulating with vehemence, and addressing their remarks most pointedly to us.

How are we offending, sitting motionless and silent as we are? Why, we have invaded what they consider their domain. Those insect-like chirps are the voices of their little folk, probably just out of the nest, brand-new, ignorant and curious babies, who know no better than to stare at us, and make their comments within reach of our hands. They are not yet trained to know and avoid their greatest enemy, which you may not know, dear reader, that you are. Not because you are bloodthirsty, but because you belong to a bloodthirsty race.

Now one of the babies comes in sight, in soft olive with golden suggestions on tail and body, but mamma, horrified that he has exposed himself to our gaze, hurries him away, and soon the chorus of "peeps" and "smacks," the yellow-bird baby talk, grows more distant, and the whole family of golden warblers is gone.

It is remarkable how much these little folk know about our ways. If we walk through their domains talking and laughing the birds will go on about their own affairs, singing and calling, and carrying on their domestic concerns as though we were blind and deaf, as indeed must of us are to the abundant life about us. But when they see us so quiet, looking at them, showing interest in their younglings, they recognize us at once as a suspicious variety of the genus homo who must be watched. At once they are on guard; they turn shy and try to slip out behind a bush, or if hampered by an untrained family of little ones, attempt to expostulate with us, or to drive us away.

All this time you have perhaps been conscious of a delicious little song, like the ringing of a silver bell, over at the edge of our wild garden. Now listen: you will hear a rustle as of dead leaves, a low utterance like a hoarse "mew," then an instant's pause, and the bell song again. Turn your glass toward the thick shrubberry, at a point where you can see the ground at the foot of the bushes. In a moment you catch a glimpse of the mysterious bell ringer, nearly as big as a robin, modestly dressed in black and white and chestnut, going about very busily on the ground, now giving a little jump that throws a light shower of dirt and leaves into the air, then looking earnestly in the spot thus uncovered, perhaps picking something up, then hopping to the lowest twig of the bush and flinging out upon the air his joyous song. We are fortunate to see him so soon; he might tantalize us all day with his song, and never give us a glimpse of himself, for he delights in these quiet places, under the thickest shrubs. He is the Towhee bunting or chewink, sometimes called ground robin, and in that corner of Colorado he takes the place of the robin with us, the most common bird about the house.

Keep very still and we may perhaps hear his most ecstatic song, for remember it is June, the wooing and nesting time of our feathered friends, when their songs and their plumes are in perfection. The love song of the chewink is simply his usual silver bell peal, with the addition of two rich notes in tremolo; first, a note lower on the scale than the bell, then a note higher, each a soft, delicious, rapturous utterance, impossible to describe, but enchanting to hear.

The nest is no doubt close by, but it will be lost time to hunt for it in a wilderness of bushes like this, for it is a mere cup in the ground, hidden under the thickest shrub that madam, the brownclad sponse of the towhee can find. If we did uncover it we might not recognize it, so perfectly do the colors of the birds, old and young, and even the eggs, harmonize with the earth in which it is placed.

Now let us turn around, take a few steps, and the world is totally changed for us. Let us seat ourselves under a tall old pine tree whose delicious aroma the hot sun draws out and the gentle breeze wafts down to refresh and delight us here below.

Before us is the brook, faint-hearted in a manner, and only a murmur where last summer it was a roar. Alas the beautiful brook has seen reverses since I first lingered on its banks with joy and admiration. Far up above, just after it leaves the rocky walls of Cheyenne Canon, it has fallen into the greedy hands of men who have drawn half of it off for their private service. So the sparkling waters which gathered themselves together near the top of Cheyenne, leaped gaily over the seven steps of the falls, and rushed and bounded over the rocks in the canon, now run tamely down between rows of turnips and potatoes, water an alfalfa field, bathe the roots of a row of tired-looking trees, or put a lawn asoak, and the fragment that is left winds on its old way, not half filling its bed, with a subdued babble suited to its altered proportions.

Still there is enough to delight a brook lover, and this spot is the chosen home of the most bewitching little beauty in all Colorado, the Arkansas Goldfinch. Clumsy name enough for a tiny spright of a birdling not so large as our charming little goldfinch in his black cap. He is exquisite in olive green, with golden yellow breast, and the black cap and wings of his family, and he is most winsome in manner, with every tone in his varied utterance musical and delicious to hear. As he flies over in bounding waves calling "swee-eet! swee-eet!" often ending with an entrancing tremolo, your very soul is taken captive. What would you not give to see the dainty cradle of his younglings? Not far away you may see two thistle blooms pulled to pieces, no doubt the down has gone to make a bed for goldfinch babies, for nothing that grows except thistle down is quite soft and delicate enough for the purpose.

We will not try to find the nest. He is the most shy, the most elusive of birds, living in the tops of the tallest trees, and flitting from one to another like a sunbeam, showing only a glint of a golden breast as he goes. One is maddened by the medley of calls and scraps of song, the trills and tremolos in the sweetest and most enticing tones, while not able to catch so much as a glimpse of the bony bird who utters them. His love song is utterly captivating, as rapturous as that of the American goldfinch, with a touch of plaintiveness that makes it wonderfully thrilling. It is mostly tremolo, a sort of indescribable vocal "shake" that is enchanting beyond the power of words to express. When he is not singing, one may often hear his low earnest clatter and talk with his mate in the same plaintive and winsome tones.

Ah, how little one can see of what goes on about us, though we are closely watching, and every sense is alert; on one side is a flash of wings, and somebody disappears before he is seen; from the other side comes an unfamiliar note and a rustle of leaves, behind which the author is hidden; here two bird voices are heard in excited talk, but your hasty glance falls only on the swaying twig that proclaims their flight; and in the tops of tall trees is a whole world of life and action entirely beyond your vision.

Yet enough is left to repay patient waiting. From across the little brook comes the unceasing cry of the Maryland yellow throat "witches here, witches here!" and you can readily believe him, especially as with your best efforts you can see scarcely more than a suggestion of his quaint black mask as a small form dives into thick bushes.

Here comes a whole family reviling us, six or seven of them, running up and down the branches of a great bush, all scolding at the top of their voices, a family of house wrens lately emancipated from their wooden castle in that old stump across the brook: pert and saucy little parents, and droll babies imitating them with spirit.

Our hour has passed all too quickly, and we close our glasses, fold our camp chairs and start for the camp. As we turn into the gate another voice strikes our ear—louder, richer, more attention-compelling than any we have heard. Listen, it is the wonder and the glory of the West; it is the most intoxicating, the most soul-stirring of bird voices in the land where thrushes are absent: it embodies the solitude, the vastness, the mystery of the mesa; it is the western meadow lark.

There is nothing beyond that to hear, and our hour is long passed.

Need of Regeneration.

Now, if at every step deliberately taken into evil the power to retrace your steps dwindles, if with every such evil action the very wish to contend with and crush evil becomes more and more feeble, how can all punishment be purifying and of the nature of true chastening? Is it, or is it not, true that with every deliberate downward step the strength for retracing it diminishes, and the wish to retrace it lessens? If this is true, then it is hardly possible to conceive that the will, which is privy to its own paralysis, and which conspires, as it were, to undermine itself, can be really undergoing that purgatorial purification which the sufferings of those whose hearts are really fixed on God tend to produce. * * * A being who had made himself evil, and was then transformed into a good being by Divine interference, would not really be himself but a new person. All regeneration must found itself on the germs of good left in the nature to be regenerated. And if a man has really cast away his own power of will and his own power of desiring God, by a long series of evil actions, we fail to see where are the germs on which the regenerating power is to act.—The Spectator.

What Shall Be Put in Place of the Saloon?

If you destroy the saloon, what will you put in the place of it? Nothing, gentleman conservatives — absolutely nothing. If I kill a rattlesnake, I am in no fever to make his place good in the general economy of nature. The saloon is just as deadly a foe in the moral world. Believe me, my brother temperance reformers, our sole business is to kill that snake. This maudlin plea, that workingmen must have some refuge from their miserable homes breaks down the moment you think of the women and children in those same miserable homes. If we address ourselves to any phase of this problem, it will not be to furnish places to draw off the men by themselves, but to make the homes places where the entire family can live in normal decency and comfort. The saloon is always and everywhere the deadly foe of the home. It would be poor business for reformers to replace it by some device which perpetuates one of its worst features—the tolling away of the men of the family to a life of separate masculine amusement and indulgence.—Dr. J. H. Ecob, in The Outlook.

The Mother A Historian.

Each mother is a historian. She writes not the history of empires or nations on paper, but she writes her own history on the imperishable mind of her child. That tablet and that history will remain indelible when time shall be no more. This thought should weigh on the mind of every mother and render her deeply circumspect, prayerful, and faithful in her solemn work of training up her children for heaven.

The minds of children are very susceptible and easily impressed. A work, a look, a frown, may engrave an impression on the memory of a child no lapse of time can efface. How careful, then, should every mother be in her treatment of her child! How prayerful and how serious to write the eternal truths which shall be his guide and teacher when her voice shall be silent in death and her lips no longer move in prayer in his behalf.—Phrenological Journal.

I know not what the year may bring of joy or woe;
Whate'er it be, I know 'tis best—He wills it so.
And so, with confidence supreme I'd press along,
Not doubting aught, but trusting all, I'd join the throng
Of weary mortals, knowing not the blessed place
That comes from trusting Him through all, till time shall cease.
Fain would I teach them, groping aimlessly, the way,
That winding on, leads up to Heaven and Light and Day.

Some Lessons of the Hard Times.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The year 1893 will long be remembered—like the years 1837 and 1857—for its financial disasters. Very few people have escaped entirely from the widespread financial gale. How far it was produced by past legislation in regard to tariffs, this is not the place to discuss. A vast amount of disaster and bankruptcy has been produced by causes entirely disconnected with legislation by either political party. Suffering commonly means sin—not everybody's sin, although about everybody has suffered to a greater or less degree. In hard times the innocent suffer from the wrongdoings of the guilty. If every man built fireproof there would be no conflagrations; but because some build of wood or other combustible materials, and because there are careless or wicked hands to kindle flames, a whole street is endangered. The drunkard's bloated face and empty purse are not the result of ill-luck—they are the legitimate consequences of the bottle; but his poor wife and children have to bear their share of those consequences. Financial suffering is the result of financial sinning—not everybody's sin, but of somebody's sin; and during these late years there have been a great many somebodies.

In a certain good old Book—which is as wise in the things of this world as in those of the world to come—occurs the following sentence: "He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall lose them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." Probably but few people know that there is such a passage in the Bible; and it would be a good thing to have it written up large in the counting rooms and stock-boards and produce exchanges and every place in which business is transacted. The gist of this pithy text is that the loss of riches is very apt to come from the wrong-getting of riches. This plain truth has a great many applications. It applies to all that large class who seek a livelihood without any kind of productive labor, or any that adds to the resources of the community. Mere "speculation" (as it is called) is generally a game of hazard. It invents nothing useful, manufactures nothing valuable, and contributes nothing to the wealth of society. Its vital idea is the same as that which inspires the gambling table; its atmosphere is intensely intoxicating and demoralizing. Every financial gale sweeps down a large number of those who are attempting to get rich by their wits, and not by any honest work. Over such losses no Christian conscience will shed any tears. Would that every young man who wishes never to "end as a fool," would keep out of that witch's cave of speculative gambling!

Another very large class of self-made sufferers are those who have been recklessly living beyond their means. Their whole style of living is fictitious. The "fortunes" which they claimed to possess have proved to be fictions. Thousands of people who have taken on the airs of wealth and have grasped at the luxuries of wealth, have found out, when the time of "settlement" came, that they were really poor. And their present poverty is tenfold more respectable than their former pretension to what they never possessed. Their "losses" are the loss of what was never there—the mere loss of gas from an inflated balloon; and now that they are landed on terra firma they may well learn some wisdom from their tumble.

When we recall the wild furore of extravagance and self-indulgence, the mad ambitions to live on fictitious incomes a life of vain show, we discover some compensations in the sobering and salutary effects of "hard times." They are a big dose of calomel to those whose systems were terribly out of order. Hard times often harden good men's virtues, and give new fiber to their courage and self-denials. Hard times smash some of the idols that Christians are too often tempted to worship. Hard times are really the hardest on whatever is worm-eaten and worthless. Unfortunate it is that the crashing down of decayed trees often carries away some limbs from the surrounding trees which are healthy and vigorous. The mischief thus done is partial, and generally temporary; the benefits to the whole community are widespread and wholesome. My observation has been that, in the long run, very few wise, honest and industrious persons are permanently injured by financial storms. The ships that weather out the stiff gales are the ships that bring in the best cargoes at last. Storm does not always mean shipwreck.

There is really, in God's sight only one kind of wreck that is utterly ruinous, and that is the wreck of character. The saddest sort of reading that we encounter is the obituary column of dead reputations. Some financial bubbles have exploded; some "securities" have depreciated; but the most heartrending losses have been the losses of conscience, of principle and of good name! These are the bankruptcies that knock the bottom out of "the market." "We have plenty of money in the street," said a banker to me; "what we want is confidence." The question asked in such times is, In whom can we confide? On every side the question is, Whom can we trust? To such questions my answer would be, You can trust God and all men who fear God and keep his commandments. Never did strict uncorruptible integrity command a higher premium. If these times of fiery trial throw out a great deal of "slag," they are also testing the pure gold gloriously. While one man after another who ventured into slippery places is catching a bad fall, "he that walketh uprightly walketh surely."

Let us hope and pray that the losses in 1893 may bring some gains in 1894. Nearly all of us may be the poorer for the financial calamities of the past twelvemonth. We had better mark ourselves down lower as to the value of our assets; for there has been a shrinkage of pretty much all marketable "securities." Nearly every thing has depreciated except faith and good works; they still pay grand dividends. There are many wholesome lessons to be learned in these hard times. The first one is to learn the wisdom of doing business by God's plumb-line. After Chicago was burned out, she built more fireproof dwellings and warenouses. We ought, also, to have a more righteous dread of debt. All debt means danger. Reckless running into it has ruined more Christians and broken more hearts than many a flagrant vice. To incur any pecuniary obligation, large or small, without a well-founded assurance of ability to repay it is as bad as highway robery.

Another hint for the hard times is that, in our schemes for retrenchment, let us be careful not to begin by cheating God. Some people commence their curtailment of expenditures by cutting down their gifts to wise charities; these ought to be the last to come down. The benevotent Henry Thornton, of London, subscribed ten pounds to a religious object; but soon afterward, having met with a great loss, he sent fifty pounds to the treasurer, with the remark: 'I don't want to lose this, also." The safest loans are loans to the Lord: he repays with compound interest. Would you be rich toward God? Then give freely. He that saves for self loses; he that gives for Christ's sake is sure to save. Have you a clean conscience, a chance to work and a clear hope of Heaven? Then you may march through this year with a light heart against any head-winds, and may sing the one hundred and third Psalm at every step.—Independent.

Not Forsaking.

The besetting sin of the Church of this generation perhaps no mortal could determine. Some would say, "covetousness," others perhaps, Sabbath-breaking," still other might specify "Baalism." The present writer declines, for the best of reasons, to give his verdict—he is undecided; and, as intimated above, God alone knows, and God alone is the providential Ruler and the final Judge.

Of one thing however, he has no doubt, viz.:

That Sabbath-breaking is one of the besetting sins of the Church of this generation. It is indeed a very wide-spread evil. I speak not now with any reference to the recent agitation regarding the opening on Sunday of the World's Fair, at Chicago. That, as its name indicates, is an affair of the "world" not of the "Church." It is not the "Church's Fair." It is the most natural thing in the world, for the world to trample upon the Christian Sabbath; the apostate Church joined hands with the wicked world in crucifying the Lord of the Sabbath. What could be more becoming than for the same parties to unite in desecrating the day which, by divine appointment, perpetuates the triumph of the Son of man over the world, the flesh and the devil? Particularly so, since the Church herself is so unfaithful to the memories of that glorious resurrection morn, so derelict in the observance of that triumphal day of Christianity.

This is the sin mentioned in our text—"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Heb. x: 25.

That public worship is meant is clear from the Greek work—epsunagogeen—which is translated "assembling" i. e., "not forsaking—of ourselves together," for public worship in the "synagogue," i. e., in the place appointed for the public assembly of the Christians, on the first day of the week, for the public worship of God, thus to celebrate and thereby to perpetuate the resurrection of Christ: for "if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; * * * ye are yet in your sins." The original Sabbath was appointed for public worship: so also the Jewish Sabbath: "And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation [i. e., a public "assembling" for "holy" purposes] and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you." Ex. xii: 16. "Six days shall work be done, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest; a holy CONVOCATION; ye shall do no work therein; it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings." Lev. xxiii: 3. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," i. e., amongst other ways, by a holy convocation." He therefore who "forsakes the assembling," fails to remember; ergo, forgets the Sabbath day—to "keep it holy;" ergo, desecrates God's holy day. "Ye shall keep my Sabbath's and reverence my sanctuary"—these two go together—keep my "Sabbaths" and reverence my "sanctuary." Lev. xix: 30. Ergo, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of yourselves, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Just as the "Lord's Supper" perpetuates the Jewish Passover, so the "Lord's Day" perpetuates the Jewish Sabbath. This is very singularly and emphatically taught by the Greek; only twice is this word for "Lord's" used in the original of the New Testament. 1. "The Lord's Supper"—kuriakon deipnon: 2. The Lord's Day"—kuriakee heemera, 1 Cor. xi: 20 and Rev. i: 10. Hence we learn, that just as it is the Lord's Supper, because HE instituted it to celebrate His death; so also it is the Lord's Day, because HE instituted it to celebrate, His resurrection from the dead. Therefore to trample under our unhallowed feet the holy sanctuary, is to trample under foot the holy day of Christ; to despise the "Lord's Day," is to despise His resurrection; it is, in spirit, to reject His sacrificial death, and to trample His authority under foot; it is to reject His authority as King, and to say, "We will not have this man to reign over us. We have no King but Cæsar." But if we reject Christ as our "King," He will not suffer us to accept Him as our "Prophet" and as our "Priest;" so then, in neglecting the sanctuary and desecrating the Sabbath we throw away the only hope of our salvation. "He that despised Moses" law died without mercy * * * of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant (compare Heb. xiii: 20) wherewith He was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace." Heb. x: 28-29.

I have seen wives and mothers grieve over their wicked husbands and sons because they habitually violated some one or more of the last six commandments; and yet, the same women have, all the while, been setting before their households a horrible example of wickedness by neglecting the Sanctuary and desecrating the Sabbath. How can they expect to lead their households to heaven whilst they themselves are traveling in the other direction? Frequently I have heard mothers congratulate themselves because "none of my children are drunkards, or gamblers, or blasphemers; none of them have any bad habits." Yet those same children following the example of that same mother—were neglecting the Sanctuary and desecrating the Sabbath. I have yet to see any sound conversion of the husbands or children of any such wives or mothers; they may, under the manipulation of some machine meeting, even profess conversion;. but they invariably walk in the way of their mother's training, which is not the way of God, not the way of the sanctuary, not the way of the holy, not the path of life.

It is a sad fact that so many, of even professed Christians, have either forgotten, or else they never knew, that "holy convocation" is as much a part of the original design of the Sabbath as a "holy resting all that day," that it is as much their duty to "assemble" on that day in the sanctuary as it is to "forsake" their usual secular avocations: that God has released them from their daily toil on that day in order that they may "keep holy the convocation." My observation is that from one-third to one-half of the names on the rolls of our churches, represent persons who are habitual absentees from the sanctuary, i. e., habitual Sabbath breakers. If these were drunkards, gamblers or blasphemers, they would be warned of their coming doom; but, as it is, they are suffered in too many instances, to go unwarned into a Sabbath-breaker's eternity. Yet the apostle warns them in this chapter, that the first outward sign of a fatal apostasy is absenteeism from the sanctuary There fore "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; * * * not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is."—Jas. L. Martin, in St. Louis Presbyterian.

Guard Your Influence.

It is strange how few master minds there are, and how few persons are by nature endowed with the power of drawing others to them, and, on the other hand, how many seem to lack any power whatever to resist the leadings of others, or to lay out their own work, even among mature men. Young men are rarely able to pass through the temptations and evil influences of city life without yielding in some degree. The silent influence of companionship and environment is sure to leave its impress for good or bad. How to reach men and bring them under the best influences for moulding character is a serious problem. It has taxed the wisdom and diplomacy of educators and moralists. All manner of enterprises have been established. Public libraries and free reading-rooms have this as their chief am. Gymnasiums, club-rooms and society halls have been used as means to the end to attract and divert from places of the baser sort. A very prominent gentleman of this city told us that he advised a Christian man who sought his advice as to whether he should accept the office of commander of a G. A. R. post, not to think of declining, because it offered a splendid opportunity for mission work among the old veterans who came to the post for fraternity, loyalty and charity, and being bound by these ties, they would yield readily to moral influences.

While all these agencies have their place, and do more or less in drawing young men from worse places, they do not solve the problem. To make men permanently better, there must be something substantial in the instruction imparted and the influences to which they yield, in order to establish good habits and build up character.

This can only be done by gospel work. Bring young men under Christian influence; draw them to them church services, the prayer-meetings and young people's meetings; invite them to the social meetings and make them feel that they are not only welcome, but their presence is desired and their help needed to bring others. Those that have gifts should be utilized. If they have good voices, put them in the choirs, and in everyway make them feel that the church life is to take the place of their home life, from which many of them are separated. To do this most effectually, all agencies should be made pleasant and inviting. Many who have never been associated with those who have church privileges, grow into the belief that churches are cold and formal; that members are Puritanical, and that when they enter the circle they must give up all the enjoyments and pleasures of life Show them that this is a very narrow view of the Christian life, and that, when they enter it, they will have pleasures and enjoyments far above those of the world. Do this by exhibiting an interest in them that they can not find elsewhere.

It is important to remove all hindrances to confidenee. Many are lost to the Church because of preconceived ideas of unfaithfulness among Christians. An inconsistent church-member may do harm that a whole congregation can not overcome. The world has a right to expect good models among Christian people who profess so much, and if this is not found, nothing can take its place. Therefore all such hindrances should be removed, and hence the importance of making our lives imitations of the Master, who went about doing good, and walking before men in such a way that they can see the sincerity of our purpose and the uprightness of our lives, and, seeing this, be led to follow the same Master.

First Presbyterian Church, Concord:—We acknowledge with thanks an invitation to attend thecelebration of the tenth anniversary of the pastorate of Concord church by Rev. Dr. C. M. Payne. The date was May 6th. The exercises included A Brief History of the Church, by R. W. Allison; Report of Sessional Records, by H. I. Woodhouse; Report of our Sunday-schools—Church by D. F. Cannon, and Chapel by A. N. McNinch; Financial Report, by J. W. Burkhead; Report of our Societies, by B. E. Harris; Pastoral Address, by Rev. C. M. Payne.

Warrenton Church:—On last Sunday the session received three persons into the membership of the church on profession of faith. We pray that this is but the earnest of what God hath in store for us. Rev. C. N. Wharton, pastor.

High Point:—I have just returned home from High Point and will send you a line or two in regard to that place. In 1860 the house was built and the church was organized with eleven members, they now have eighty members, two elders and one deacon. I preached for them for about twenty-four years with an interval of seven years while I was in Washington, N. C. I felt five years ago that a change would be good for them and good for me and so it has proved to be. Bro. McCorkle followed me and then Bro. Dinwiddie. The latter left them last fall and went to Basic City, Va. During the last four months I have been preaching for them, (until they could get a pastor) once a month.

Last Sunday I preached for them and received six members into the church and several others will come in soon—I think. I also installed an elder who came from the Durham church.

I write to say that all this is the fruits of hard work by the elders and others in the Sunday school—especially is great credit due to Mr. E A. Snow who spares no pains nor cost for the good of the church. They have a Sunday-school of more than one hundred in the old church. And then this worthy elder has built a chapel at his own cost where he and his co-workers go every Sunday evening at 3 o'clock, and teach a mission school of more than one hundred children. "Honor to whom honor is due."

But they cannot support a preacher as Orange Presbytery seems to think. They can only pay five or six hundred dollars and that would be far more than an average with our other churches. They now think that they can get a young man from the seminary to preach for them through the summer.

Mt. Airy:—The Mount Airy church has been highly favored of late. First we had our learned, eloquent and altogether delightful Bro. Sampson with us. Then came the meeting of Orange Presbytery with the finest series of sermons we have ever heard at any church court. To crown it all we have first had that enthusiastic preacher and faithful man of God, Rev. Wm. Black, in a series of meetings. The immense congregation from the very beginning necessitated removing to the Opera House, the largest auditorium in town. Bro. Black's preaching produced a profound impression. Believers reconciled their differences and publicly confessed their sins and were much aroused and refreshed, aad twenty-three persons publicly professed faith in Christ. The visible results would doubtless have been greater had Bro. Black not been called away so soon. As it was, his visit was a great blessing to the entire town. Bro. Black's apostolic earnestness and faithfulness as a preacher, his charming personality and his profound piety won for him a warm place in all hearts. He is the right man for the responsible position which he so well fills.

Rev. Eugene Daniel, D. D.:—Of Raleigh, will deliver the address at the closing exercises of the High School of Orange Presbytery.

Yorkville:—Dr. Pearson commenced services here last Sabbath, 29th April. Will continue until the tenth of May, has had a good crowd from the first and it increases at each service. The Presbyterian church will accommodate the crowd very well.

Items from Columbia Theological Seminary:

Rev. S. R. Gammon:—At 11.30 to-day the students had a very pleasant recess from their Greek examinations by retiring to the Seminary Chapel to a missionary meeting conducted by Rev. S. R. Gammon, missionary from Brazil, who gave a very earnest and interesting address presenting the claims and the needs of the mission cause, particularly in Brazil. Bro. G. is himself fired with the spirit of missions, and, with his pleasant, earnest manner, infuses the same spirit into those who have the pleasure of hearing him.

The Year's Work Ending:—The written examinations at the Theological Seminary are now half over and one week more will bring them to an end. Then in the following week—the second week in May—will be held the oral examinations and the closing exercises In order that neighboring ministers may have an opportunity of being present, the annual sermon and the missionary sermon will be preached in the First Presbyterian church on Tuesday and Wednesday nights, May the 8th and 9th respectively. The first will be preached by Rev. W.T. Thompson, D.D., of Charleston, and the latter by Rev. J. A. Preston, D. D.

A Gift to the Library:—Dr. T. E. Converse, of the Christian Observer, has very kindly presented to the Seminary library Nichol's Model of Palestine.

Items from Nashville.:

Woodland Church:—Last Sunday was communion service. Forty names have been added to our roll since the preceding quarterly commuuion; thirty-five on profession of faith.

A short time ago it was determined to liquidate the bonded debt of $6,000 on this church; debt incurred in building the handsome house of worship. The ladies by their efforts took up a $500 bond. On the night of 17th ult., the male members took steps to raise the debt, and on the Sunday following the work of raising an ample subscription to pay the debt within twelve months was completed. The Banner says: Woodland Street church is in a flourishing condition, and is one of the most harmonious and effective religious bodies in the city. The pastor, Rev. R. C. Reed, is heartily sustained and deservedly popular, and the church is rapidly growing in strength.

Second Church:—The popular evangelist from your State, W. R. Gales, begins a meeting at the Second church next Friday. This church has just called J. W. Foster to be its pastor. He graduates in June from the theological department of Southwestern Presbyterian University and was licensed by Nashville Presbytery at its recent meeting. He is a young man of fine promise.

The First Church:—Has not yet found a man to stand in Dr. Jere Witherspoon's place. The session are beating the bush, and occasionally stir up some game, but have not yet succeeded in taking any. Dr. Denney, a professor of Vanderbilt University, although a Methodist, is feeding the church from Sabbath to Sabbath with food which is very much to the taste of the congregation.

TEXAS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Notes From Eastern Texas:—Presbytery was very hospitably and kindly entertained by the good people of Alto, and large congregations attended the preaching. Good sermons were preached, especially one on Sabbath by Dr. Craig. The reports show encouragement in our Home Mission work, indicate some progress.

The New Directory of Worship was adopted.

One candidate for the ministry was received under care of Presbytery. Licentiate J. M. Smith was received from Dallas Presbytery.

Our church and Sabbath-schools were urged to contribute to the Bible Society. Dr. Craig, of Atlanta, was present and made a stirring and interesting address on Home Missions. Our churches have contributed during the past year to Home Missions $742. The additions to our churches by profession have been 129, and by certificate 58.

The Assembly was overtured not to adopt the plan of co-operation in Colored Evangelization reported by the Birmingham Conference, but to abolish our present committee of Colored Evangelization and return the work to our Home Mission Committee. This action was adopted by a close vote after much earnest discussion. A home missionary who fell in the harness; found dead by the roadside, near Alto, on his way to Presbytery—his hand still clinging to the bridle of his mustang pony. In his old age and feeble health he had done much valuable service in new fields and among weak churches, amidst many privations and hardships.

Alto is a railroad town in the midst of a beautiful farming country, like the Piedmont country of Virginia.

TWO OVERTURES TOUCHING LICENSURE AND ORDINATION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

At least two overtures, in addition to the report of an ad interim committee, will be presented to the Assembly in reference to a change in the Book touching Licensure and Ordination: one prepared by the gifted and influential brethren of Columbia Seminary and adopted by Bethel Presbytery. The other, a miner and supplementary one, adopted by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

THE COLUMBIA OVERTURE.

This overture, as far as it goes, is practically identical with "paper No. 1" considered and rejected by the Birmingham Assembly in 1891. The overture does not cover as much ground as "paper No. 1" and on its face there are many minor differences. The only essential feature, however, in the overture seems to be to have incorporated in our Book a feature of the Methodist polity, viz: Licensure at the beginning of the course, or near its beginning; instead of at the completion of the course of preparation.

We believe this an unwise experiment, and out of harmony with our system—we have no annual "passing of character," nor can we exercise precisely the discipline of exclusion, nor do we wish to. Nor do we see any good to come of the change—and the "student preaching" so often paraded in this connection, we consider an ecclesiastical scare-crow—we spent two summers at this work and have observed its operation in other cases for 15 years, and have failed to see any objection, but see much benefit.

There is, in this overture, a bare mention of an English course. We could wish it were more than a hopeful mention. The Church must and will have an English course, by which godly men may be fitted for the ministry: Why should we send our men to Mr. Moody, or to other Bible Schools? Unless our seminaries can succeed in adding this supplement to their course, such a school will grow up elsewhere. Now we are strictly for the regular course when possible; and also love the seminaries, but this is an imperative need of the hour. Can our seminaries not be induced to prepare a course—taught by each professor—where a man may spend a year or two years studying the English Bible and Presbyterian theology, history and polity? Can they not be induced to offer such a course?

It was this feeling which gave birth to the overture from Mecklenburg—it is a definition of the "Extraordinary Clause;" it would not block the way against immediate entrance into the ministry; still it suggests the wisdom of at least an English course. The Presbytery did not feel that this was a wise time to agitate the matter, but inasmuch as the Assembly must consider the subject, this overture is submitted as a valuable supplement.

The overture is as follows:

WHEREAS, the subject of the qualifications for licensure is again presented to the attention of the Church; and

WHEREAS, it is highly desirable that godly and able men should be encouraged to seek the ministry, even when the opportunities for a full and systematic course of training are lacking.

WHEREAS, It is important that such men should yet be fitted for the work by special training,

THEREFORE, the following overture is respectfully submitted to theGeneral Assembly with the prayer that it may be sent down to the Presbyteries as a change in form of government, viz:

That Chapter VI, Sec. VI, part VI, be amended by striking out all of part VI, after and including the words "and whenever any Presbytery, etc.," and by inserting the following, viz: But whenever any Presbytery shall see reason to depart from this rule, the candidate shall still be expected to take a sufficient course in English Bible, Fundamental Theology and Church Government, with such other branches as circumstances may permit, and the same shall be true, mutatis mutandis, of ordination."

This overture was unanimously adopted.

CHARLOTTE, N. C. J. A. P.

COL. WM. H. MICHAL, DIED APRIL 29, 1894.

The Lincolnton Church is again bereaved in the death of its oldest and most substantial member. Col. Michael served as elder and superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years, represented his church in Presbytery and Synod often, and was commissioner in the General Assembly of 1874, at Columbus. Born in Rutherfordton, N. C., he came to Lincolnton when he was 14 years old and began to sell goods and became one of the leading merchants of the Piedmont section of North Carolina, whose business integrity gave him such commercial credit that the northern merchants gave him splendid facilities for supplying his impoverished patrons after the civil war. Sixty years of actual public service, in mercantile life made his business house a conspicuous land-mark. The death of his beloved wife in July 1890 so shadowed his path that the distresses of his latter years depressed his soul and body and shut him in finally till death came April 29th 1894, in the 74th year of his age.

Loving children and faithful and devoted servants soothed his tired spirit and softened his pillow and made his home as restful and hospitable as he always loved to make it, and the strain on their devotion and affection has been long and severe. He was not able to see the house he helped to build dedicated to the service of God, but he knew it was done and soon his spirit was gathered to his fathers, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest in temples not made with hands and where no mistakes are made and no anxious fears ever enter. His grave, beside those he loved, covers a friend and "fellow worker unto the kingdom of God, who has been a comfort unto me."

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Presbytery of Paris met in Sulphur Springs, April 18th.: Present ten ministers and eleven Elders. Rev. S. E. Chandler was elected moderator. Pastoral relations between Rev. J. E. Hobson and Honey Grove church were dissolved and he dismissed to Tombeckbee Presbytery. Presbytery has five candidates under its care all of whom are studying in Anstin College. Rev. S. E. Chandler was elected Chairman of Committee on Education, Vice G. E. Eagleton, resigned.

Rev. R.W. Shive was granted letter of dismission to Central Presbytery if he desired to use it. Report on systematic beneficence showed an increase over former years.

Report of Committee on Home Missions showed that while effects along this line had not been abortive, yet neither were they satisfactory. Only nine churches of the Presbytery have contributed for this work. Only thirteen churches employ regular pastor or stated supplies, though a majority of the balance are visited once a month by the Evangelist.

Report of the Evangelist showed that he has faithfully given one-half of his time to this work, that he has preached once a month to eleven churches, to large and appreciative congregations, that he has received eighteen members since last meeting of Presbytery, has organized one church, with prospect of building two new churches soon, that he has collected more than $200 for the Central Committee. On the whole the work is encouraging and the people seem to be getting a better idea of Presbyterianism.

Licentiate C. V. Cavitt, was received from Dallas Presbytery. Presbytery adjourned to meet in Clarksville the 20th of September.

A REMINISCENCE.

The Article on the "Examination of Candidates," in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, 26th inst., reminds me of an incident in the "long, long ago." Having declined a call to the church in Wilmington; because I could not conscientiously relinquish my charge in Fayetteville. I recommended Licentiate, W. W. Eells to that church. The call, having been made, presented, accepted, the Presbytery, at Elizabeth City April, 1839 (if my memory serves me aright) appointed, as a committee for ordination and installation, ("if the way be clear,") Rev. Thos. R. Owen, to preach the sermon; Rev. Evander McNair, to deliver the charge to the Pastor Rev. Wm. Brobston, to the congregation, and myself to preside, and explain the action of Presbytery, in the premises; and adjourned to meet at Wilmington, shortly afterwards. At the hour, appointed for the meeting, only McNair, Owen, and myself, were present, and without an Elder. Although, thoroughly convinced, that, according to the Form of Government, Chapter X. Section VII. we, "three ministers were a quorum competent to proceed to business," I urged Mr. Law, the only Elder of the church in Wilmington, to sit with us; that our peculiar form of government might be brought to the attention of spectators. I said to McNair and Owen; "as our church in this place is overshadowed by a huge, Episcopal church, let us make the most of this occasion, and give Eells a good start. He was with me one year, and I know him well. He can stand as thorough a drilling, as we can give to him. Let us show the people of Wilmington, what is required of a man, before he can be ordained, as a minister in the Presbyterian church; and that Eells is well prepared for the work to which he has been called." Accordingly, announcement was made, at the close of the services on Thursday evening, that the examination of Licentiate Eells, would be begun on Friday morning at 9 o'clock, and be continued throughout that day, and Saturday. We examined him, on Latin, Greek and Hebrew; on pure and applied Mathematics, on Natural, Mental, and Moral Philosophy; on Didactic and Polemic Theology; on Ecclesiastical History, Church Polity, and the Sacraments; required him to read a Latin Thesis, to deliver a critic, a Lecture on Friday evening, and a popular sermon on Saturday evening. We plied him with as many questions, as the time allotted to the examination admitted. The announcement having been made on Saturday night, that the examination of Licentiate Eells had been satisfactory and, that he would be ordained and installed on the Lord's Day, the church was filled to overflowing. As I had been appointed to preside, I took advantage of the occasion, to show that ordination by a Presbytery was the mode prescribed in the Scriptures. The congregation listened with close attention to the very appropriate sermon, delivered by Bro. Owen and to the solemn charges, delivered by Bro. McNair. I learned, subsequently, that the proceedings of the Presbytery on this occasion had made a deep and favorable impression on the community, and had elevated Bro. Eells very much in their estimation. Only one exception, as far as I heard, was taken to our proceedings. Mr. Law said to me: "It is somewhat doubtful, whether you have all come up exactly to Paul's standard. He wrote to Timothy: 'A bishop must be the husband of one wife; but, you four, have not one wife among you.'"

I may add, that Mrs. Dickson whose obituary appears in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN of the 25th inst., was present on the occasion referred to, then a beautiful, charming young lady, and manifested great interest in all the proceedings. So was her eldest sister, Martha, who, subsequently by request, wrote the biography of "Uncle Moro." As I was the guest of Gen. Owen's family, Uncle Moro visited me in the parlor. Having, at my requst, brought his Arabic Bible, and been asked to read his favorite chapter in the Old Testament, he gave, though in broken English an excellent translation of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. On being asked for his favorite chapter in the New Testament, he gave a like translation of the fourteenth chapter of the gospel by John. On the next day, he brought to me a paper, ingeniously folded, in the form of a scalene triangle. It contained the two chapters, just mentioned, written in Arabic, with his name and mine, appended in the same language. He had been induced to throw away his Koran and embrace Christ, by hearing Miss Martha Owen read the gospels. God says: "Is not My word a fire and a hammer, that breaketh the rock in pieces?"

LOUISVILLE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

A kind friend sends us the Courier Journal containing full reports of Commencement Exercises of this Seminary, from which we glean. The Baccalaureate sermon was preached on Sunday, 29th ult., by Rev. Dr. Geo. A. Trenholm. On Wednesday night, 2d inst., the exercises closed. Dr. J. G. Hunter in a brief address gave the record of the past year. Thirty-one students have been enrolled. Mr. A. J. Alexander alone contributed $1,000 to the endowment fund. Dr. Marquess announced the names of the scholars who successfully passed the various courses. The four full graduates, who received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity are Eugene Bell, F. H. Keane, H. C. Kegley and J. L. Irwin. Dr. Marquess in his address to the graduating class elaborated five requisites for a minister of the gospel:

First—He must be conservative in doctrine and aggressive in method.

Second—He must combine high scholarship and severe study with strong rdministrative ability.

Third—He must be a man of many books and of One Book; be versed in literature and absorbed in the study of the Bible.

Fourth—He must combine concentration on his special field with broadminded plans for the world-wide field.

Fifth—He must be in sympathy with all noble philanthropic movements, and yet be supremely bent on the salvation of souls.

With great earnestness the Rev. Dr. Marquess returned thanks for the faith in the institution shown by these young men in attending its first session to become its first graduates. The institution recognized all this, and yet asserted a claim upon them. It looked to these first graduates to lead that life and so fill the field of Christianity as to enhance the scope and good work of the seminary.

Concerning scholarship, he impressed upon them that love of literature should be cultivated constantly. He believed that some of the brightest students had failed in later life because they had neglected literary culture, and, therefore, fell into a prosaic, tiresome, monotonous manner of stating truths. They should saturate their souls with the spirit of the Word of God, and, by keeping pace with literary culture, be able to put the truth in vigorous and refreshing language.

Second Quarter.—Lesson VIII.

May 20.—The Childhood of Moses.

Exodus ii. 1-10. Commit vss. 8-10.

Golden Text. I will deliver him, and honor him.—Ps. xci. 15.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

Retrospective. The editor was absent from home last week and so could not read the proofs. This explains certain errors. Pithom and Rameses were not "stone cities," as we stated that they were built of brick. We wrote store-cities, places for the storage of grain. We are not acquainted with any occasion in which Abraham gave offense to David. In fact it would have been quite difficult for him to do so as they lived 1,000 years apart. We wrote Absalom. We must also make our apologies to Rameses I. for speaking of his son Seti I. as the first king of Dynasty XIX. His work was destructive, and paved the way for the constructive work of his greater son and yet greater grandson Rameses II.

First Step. The concluding verses of chapter i. must be read to understand the situation. Having failed to reduce the numbers of the Israelites by their labors on his buildings and canals—the latter of which are especially fatal, as shown in constructing the Suez Canal in our own day--Pharoah resorts to the measure of ordering the destruction of the male children. The girls would then marry Egyptians and this strong and sturdy race be amalgamated with his own people. Such was the plan; but "man proposes, God disposes."

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson. Behind the cradle of this great man who was to make and mould history for all time, we see standing woman's love, woman's faith, woman's sympathy and woman's wit. How great is woman's mission in her God-appointed place! How misguided her efforts to seek a different sphere! Note the three months of anxious concealment (vss. 1-2); the committal to God's care (vs. 3); the Providential coming of the Princess and her train and the discovery of the ark (vs. 5); the woman's heart in the bosom of the Princess (vs. 6); the watchfulness and wit of Miriam (vss. 4, 7, 8); the provision for Moses' religious training (vs. 9); his secular training in the palace (vs. 10).

Third Step Study difficult points in the light of your "helps:"

Vs. 1. There went a man. From Ex. vi. 16-20, we learn that his name was Amram, that he was the son of Kohath the son of Levi. Levi lived to be 137, Kohath 133, and Amram 137. These long lives with natural force unabated (Deut. xxxiv. 7) explains the rapid increase of the Hebrews; the children of the same father would be of widely different ages, explaining Amram's marrying his father's sister Jochebed. This genealogy explains the prophecy in Gen. xv. 16, that they should return "in the fourth generation." Kohath went down into Egypt, his great-grandchildren—the children of Moses and Aaron entered Canaan.

Vs. 2. A goodly child. Not only to the natural eye, but to the eye of faith. Compare Acts vii. 20 (margin) and Heb. xi. 23.

Vs. 3. Bulrushes, the papyrus plant, which the Egyptian paper was made.

Slime and pitch, a mixture of bitumen—a mineral pitch, and tar from wood which makes a waxy compound impervious to water.

At the river's brink, that is of the Tanitic arm of the Nile on which Zoan (Tanis) was built, and which was the only arm not infested with crocodiles. It was not floating in the stream, but held by the rushes that lined the margin.

Vs. 4. His sister, without doubt, Miriam.

Vs. 5. Pharoah's daughter. Not necessarily the daughter of the reigning Pharoah. If Rameses II. was then king it seems most probable that she was his sister, and daughter of Seti I. In either case it appears almost certain that she became his ~~wife.~~ Such marriages were frequent among the Pharoahs if she was his sister, and are said not to be unparalled if she was his daughter. Her full name as the "Great Royal Wife" of Rameses was Mer-en-Mut Neferari. From the first name which means Beloved of Mut, the Greeks called her Merrhis, Muthidis and more commonly Thermuthis. It is by the latter name that Josephus designates the finder of Moses, whom he later speaks of as Co-regent, a title corresponding to the Inscriptions. From the second name the Greeks also called her Pharia. Her picture is preserved in a royal tomb. Inscriptions show her to have been 20 years younger than Rameses. If she were 16 at this time he would be 36, which must have been near the beginning of his reign. He reigned 67 years, so that, as Moses was 80 at the Exodus, this event must have taken place 14 or 15 years after his death.

Came down to bathe. Women in Egypt enjoyed great freedom, and were not secluded as they now are.

Her maidens, that is attendants of rank.

Her handmaid, a servant.

Vs. 6. Behold the babe wept. Literally: "Lo, a weeping babe!" The fate of the world depending on the cry of a three-months old infant. Huguenot mothers escaping with their infants in market-baskets often feared betrayal by their cry. But this babe cried just at the moment to awaken the mother-love that is in every true woman's heart, and so Israel was saved.

Vs. 7. Shall I go. The quick wit of the descendant of Rebecca. They may have seen through it, but connived at it. And so Jochebed nurses her own child for wages. How long this lasted we do not know, but long enough to fill the child's mind with the knowledge of Jehovah before he went to be trained in the wisdom of the Egyptians.

Vs. 10. And he became her son. A regular adoption. It involved his thorough training, probably at On, where was the Temple of the Sun, in which was the great University. It was known to the Greeks as Heliopolis—City of the Sun. She could doubtless with her great influence have made him heir to the throne. Rameses survived the first 12 of his sons, and the adopted son of his best beloved wife would have been preferred to the feeble Menephtah who succeeded him. But see Heb. xi. 24-26.

Moses. The name is Hebrew. She may have given him the Egyptian equivalent, or she may have chosen to commemorate in his name his Hebrew birth.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the contents of the lesson and compare it with ours.

SUMMARY.—A godly couple of the tribe of Levi receiving a son of great promise evaded by concealment for three months the law requiring male children to be cast into the river, and when that was no longer possible entrusted him to God's keeping, by placing him in a papyrus boat coated with bitumen and putting it among the rushes of the river, leaving the sister to keep watch from a distance. There it is found by a royal princess and the cry of the child awakens her sympathy. The sister eagerly suggests a Hebrew nurse, and the child is committed to its mother's care. By her he is reared until the time comes to deliver him to his royal patroness who adopts him as her own child, and names him Moses, which signifies "Drawn out."

Fifth Step. Study in God's word the suggested topics. The most important is a. Woman's mission. Gen. ii. 18; 1 Sam. xxv. 32, 33; 1 Kings xvii. 13-15; Luke viii. 2, 3; xxiii. 55—xxiv. 1; Acts ix. 39; xvi. 14, 15; Phil. iv. 3.

The ministry of woman.

b. The mothers of godly men:
Hannah, mother of Samuel, 1 Sam. ii.1.
Mary, mother of Jesus, Luke i. 46, 47.
Elizabeth, mother of John Baptist. Luke i. 6.
Salome, mother of John and James, Mark xv. 40; xvi. 1.
Eunice, mother of Timothy, 2 Tim. 1. 5.

c. By way of contrast.
The unwisdom and deceit of Rebecca, Gen. xxvii. 8, etc.
Jezebel and Ahab. 1 Kings xxi. 7-10.
Athaliah and her son. 2 Chron. xxii. 2, 3.

Sixth Step. Lay to heart the practical lessons—trust in God; helpfulness in little things; how sisters can help; compassion for the outcast and helpless children of our land.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Make the scholars tell the story. Interest them by some particulars of Pharaoh's Daughter. Show them her picture if you can get hold of it (Century, May, 1897). Make boys feel how much they owe their mothers and sisters; make sisters feel the duty of helping their brothers and relieving the mother in care of infants. Impress the lesson that God rules in little things on which are pivoted the great issues of life.

THE BELIEVER'S STANDING.

I stand; but not as once I did,
Beneath my load of guilt;
The blessed Jesus bore it all—
For me his blood was spilt.
Oh! bless the Lord! Exalt his name!
He gave himself for me;
He died upon Mount Calvary's cross,
To set poor sinners free.

I stand; but not beside the grave
Where once my Lord did lie;
The cross and grave are left behind,
And Christ is gone on high.
Oh! bless the Lord: He buried sin!
He left it in the grave;
And he has proved himself the strong,
Who died, and rose to save.

I stand; e'en now where he appears,
In union with my Lord.
In him I'm saved, O wondrous thought!
I read it in his Word.
Oh! bless the Lord! With him I'm one,
In him we are complete;
We live by faith! but soon in sight,
Our coming Christ we'll greet.

The remarkable discovery of jewels in the Pyramid at Dashour by Professor Morgan has excited attention both at Cairo, where the great "find" has been deposited, and in Europe. We know the apparel worn by the ancient kings and princes of Egypt and we have full records of the daily life of the people. A multitude of mummies of kings, princes and high officials has been brought to life from the tombs hidden in the hills, but in the greater pyramids the tombs of the kings were despoiled of their contents and the ornaments they wore disappeared with their bodies. In all the infinite researches made by modern explorers comparatively few jewels were found, and of these the greater part were unimportant. The discovery made by Professor Morgan in the southernmost pyramid of the Nile series of those structures has given us an accurate knowledge of the jewels worn by royal personages in Egypt five thousand years ago.

A Cairo correspondent gives an account of the crowds that go to the museum at Ghizeh to gaze on the wonderful collection of jewels found by Professor Morgan and deposited in the two glass cases where they are exposed. They far surpass in beauty all those that had been withdrawn from other tombs, and they are said to be of a dazzling clearness, of a workmanship so fine and of a taste so perfect as to be unsurpassed by the very best work of modern jewelers. The glass case is divided into two parts. The first incloses the jewels of the Princess Hathor-Sat, of the twelfth dynasty, lasting for about two hundred and thirteen years, and during which most of the larger pyramids were built along the Valley of the Nile as solitary tombs for the kings of that dynasty. The minor pyramids were for the tombs of other members of the royal family. That at Dashour, however, contained the tomb of one of the kings—since discovered—as well as those of the two princess whose jewels are now in the museum at Ghizeh.

In the first compartment of the glass case, containing those of the Princess Hathor-Sat are many necklaces of gold, a necklace of amethysts, another a superb necklace of emeralds mounted in gold, one of them containing the figure of a scarabeus, delicately cut and of remarkable workmanship. Among the smaller objects there are two scarabei, also in amethysts, and a third cut in a turquoise of great beauty.

The second compartment incloses the jewels that once belonged to the Princess Sentsembet, also of the twelfth dynasty. The last collection is still more beautiful than the other. It includes scarabei of amethysts, necklaces of gold, golden shells, with lotus flowers in enamel, a necklace of amethysts with pendants formed of smaller stones encased in circles of gold. Besides these there is a beautiful necklace of carnelians and amethysts.

Professor Morgan found the tombs of both princesses empty. Other sarcophagi in adjacent pyramids had also been violated and robbed of whatever jewels there were in them. The jewels found by him in the Dashour Pyramid and now brought to light after a lapse of nearly five thousand years were discovered hidden in a wooden box buried in the soil, and were probably intended to be the spoil of the thieves who had robbed the tombs of their contents, but for some reason or other had been unable to return and carry away the richest part of their plunder.—Baltimore Sun.

For a Bruise.—Rubbing a bruise in sweet oil and then in spirits of turpentine, it is said, will usually prevent the unsightly black and blue spots, which not only tell tales, but deform.

Things Useful.

Asparagus Salad.—Boil a quart of asparagus tops in salt water for fifteen minutes, drain, throw in ice water and let stand until needed. When ready to serve, drain, wipe on a soft towel, put in a salad bowl, pour over a teacupful of French dressing, stand on ice ten minutes and serve.

Jellied strawberries are made by melting two ounces of gelatine in a little cold water; squeeze the juice from a quart of currants, and add to the gelatine, and sweeten; stem a pint and a half of ripe strawberries; mix in the currant juice; turn into a mould; set on ice to harden, and serve with cream.

Gingerbread Pudding.—Crumb one-half pound of stale gingerbread and mix with it about a half pound of flour and an ounce of molasses and sugar each. Stir in one well-beaten egg and a half pint of milk. Boil two hours and serve with sauce. Spice cake may be used in the same way.

A delicious strawberry float may be made by beating the whites of six eggs for ten minutes; add six tablespoonfuls powdered sugar, pour over a cupful of strawberry juice, and mix carefully; set on ice until cold, and serve in saucers with whipped cream piled on top.

HEAD AND SHOULDERS above every other blood-purifier, stands Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. See the evidence of it. It's sold in every case, on trial. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

In restoring your strength, when you're "run-down" and "used-up;" in cleansing your blood from every impurity, whether it's a simple eruption or the worst scrofula; and in building up wholesome flesh, when you're thin and weak—there's nothing to equal the "Discovery." In every disease caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, it's the only guaranteed remedy.

Mrs. ELIZABETH J. BUSHWAW, of Sidney, Ohio, writes: "My little boy was so afflicted with liver trouble and other diseases that our family physician said he could not live. In fact, they all thought so. I gave him Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets and they saved his life. We have used the 'Discovery' for throat and bronchial trouble, and found such perfect relief that we can recommend it very highly."

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

"PLANTING" WHEAT.

Specklety flew from the haymow dim
  Begging for something to eat;
Chanticleer crowed, but she walked past him
  Straight to Miss Toddlekins' feet.
"Listen, Miss Dimple! I've laid you an egg!
Give me some corn or some wheat, I beg!
There's plenty around. Don't you think I know?
And the egg in the haymow's white as snow."

Toddlekins' apron was filled with wheat,
  The best of the winter's store;
It was not to play with, and not to eat,
  But to plant and grow into more.
Specklety saw it with covetous eyes,
Cackled aloud "I have found a prize,"
Flew to the little maid's arm, and, lo!
Scattered the wheat to the ground below.

Toddlekins cried in a tone of awe,
  Watching the lost grains go:
"Papa, she's planted the wheat in her craw;
  Do you s'pose it'll sprout and grow?"
Papa laughed out till the tears filled his eyes;
Toddlekins joined him, though lost in surprise;
Specklety cackled: "That wheat will grow;
It'll grow into eggs. Don't you think I know?"

How Alice aud Tommy Helped Each Other.

Little Alice Archer was almost discouraged that day. She knew by many signs that the beautiful, mild spring had come. Through the open window sweet scents came floating in upon the invisible wings of the wind: scents from the spicy buds of the balm of Gilead trees; fragrances from the near-by woods, where the Mayflower was opening its pink buds and the maples were preparing their crimson tassels. The great horse-chestnut tree in the front yard was all ready to break into leaf, and underneath its sturdy branches the robins were hopping about on the green turf.

"How nice to be a bird, and go just where one likes!" thought Alice. "Oh, dear me!"

"Want to buy some candy?"

The voice came in at the open window, as if in reply to Alice's impatient exclamation. Alice peeped out. There stood a boy about eight years old, one would say; that is, about Alice's own age. He was barefooted, and his coat and short trousers were patched so thoroughly that one could hardly see the stuff of which they were made. But he had a clear, bright, honest face, and soft, dark curls that fell over his tanned forehead.

"Come in," said Alice. "Come right in without ringing the bell. The door isn't locked."

The boy did as he was told, wiping his feet carefully on the door mat.

"Come and show me your candy" said Alice, as he entered the room.

There was a market basket partly filled with "sticks" and "cakes" and "drops" and chocolate creams and taffy.

"How nice it looks!" said Alice. "Will you please bring me that little purse there on the end of the mantel? The money in it is my very own, and I needn't ask mamma if I can spend it."

The boy's eyes opened wide as he saw the silver pieces in the purse—half dollars, quarters, dimes and nickels—a great deal of money for so small a girl to possess, he thought.

"How rich you are!" he said. "I wish I had as much money as that. Wouldn't mammy be glad?"

"Who is your mammy?" asked Alice.

"Mrs. Kelly. She goes out washing. Father's dead; and mammy and I must pay the rent, and buy things for Toddy. If father hadn't died, I should go to school and learn to read, and be President some day."

"Who is Toddy? inquired Alice.

"She's our baby—a pretty one, too. I wish you could see her."

Alice bought a liberal supply of candy and the little peddler turned to leave the house.

"Don't go yet," pleaded Alice, "I am so lonesome to-day. Mamma has a headache, and she's trying to get a nap."

"Why don't you go out and play?" asked the boy. Alice took up a little crutch that had been lying on the floor out of sight.

"I am lame," she said. "I can hop about the house, but I can't go out alone."

"My!" said the candy boy, "that's worse than not knowing how to read and never being President."

"I love to go out of doors," said Alice. "You can't think how much I love it. And now it's spring, and the wild flowers are beginning to bloom. I would give heaps of money for one good run in the woods."

"Why, mebby I could help you some day," said the boy. "Anyway, I must go now. And, if your mother wants her washing done, Mrs. Kelly, in the old red house at the corner, near the grist mill, would be glad to do it. My name is Tommy Kell, and' I'll fetch an' carry the clothes." So saying, Tommy touched his cap, and walked rapidly away.

Alice told mamma all about the candy peddler when the lady came down stairs to sit with her little daughter. "And only think, mamma," she said, "how good it was of him to say that he would help me walk!"

"Isn't there some way that you could help him?" asked mamma. "I shall go to see Mrs. Kelly; for I need a better laundress, and I do not doubt that Tommy is a manly, honest fellow."

"Why, how could I help anybody?" said Alice, the tears coming into her eyes.

"You might help Tommy to be President," said her mother.

"Oh, now you are laughing at me," replied Alice. "I wouldn't think that of you, mamma."

"A boy who can read has the key to all knowledge, and knowledge is power.'"

Alice looked thoughtful for a moment, then a new light came into her face.

"You mean that I might teach Tommy read," she said.

"Yes, dear, and fill up many a lonely hour for yourself."

"It is just like you, mother dear, to think of that perfectly lovely way of helping; and don't you see, I can teach Tommy while he is helping me to walk about."

"We must get acquainted first, my child; but I think that will not take long."

One sweet June morning a boy and girl might have been seen slowly walking among the flower-beds in Mrs. Archer's garden.

"Now, can you spell rose?" said the girl. The boy spelled it correctly.

"And pink?" was the next question. Pink was spelled; also leaf and vine, and stem and stalk and root.

"Now," said the girl, "we will sit down and read this story about the pink and the rose that grew side by side in the garden."

While they read, a sweet two-year old baby came toddling up to them. Tommy lifted her to his knee, and Alice gave her a cooky out of a little bag she carried on her arm.

"See there, ma'am!" said Mrs. Kelly, who was washing in the kitchen. Mrs. Archer, who was helping about the clear-starching, looked out at the happy group.

"Alice has been much more contented since she began to teach Tommy," said the lady.

"And Tommy is that set up," said Mrs. Kelly, "that I wouldn't wonder if he gets to be President after all."—Examiner.

A Working Boy.

"All the infant class boys are going to give some money to keep the little Indian boy in school," said Teddy.

"That's a good thing to do," said mamma.

"And they want to give it all of their own selves," said Teddy; "not to ask their papas and mammas for it."

"That's good, too," said mamma.

"But I haven't any money."

"How do people get money?"

"Why, earn it; don't they?"

"Yes."

"But I'm such a little bit of a fellow. Do you think I can earn money?"

"I think you could."

"How, mamma?"

"Well, you would better set your wits to work and find out for yourself. Keep on the watch all the week, and see what may turn up for you."

One—two days passed, and still Teddy did not see anything to do. On the third, Jane, the kitchen girl, paid him a cent for stoning some raisins.

"A cent isn't much," he said, feeling very much discouraged.

"Baby's mitten is lost," said mamma on the fourth day; "I will give five cents to any one who will find it."

Teddy hunted about the house until he was tired, but could not find it. The next morning, when he looked, the air was full of little white snowflakes, It snowed all the morning, but at noon the sun shone out.

Teddy took a cane to the door, and stuck it down in the snow.

"Ho, ho!" he laughed. "It's six inches deep, and more. I'm going coasting."

"You may stop and tell Pat Ray to shovel the walk," said mamma.

Then Teddy had a bright thought.

"O, mamma, mayn't I shovel the walk, and won't you pay me?"

"I'm afraid it is too hard for you."

"No, I'm sure it isn't. Please let me try."

"Well, you may try."

Teddy put on his coat, hat, scarf, and mittens, took the big shovel, and went to work.

He found it pretty hard. His back ached and his hands smarted before he was half done, but he would not give it up.

At last he reached the steps near the door. He was so tired he thought he would not clean the snow away very thoroughly. But he knew that would not be faithful work, so he cleaned well, bringing the broom to sweep in the corners. And what do you think he found lying close by the porch? Baby's mitten that he had before looked for in vain. "Will you please come and look at my work, ma'am?" he said, going to mamma.

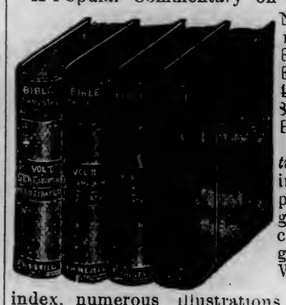
She said it was very well done.

"And I have found the baby's mitten, too," he said.

Twenty-five cents for the work, five from Jane," said mamma. "How much is all that?"

"Thirty-one cents," said Teddy, after thinking a little.

"Yes; that is a nice gift for a little boy like you."



Don't you think Teddy was happy when he carried his money to Sunday-school? I am sure it made him glad for a long time to think of the little bright-eyed, dark-skinned boy who would be better and happier because of his help.—Exchange.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

DEAR CHILDREN:—You will notice on your Exercise that the collection on Children's Day is for the purpose of sending out new missionaries. There are thirteen of these now under appointment, and more will be appointed soon, and it will depend largely on your Children's Day offering as to how many of them may go out this year to tell the story of Jesus and His love to the children of the heathen who have never heard of Him.

We are delighted that so many of our Sunday-schools are preparing to observe the day. Last year there were 119,754 children in our Sunday-schools. If each one of these would give a dime, that would make nearly $12,000, and that would send out twelve new missionaries, and support them for a year.

Some will not give anything, but many of you can give dollars instead of dimes. We are expecting great things of you. We need all the help you can give us these hard times. If each one of you will resolve to do all you can, whether little or much, then

"The least you do for Jesus
Will be precious in His sight."

Truly your friend,
S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

For Indigestion and Debility

Use Horseford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. Leonard Zepp, Westminster, Md., says: "I have used it in case of deranged digestion attended with nervous debility, with satisfactory results."

Say Soes.

That country is the strongest, the greatest and the most civilized which is covered with millions of modest but contented homes; not that in which the splendor of a few hundred palaces is supported by the wretchedness of a million hovels.

Remedy for Striped Bug.—For protecting cucumbers, squashes and melons from the common and troublesome striped bug, the Ohio experiment station had a good success by the use of tobacco powder, the refuse of the cigar factories. Aside from its value as an insecticide, the tobacco acts as a mulch and fertilizer.

A Skeleton in the Closet.

How often do we hear of this in domestic life at this day. But what is more appalling than the living body made repulsive with skin and scalp diseases, salt-rheum, tetter, eczema and scrofulous sores and swellings. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the positive cure for all of these diseases. If taken in time, it also cures Lung-scrofula, commonly known as Pulmonary Consumption. By druggists.

Keyser, N. C.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—When about three years old I was taken with mumps, also had fever, finally I had that dreaded disease Scrofula. The most eminent physicians in this section treated me to no avail. I had running scrofulous sores on left side of neck and face. I was small and weakly when eight or nine years old, and in fact was nearly a skeleton. Six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery wrought marvelous changes. Although the sores were healed in eight months, I did not quit taking it until I was sure it had been entirely routed from my system. The only signs left of the dreadful disease are the scars which ever remind me of how near death's door I was until rescued by the "Discovery." I am now eighteen years old and weigh 148 pounds; and have not been sick in five years.

Yours respectfully,
HARVEY M. HOLLEMAN,
Agt. for Seaboard Air Line.

For constipation and headache, use Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

To cool a hot dish in a hurry place it in a vessel full of cold salty water. It will cool much more rapidly than if it stood in fresh water.

THIS WORLD.

This world is blessed, bright and beautiful except as blighted by sin and its baneful consequences. Its substances of gasses, liquids and solids, its stores of air, water, oils, minerals and metals, its structure of caverns, ravines, valleys, plains, hills and mountains, its supplies of stone, ore, timber, vegetables, fruits and flowers and all abundant, varied and rich, as well as widely distributed and properly proportioned to the conditions and wants of man, its construction of one-third land and two-thirds water so related as to best sustain the productiveness of every clime, best nourish the adapted grain or fruit of each, best preserve and promote good health, in genial climes and with varied climate and changing seasons, making the best for the present life is of manifest purpose and design. On continent and island, in sunny or shady field or forest, as well as in the vast store-houses of the seas, life appears in vegetables, animals and man. In all this we are placed to live and of all this we are a part. With individual peculiarities, with social dispositions, with civil cares and duties with religious needs and calls we are here for a little while. Here we may get knowledge, improve our talents, occupy our places, exercise our faculties and hope and be prepared for the future. It is so far good and pleasing. But it cannot give rest to the soul. We may have contentment and much real joy, but not satifaction. Still we are here—fortunately with a love of life and heart to beat and a hand to help in our fellows' woes. As we are here the blessed Bible has many messages to warn, direct and encourage us. One of the apostles first wrote to Christians at Corinth saying: "And they that use this world, as not abusing it, for the fashion of this world passeth away."

We are taught to use this world. Viewing this as related to us and full of blessings bestowed, we are to receive these blessings thankfully, remembering that every good gift and every perfect gift cometh down from the FATHER of lights. We are not to be as the brute that takes every gift greedily and never looks up to see whence it comes and to thank the GIVER. Thankfulness has a right to joyfulness. It is certainly our duty to appropriate to our needs and our responsibilities, with joy, these things we receive. It was never meant that we should shut ourselves in monasteries or crush out healthful desires or deny pure affections and appetites. "Every creature of GOD is good and nothing to be refused if it be received with thanksgiving."

"Religion never was designed,
To make our pleasures less."

In receiving these good things thankfully a right use of them will be to accumulate and hold and use so much as may be needful for our own wants and the necessities and comforts and essential conveniences and self-respect and service of all dependent upon us and for the business and labors of commerce and manufacture, and for all demands of charity. It is perversion of good and contrary to Scripture to exalt poverty as an essential good or to deplore riches as an essential evil. It is the love of money, not money or its equivalent of property, that is the root of all evil. Here is a field for patient, honest industry that with labor, economy and unselfish frugality, we should so use this world as to increase goods, extend property holdings and have management direction and control of partnership or ownership in mercantile or manufacturing enterprises, trade and commerce. This is right and proper use of this world.

The proper qualification of this is that it be unselfish and the exercise of this will be so to use this world as to make provision for the wants and helpless dependence of the unfortunate. There are the poor always with us and the mercy within our reach and ministry. To relieve the poor requires kind but discriminating charity. The principle should be to help them to help themselves. It is not right to make or encourage beggars. It is a proper use of this world to care for the widow and orphan, to shelter the homeless and to supply the real wants of the destitute. There should be plans, system and co-operation so as to avoid undeserved help and yet not so much as to exempt from personal service. This true charity must be the hand of sympathy that feels as it gives. A part of this working sympathy may grow up into buildings of homes, orphanages, alms-houses, asylums, industrial and training schools, reformatories and refuges; but ambition to accumulate much for such good intitutions must not be mistaken for true charity that helps little by little every day, nor be substituted for a hand to hand help.

It is a right use of this world to improve it and our holdings in it as we pass through it. It should be said of us that the world is made better by our having lived in it. There should be no mildew on unworn clothes and books unused in closed libraries. There should be no decay of neglected ploughs and reapers, no rust on tools neglected or left carelessly in the sun and rain. The farm should be freed from weeds and briers, more fertile of soil, better supplied with water, fruits and timber, with better stock and improved cattle. The grade of manufacture should be better and improvements appear in supply and preparation of food. Professional life should show better codification and practice of law, enlarged list of remedies and increased skill and care in applying them, with wider vision and larger heart to preach truth. Every man according to his calling and opportunity should add to the sum total of benefits and every woman in her sphere to the aggregate of blessings by which every generation should make advance beyond the last before it.

In doing this and necessary to its accomplishment must be such use of this world as to secure personal culture, self-improvement along right lines. Every man at his trade, in his business or profession should seek to add daily to his fund of knowledge, to enlarge and ennoble his wisdom, to steady his nerve, to perfect his skill and every woman should seek strength and growth in all qualities and attainments which make the most of her queenly gifts, and womanly superiority, while each should strive after the best influence and seek for the spiritual power to win, and to mould their fellows in character and conduct. It is the best use of this world to seize and hold from its good, increased knowledge, true wisdom, noble characters and pure lives.

Above all, after seeking and in seeking to glorify GOD in all things, we make the best use of this world in making it a help to a better, brighter world above. As the traveler in the desert slakes his thirsts and fills his water-skins at the occasional fountain and rests at the oasis only to press on and out to the land beyond the desert, as the voyager does not make the steamer, however well stored or strong his abiding place, but a servant to place him at the harbor beyond, as the overland passenger makes the swift palatial train his helper to reach the station far away, so do the wise children of the light pass through this world and enjoying its good things, appropriating its helps as not a dwelling place—but a place of sojourn. The best use of this world's best things is to make them help on and up to the better world beyond.

HERE AND THERE.

THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE OF Congress proposes, it is said, to omit the usual annual appropriation to defray the expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners. This on the score of economy. What financial crimes are committed in that name. The appropriation is $5,000 per annum, for the services of men—merely to defray the expenses incurred—of men whose services could not be secured on a consideration of value for ten times the amount.

THE COMMISSIONERS ARE MEN WHO have secured abundant wealth by their successful management of their private affairs—a fact that attests their wisdom and their judgment in financial management, those prime qualifications for the duties which they discharge disinterestedly.

THE UTILITY OF THE COMMISSION HAS been thoroughly attested. The commissioners visit the agencies in person and the Indians on their reservations and examine, investigate and criticise with perfect impartiality. Through their exertions the gross fraud and mismanagement which have characterized Indian affairs have been in very great measure corrected. The Indians have been better treated and large sums saved to the government.

IT IS PROPOSED TOO TO REDUCE THE salaries of Indian agents, which means to displace men who are capable and efficient and put in second-rate men to save a few hundred, or at most a few thousand dollars. The reduction of the salary of the Indian School Superintendent not improbably means more than economy. It means putting out the proper man to put in one who at least is untried, or, quite as likely perhaps, it means to abolish the office entirely.

WHY ALL THIS PALTERING? DO OUR legislators believe the people can be hoodwinked by the cry of economy by restricting the efficiency of the service when the U.S. Senate is spending $4.000 a day and has been for weeks over matters that virtually are settled now—or the House upon roll calls to find a quorum when members are at home attending to their private business.

IT IS SAID THAT THE U. S. SENATE takes from the treasury over $400,000 per annum to pay—not salaries of senators—but beside that to pay employees, and the House takes as much more. The House costs two and a half millions per annum, salaries included. And in the face of all this, for something very considerably less than doing nothing, it is proposed to save what in comparison is only a few pennies by crippling important work.

LET'S BRUSH AWAY THE THIN VEIL that covers all this. The Romish hierarchy draws some hundreds of thousands of dollars from the National Treasury. They want these offices that are a restriction of their grasp upon the people's money abolished. No others interested largely in Indian affairs desire it. Here is where the zeal of the politicians derives its inspiration, and the people ought to know it. The Roman Catholic Church is in politics in this direction, as everywhere else where their pecuniary interest is involved, and it directs and controls much of the legislation which otherwise is inexplicable.

OUR OBITUARY COLUMNS TELL THAT Rev. F. D. HUNT, of Charlotte, has been bereaved, in the calling of a tender little one to the SAVIOUR'S arms. The sympathies of his brethren and friends go out to him.

THE QUESTION IS ASKED, WILL THE people of Kentucky return to Congress a man who has been proved to be a moral leper and who confesses to having lived for many years a life of sheer hypocrisy. We answer, Yes! We haven't a doubt of his triumphant return. It is sad to say, but it will be just so. Reflect a moment how readily good men, sometimes even the very best men—men themselves of most unblemished reputation—attach themselves to other men whose principal stock in trade would seem a right to boast of having lived lives of such miserable baseness and vileness, such utter profligacy as ought to blanch their cheeks with shame even to look back upon them.

IT IS A PARADOX OF HUMAN NATURE that men themselves pure and noble should countenance and uphold and support persons who glory in their former lives of sin and shame. It will be said never till they have repented and are trying to do better, and then every impulse of Christianity requires that the prodigal be encouraged and helped. And isn't this the very claim virtually put forth for the politician who now seeks endorsement? He indeed does not parade his vice before the public. He refers to it only to express contrition and shame because of it; and who shall say he is not heartily sorry for it? But is it not true, everlastingly true, that those whose lives have been so wicked, so utterly vile, should demonstrate their sincerity not only by expressions of penitence, but by actual humility—a humility which should not mean less than a sense of shame which would force them into obscurity—which certainly would not permit them to ride vauntingly aloft before their fellows.

IT WILL RUN COUNTER TO ALL experience of the past if the nation is not disgraced by the return of the member from Kentucky to its councils, but, happily that is not the end: partizan prejudices will assuage, excitement will die out, sober reason will assume control, right will assert itself—and then contemptuous indifference and disregard will succeed to insane zeal and senseless clamor, and this man will descend to his own proper place, and be heard of no more.

THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE (TALMAGE'S) was destroyed by fire on last Sunday. This is the third time it has been thus consumed. Only the Sunday previous the 25th anniversary of Dr. TALMAGE'S pastorate was celebrated with great rejoicing. The debt on the church had been adjusted and everything indicated a future of prosperity. The fire occurred just after the congregation had retired after morning service, otherwise there could hardly have failed to be a fearful loss of life. The fire it is supposed was caused by some defect in the arrangement of the electrical apparatus for lighting the church.

JUDGE THOMAS M. COOLEY, THE great constitutional lawyer, in a lecture before a law class at Ann Arbor, Mich., a few days ago, gave some attention to Coxeyism, but without definitely mentioning it. He said that the American citizen of to-day, if asked to explain the fundamentals of American liberty, would find, perhaps, to his own surprise, that he did not possess the knowledge. Our government is not a democracy, but a republic. Greece, where the people as a mass make the laws and direct their execution, is a democracy. In this country power is exercised by representatives. The chief function of the citizen is to take part in the selection of the representatives. When selected there is no power whereby the representatives can be coerced in their action. Citizens may petition, but cannot command, and if voters numbering hundreds of thousands were to assume to speak in the name of the people and demand specific legislation, not one to whom the demand was addressed would be under the slightest obligation to heed it. The right of the voter is to petition, but even in this he should act through his representatives. The notion that petions may be presented in person is preposterous.—Savannah News.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Nuggets from Many Mines.

The most inconsistent Christian in the world is he who stoutly defends a strong Calvinistic creed, with all that it implies concerning the heathen, and has much to say in criticism of those who cherish a "larger hope," and yet "don't believe much" in Foreign Missions.

Next, in inconsistency, are those who claim that the life of a Foreign Missionary is far too easy and luxurious, and yet would nevertheless about as soon bury their sons and daughters as to sacrifice them to so distant and lonely and forlorn a life

One more inconsistent Christian is the tourist, who spends perhaps an amount equal to the salary of a missionary for several years, in oriental curios and bric-a-brac, and then comes home to find fault with missionary extravagance.

The U. S. Minister to China, finding that a considerable portion of those who might look to him for protection were missionaries, determined to become acquainted with them and their work. Having possessed himself of the facts he wrote: "Believe nobody when he sneers at missionaries. The man is simply not posted."

The U. S. Consul General at Calcutta says that the deepest impression made upon him in India was the sight of those who had left homes on the other side of the world to enter the homes of the outcast and point them to the celestial mansions.

It was a heathen who said: "There is nothing human which is foreign to me." Must you and I learn from an unbaptized Roman the right use of language about missions?

Our Lord does not use the words foreign or domestic in the marching orders He issued to the Church; He taught that all men are neighbors, that there is one Father even God, and that all men are brothers. He came to humanity. He taught no special race. He lived and died to redeem men—savage, civilized, white, black, European, Asiatic and in the islands of the sea. There is not one foreign to Him among the children of His Father whom He came to save.

The field is the world. In the truest sense there are no Foreign and Domestic Missions. The words are worn out, antiquated. They belong to a state of things fast passing away.

Any one sent to do God's errands is a missionary. Whether the service be great or small, in the home, in the church or in the uttermost parts of the earth, if it is work for God it is a mission and whoever performs it is a missionary. We solemnly set apart those going out to the foreign field, we may be just as truly set apart to our work here. Every successful missionary enterprise must have missionaries at both ends of the line.

The conception of mission work which confines it to evangelism pure and simple, is very meagre. It includes rather the laying of the foundations and the erection of the superstructure of the whole kingdom of God. It means not only the saving of souls from destruction, but their development into the image of Christ.

No matter where we glean among the faiths of man, these sheaves make obeisance to the sheaf of Christianity as it arises and stands upright. It makes little odds how glorious the light of Asia, how luminous the crescent of Islam or the other stars of the religious firmament, all bow to his star in the East, and are lost in the spiritual splendors of the Sun of Righteousness.

Keshub Chunder Sen said: "Our hearts are touched, conquered, overcome by a higher power; and this power is Christ. Christ not the British government rules India."

He who talks of missions as a failure uses the language of ignorant error as an excuse for unchristian sloth.

China is to be the great missionary field of the next half century. In possibility and prophecy it is the grandest missionary field on this planet.

THE BIBLE.

Most wondrous book, bright candle of the Lord,
Star of eternity! the only star
By which the bark of man could navigate
The sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss
Securely; only star which rose on time,
And, on it dark and troubled billows still,
As generation, drifting swiftly by,
Succeeded generation, threw a ray
Of heaven's own light, and to the hills of God,
The everlasting hills, pointed the sinner's eye.
This book, this glorious book, on every line
Marked with the seal of high divinity;
On every leaf bedewed with drops of love
Divine and with the eternal heraldry
And signature of God Almighty stampt
From first to last, this ray of sacred light,
The lamp from off the everlasting throne,
Mercy took down, and in the light of time
Stood, casting on the dark her gracious bow;
And even now beseeching men, with tears
And earnest sighs, to read, believe, and live

LETTER FROM MR. MOORE.

STEAM SHIP "CITY OF PEKIN,"
April 13th, 1894.

DEAR FRIENDS:—As we had hoped we were able to leave home for our work in Japan on March 15th. Though sick in bed, Bro. Graham kept working on until now we had our faith strengthened by being allowed to go back to the work so dear to all of us. And before I say anything about our trip I desire very earnestly to thank each and every one of you for your prompt aid in this time of need when it seemed that we would have to remain at home for at least six or eight months. To many it may not mean very much, but to us who go to our work it means a great deal and more especially so when we consider the circumstances under which the money was given. We only learned that we could certainly start on March 13th, and this made it impossible for us to see but very few of our friends and say farewell. Thursday evening we left home by way of Asheville and reached Midway, Ky., Saturday morning, where we were to spend Sabbath and meet with Bro. McMullen and his generous, good people who have aided for the second time in supporting me in the work in Japan, though until this visit I had not had the pleasure of knowing one of these dear people, not even their pastor. 'Tis needless to say we enjoyed our stay there, everything except the brevity of it. It would have been simply impossible to have done otherwise. We feel that there are here many golden links in the chain of friendship and we shall never forget this occasion I am quite sure. We were compelled to leave early Tuesday morning in order to reach San Francisco in time for the sailing of our steamship. Going down to Nashville we spent several hours most pleasantly at the mission rooms as well as enjoying the hospitality of some of the good people there. We were joined by Miss Emma Boardman and commenced our westward journey Friday morning. We hoped to spend Sabbath in Kansas City, but knowing that our journey was long and that our time was short, we decided to go on Saturday further west and spend Sabbath at Phillipsburg a village in western Kansas. It was one of those cold, disageeable days made all the more so because we had been enjoying a much warmer climate. Being Easter Sunday, we made no attempt to get a hearing on missions, but enjoyed the worship of our Methodist brethren. Very early Monday morning we started again, and possibly the cause was subjective, but certainly most of our journey from here to San Francisco was rather uninteresting. Of course it would be a sad mistake to judge of a country by what one sees in a hurried trip across it in the cars. Men, generally speaking, do not make scenery one of the first requisites of a railway line. True the rugged cliffs on either side of the railroad are at times wonful, rising often for hundreds of feet almost perpendicularly, but much of the country presents a most barren appearance, and we were very glad indeed, after passing the Royal Gorge, and the top of the mountains near Leadville, where we reach the height of nearly ten thousand feet above sea level, to enter the valley or plain of great Salt Lake, where it appeared that we were actually coming once more to civilization. We stopped at Salt Lake City long enough to see the great Mormon temple, certainly one of the finest buildings for worship in America. The immense tabernacle seats (we were told) ten thousand people. The guide stood on the platform and we at the far end of the hall could hear him whisper, rub his hands together and drop a pin. So perfectly are the laws of acoustics observed! What a pity that some of our tired, overworked pastors at home could not induce their people to build churches like this building, even if the outside of the building did look rounder and less inspiring "like." Then "preacher's sore throat" would vanish away and be heard of no more. Our journey from here is if possible, more dreary than that up to this point, bare hills and rugged mountain peaks are common, with here and there a few sheep, that almost in every case excited the question: "What do they live on?" We reached San Francisco early Thursday morning and after making arrangements for our tickets left there at three o'clock p. m. We started out again and have had no time even to inquire how to get to the Midwinter fair, much less to see anything of it. But sight-seeing, however much enjoyed, is not the object of our search just now. There is little to be said about the pleasures of our voyage, at least by me. We have had a comparatively smooth passage so far and those who do not get sea-sick have enjoyed it.

And now dear friends, I thank you once more for the very kind attention you have shown both, my sister and myself, in sending us to our work, and I beg the prayers of each one of you that our mission may not be a failure. If ever a cause needed your prayers our work in Japan surely does now. Difficulties that have arisen there are not going to be settled in a few days by man's unguided wisdom, and if we are left without the guidance of the Holy Spirit we may make blunders that may be well nigh fatal to our work; but I may be able to speak more intelligently of these things later.

May you be rewarded for the work you have done and shall do for this great cause which is the work of no class or sect of Christians, but the work of the Church militant. And happy is that people who recognize the obligation resting upon them to send and take this gospel to the dying millions of the earth. May ours, though a small part, be manfully and rapidly performed is my earnest hope and prayer.

Your fellow servant,
J. WALLACE MOORE.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS FOR LAST YEAR IN OUR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

At the beginning of last year we had 106 missionaries in the field. Of these forty-three were ordained ministers; the rest were laymen and Christian women. Of the forty-three ordained ministers, ten were new men whose energies were given to acquiring languages and other preparatory work; one was an invalid; two were the greater part of the year in this country. There were only thirty active ordained workers in the field. The visible result of their labors was the addition of 600 to the Church by baptism, being an average of twenty to each ordained worker. The average in the home Church was about twelve to each ordained worker. The invisible results will not be known until the day of judgment.

The work of many of these foreign missionaries was like that of those men who went down in diving bells to lay the unseen foundations of those magnificent structures which now span the Mississippi River at Memphis and St. Louis.

At home the result of our work was a contribution of $143,000, which is about $9,000, more than the contribution of any previous year. This is nothing to boast of, but considering the times through which we have passed it is something to be thankful for.

We sent out during the year twenty-seven missionaries. By the blessing of God we were enabled to close the year with all obligations met and a balance of about $9,000, in the treasury, instead of a deficit of $25,000 as was feared when the panic was upon us.

We have now 130 missionaries on our roll. To support them in their work will require a contribution this year of at least $155,000. To make any such advance as we ought to make we will need a contribution of $175,000. Can that amount be raised? It can easily be done.

First, if the 1,029 of our churches who gave nothing last year will fall into line this year; second, if the well-to-do people of our Church as a class will give for this cause until they feel it, as many of our poor people are now and have been doing; and third, if those who fear the Lord will pray earnestly and from the heart, and continually for our Foreign Mission work. So may it be.

S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

ATHLETICS AT DAVIDSON.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DAVIDSON, N. C., May 7th.

Saturday, May 5th, was a perfect day for ushering in Davidson's first holiday set apart for athletic sports and contests. The program was varied and interesting; the spectators enthusiastic; the contests between the classes exciting, their rivalry keen, but generous. The Seniors won in throwing the base ball, the running high jump, the relay race, and the one mile race; Juniors, in the two hundred yards dash, the half mile walk, the tug of war, and the quarter mile dash; the Sophomores, in the potato race, the three-legged race, the hurdle race, and the pole-vaulting; the Freshmen, in the three-legged race (one leg and a half, the Sophs, won the other leg and a half), and the banana contest; the Meds, in throwing the hammers. In the afternoon, an excellent game of base ball was played Seniors vs. the other classes, score 7 to 3 in favor of the Seniors. Prizes will be awarded to the successful contestants in each of the contests. Mr. E. L. Wilson of the Junior Class and Mr. M. Wooten of the Sophomore Class will carry off the largest number of prizes.

The second half of the session is broken by so many pleasant interruptions in the regular routine that the time passes very rapidly between January and June.

The Senior examinations begin May 15th, the regular examinations May 29th and the Commencement, June 10th. Dr. S.S. Laws, of Columbia Seminary preaches the baccalaureate; Dr. W. W. Moore, of Union, the sermon before the Y. M. C. A.; Rev. E. W. Smith, delivers, the alumni address and Dr. G. B. Strickler, of Atlanta, Ga., the address before the Literary Societies.

With such admirable speakers, we have every reason to anticipate an unusually interesting Commencement.

[This article reached us last week after paper was up and so had to be postponed. Ed. N. C. P.]

EXTRACT FROM REPORT

Of Trustees of High School of Orange Presbytery for Session of 1893–'94.

To the Presbytery of Orange:

Your Board of Trustees of the High School would respectfully report that the school has enrolled this session forty-four pupils, with an average attendance of about thirty. This number appears disappointingly small; but there are two considerations which give this attendance a more cheering aspect; first, the fearful financial distress which seriously hurt all of our schools; and second, the fact that these forty-four pupils do not represent local patronage merely, but come from different sections of our State. We have representatives from ten counties, namely, Alamance, Caswell, Guilford, Granville, Mecklenburg, Orange, Rockingham, Stokes, Wake, and Wayne; and from the following towns and cities; Charlotte, Reidsville, Danbury, Greensboro, Burlington, Graham, Chapel Hill, Raleigh, and Mount Olive. The mailing list of our patrons includes twenty-three postoffice addresses. We have had twenty-six boarders in barracks and vicinity, being 60 per cent. of total enrollment. These facts make it evident that the school is becoming widely known, and is attracting pupils from all over our State; and that the money already expended is really a permanent investment, establishing for the school a high character and making it widely known. From all indications the attendance next year will insure the support of the school.

The enrollment as to classes is as follows: Senior 2, Junior, 7, Third Class 15, and Fourth 20. Total 44.

The representation by churches is: Presbyterians 30, Methodists 12, and Baptists 2. We have 2 candidates for the ministry, 2 ministers' sons, 9 communing members of the Presbyterian church, and about 5 of other churches.

(Then follows a financial statement, plans for the next session, and a commendation of the school to the active interest and patronage of Presbytery.)

The Presbytery expressed its gratification at the success of the school; and took the following measures for raising funds for its support:

1. Requesting Synod's Committee to appropriate to our school for this year all of Orange Presbytery's contributions to the cause of Church and Christian Education.

2. Ordering a second special collection for our own school, to be taken up in all our churches as soon as possible.

3. Authorizing the Board of Trustees to put an agent into the field to raise funds for the school.

All of the above measures are absolutely necessary for the establishment of the school on a sound financial basis, as very heavy expenses have, of course, been incurred in its organization, and it has thus far received almost no pecuniary help from any source.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
Goes regularly to Hot Springs for GOUT, RHEUMATIC GOUT, RHEUMATISM.—How this Water is valued there in BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS and STONE OF THE BLADDER.

Dr. Algernon S. Garnet,
Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., says:
"My experience in the use of
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
is limited to the treatment of Gout, Rheumatism and that hybrid disease, "Rheumatic Gout" (so-called), which is in contradistinction to the Rheumatoid Arthritis of Garrod. I have had excellent results from this Water in these affections, both in my own person and in the treatment of patients for whom I have prescribed it. Of course the remedial agent is its contained Alkalies and their solvent properties. Hence it is a prophylactic as well as a remedy in Nephritic Colic and forming Calculi, when due to a redundancy of Lithic Acid."

Dr. Wm. B. Towles,
Professor of Anatomy and Materia Medica in the Medical Department of the University of Virginia, former Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Va., says:
"I feel no hesitancy whatever in saying that in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Stone in the Bladder, and in all Diseases of Uric Acid Diathesis, I know of no remedy at all comparable to
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
"Its effects are marked in causing a disappearance of Albumen from the urine. In a single case of Bright's Disease of the kidneys I witnessed decided beneficial results from its use, and from its action in this case I should have great confidence in it as a remedy in certain stages of this disease."

The late Dr. Wm. F. Carrington, Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Ark., Surgeon (retired) U. S. Navy, says:
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER has signally demonstrated its remedial power in Gout, Rheumatic Gout, Rheumatism, Uric Acid, Gravel and other maladies dependent upon the Uric Acid Diathesis. It not only eliminates from the blood the deleterious agent before it crystalizes, but dissolves it in the form of Calculi, at least to a size that renders its passage along its ureters and urethra comparatively easy. Send twenty cases No. 2."

Dr. T. B. Buchanan,
Resident Physician, Hot Springs, Arkansas, says: "Send me five cases of
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
I have made use of this Water for Gout in my own person and prescribed it for patients similarly suffering, with the most decided beneficial results. I take great pleasure in advising Gouty patients to these Springs.

This water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half gallon bottles $5.00 f.o.b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent to any address.

HOT SPRINGS. VIRGINIA

The church fund is growing slowly, but surely. Quite a number must have forgotten last week, and I shall be glad to hear from you this week.

All contributions are acknowledged at once by letter or through the papers. If you do not want your name to appear, just ask that it appear as "A Friend." I gratefully acknowledge the following: Miss Emma Jones, Millboro Depot, Va., $1; Mrs F Darnell, Millboro Depot, Va., $1; Mt Carmel L. H. M. S., Va., $5; Mrs A R Porter, Gerardstown, W. Va., $5; Mr G W McKown, Gerardstown, W. Va., $5; Mrs Wm H Jeffress, Jeffress Store, Va., $5; Mrs J C Carson, Blountville, Tenn., $1; Bells Valley Missionary Society, Bells Valley, Va., $5; From one of the 492 left Moorefield, W. Va., $1; Geo Glass, Roanoke, Va., $1; A H McCue, Fishersville, Va., $5; Mrs C M Nickell, Millboro Depot, Va., $1; Rev Jas Murray, D D., Bedford City, Va., $1; Miss Bessie McCoy, Warrenton, Va., $1; Mrs Wm F S Greenville, Va., $1. Total number 15. Amount $39. By last report 54, amount $142.25. Total to date (by 69 friends of the work) $181.25. In January, 1894, I asked 546 persons to send me $800; from 69 persons I have received $181.25; leaving 477 friends to send $619.75. Will not 77 persons respond this week and reduce this number to 400? before my next report? thus increasing the amount. If so send on the same day you get this, (unless it is Sunday, then send on Monday.)

The Roman Catholic church is already begun—the gift of one lady who visited there from New York.

Oh! Protestants! help me, that we may have a Protestant church at the Hot Springs right away. Our room will soon be too small for the congregations, and we need the church so much. Send something this week please to the pastor, Rev. Wm. C. White, Warm Springs, Virginia.

A Christian woman wrote upon the fly-page of her Bible the following words: "Lay any burden upon me, only sustain me; send me anywhere, only go with me: sever any tie but that one which binds me to Thy service and to Thy heart." This is true consecration.

Some Glimpses of Heaven.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

There are but few things that have been revealed to us in the Bible about Heaven. God's Book devotes a great many pages to the rules for right living in this world, even though our sojourn here is so short. Its aim is to show us the way to Heaven; but only a few sentences are devoted to the description of the eternal home of God's people. The Bible says enough to pique our curiosity, to excite speculation, to sharpen a spiritual appetite, but not enough to lift the sublime mystery which overhangs it. A few things are made quite clear to us.

In the first place, it is not merely a condition; it is a locality. It is distinctly bounded, or else such words as "walls" and "gates" would be a fantasy. Having no need of sun or moon or stars, the "Lamb is the lamp thereof." There is something beautifully suggestive in the many-sidedness of Heaven, with gates of entrance from every point of the compass. This emphasizes the catholicity of the "many mansions" into which all the redeemed shall enter, from all regions of the globe, and from every denomination of Christendom. All shall come in through Jesus Christ, yet by many gateways. The variety of "fruits" on trees of life would seem to point toward the idea of satisfying every taste and aspiration of Christ's innumerable household. Having no gross bodies that require food, we shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more. The aspirations shall be for larger knowledge—to become greater, wiser, nobler; to become filled more and more with God—forever "reaching forth unto the things that are before."

Heaven assuredly is to be a home, and its occupants one vast household of love. No one will be lonesome, or complain of the lack of congenial society. Shall we know each other there? Most assuredly we shall; for God's Word never hints that our identity shall be destroyed by the process called death. We shall be the same persons, even if the external conditions become different, when the natural body becomes a spiritual body. In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus the wretched sufferer is described as recognizing Abraham in the abode of the blessed. Would our Lord have given his sanction to an utter fiction? If Abraham so preserved his identity as to be recognized and to be addressed by name, why not every other inhabitant of our Father's House? Paul expected to depart and to be with Christ, and still to be Paul after he arrived there. With what delight he expects also to greet his spiritual children in glory! The veteran soul-winner exclaims: "What is our joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" This would be solemn nonsense if Paul did not hope to recognize his Thessalonian converts in Heaven. The early Church all held to this doctrine of future recoguition. Martin Luther, in one of his Table Talks, said: "We shall know Father and Mother and each other, on sight, better than Adam knew Eve." That sturdy old New England theologian, Dr. Nathaniel Emmons, was never given to imaginative flights; and during last sickness he said: "I want to go to Heaven. I want to see Isaiah and Elijah and the Apostles; but I want to see Paul more than any man I can think of." There are many others of us who may want to ask many questions of the author of the Epistle to the Romans. What family reunions there will be there also! "I do not expect," said an eminent minister to me once, "that I shall be so absorbed in looking at my Savior that I shall forget my dear old mother; I shall look for her as soon as I get within the gates."

When Cyneas, the ambassador of Pyrrhus, returned from his visit to Rome in the days of her glory, he reported to his sovereign that he had seen a "commonwealth of kings." So will it be in Heaven, where every heir of redeeming grace will be as a king and priest unto God; and divine adoption shall make every one a member of the royal family. What a comfort that we will never be obliged to pull up our tent-poles in quest of a pleasanter residence. Heaven will have no "moving day." No humble child of toil will be tortured any longer about the scanty means to pay rent, or tremble at the sight of an exacting landlord. When you and I have packed up at the tap of death's signal bell, and set out on our last journey, there will be a delightful permanence in those words, "forever with the Lord." No longer shall we dread to be torn away from associations and kindred whom we love, and to be sent off into strange places or among uncongenial faces.

One of the best evidences of the entirely sanctified condition of Christians in that world will be that God can trust us there with complete happiness and unalloyed prosperity. I never met with a Christian in this world who could be; even Paul needed a thorn in the flesh to prick his pride and keep him humble. There is not one of us whose religion might not soon decay if exposed to the blazing heat of a constant sunshine. We require continual chastisements and settings-down and settings-back, and frequent trials of head-winds and storm. Nothing would ruin us sooner than to be allowed always to have our own way. But in Heaven it seems likely that we can bear to be perpetually healthy, perpetually prosperous, perpetually happy, without the need of watchfulness or the fear of falling. How hard it will be to recognize ourselves! We shall require no rods of correction, and there will be no house-room for crosses there. Can it be, my brother, that you and I shall ever see a day that will never know a pang, never make a false step, never hear a sigh of shame or self-mortification, never see one dark hour, and never have a cloud to cross the unbroken azure of our sky? And oh, what a joyful relief to poor bed-ridden sufferers to know that "none shall say I am sick; neither shall there be any more pain!"

Happy is that follower of Christ whose life work is kept up so steadily to the line that he is ready to leave it at a moment's notice. The leagues to that world of rest—where the holiest activities are restful—are few and short. Happy is he who, amid the busiest service of his Master and his fellow-men, is always listening for the footfall this side of the golden gate and for the voice of invitation to hasten home! A true life is just a tarrying in the earthly tent for Christ until we go into the mansions with Christ. "I hope your master has gone to Heaven," said some one to a Southern slave in the old-time days of slavery. "I'se afraid he has not gone dare," replied Ben; "for I neber heard him speak of dat. When he go to de North, or to de Virginny Springs, he always be gettin' ready for weeks. I neber see him gettin, ready for goin' to Heaven." That simple negro's words have a weight of wisdom and solemn admonition to us all. For let us be sure that no one of us will get even a glimpse of Heaven's glory or a taste of its joys unless we are making ready for it by a life of obedience to Jesus Christ. There may be many who will knock at the gate and cry "Lord, open to us," and find too late that they have shut that gate against themselves. —Independent.

How a Tired Woman was Rested.

Looking over a pile of clippings, made several years ago, I came across two which had lost none of their interest to me, and as I happened to know that they touch on a phase of experience common to many of my readers, I venture to reproduce them in condensed form, says a writer in the Home Missionary Monthly. I do not know the writers of either article, but I am sure that in each instance a personal experience is given. The first tells

HOW A TIRED WOMAN WAS RESTED.

It was only nine o'clock in the morning, yet she was already tired. She had been up since six; had prepared breakfast, drawn water from the well, gone to the cellar four times; then she washed the dishes, set the bread, swept dining-room and kitchen; now the sitting-room was to be put in order, cake to be made, some ironing to finish, lamps to be filled, a pie to be made for dinner, which must be ready at precisely twelve o'clock

All these things weighed her down, body and soul. Like Martha, she was cumbered with much serving: like Martha, also, she felt that she was left to serve alone, while her more favored friends were allowed to indulge their tastes and inclinations spending their summer days, not in a hot, narrow kitchen, but in various delightful resorts. But, she with the same tastes, the same inclinations and inspirations, was condemned to unending drudgery, added to the hard work of making five dollars do the work of ten.

You see she was very weary; and the over-worked body so wrought upon the usually willing spirit, that for the time she forgot the helping hand, which through all the years, had tenderly led her, even when the paths were thorny and the way rough, she did not then remember the various "brooks by the way" from which she had been permitted to drink and be refreshed.

While her irons were heating she sat down for a moment to rest, taking up the Bible, which was open at the next Sabbath's lesson. "Jesus at the Feast." While studying the preceeding one, "Jesus at Bethany," her sympathy had gone out toward Martha, heated, hurried, tired Martha. And here again she read, "and Martha served." Then came the mention of Mary; of her graceful, fragrant service; of the Master's approving recognition, and of the wonderful prophecy which must have so delighted her soul. And as she read, she seemed to see the sister when the feast was over. Mary, sweet, fair and spotless; the odor of the ointment clinging to her garments, and the blessed words of Jesus still ringing in her ears: Martha, with tired and anxious face, ruffled hair, hands full of soiled napkins and empty dishes, and perhaps not in a mood to sympathize fully with her sister as she repeated, for her benefit, what Christ had said.

These thoughts passed through the mind of the tired worker; then her eyes fell upon a text which, though she must have read it a hundred times before, seemed to strike her as entirely new, "Now Jesus loved Martha and her sister, and Lazarus"—loved them all; but Martha's name was mentioned, the only woman particularly honored in this way, yet Martha served; and though Jesus reproved her when she lost patience and was discouraged and complained of Mary's neglect, yet she was answered by a reproof so gentle that she was drawn nearer to the loving heart of him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.

Then the mind strayed off to a thought of the almost positive rebellion felt that very day, because, instead of enjoying the privilege of attending the Presbyterian Missionary meeting in a neighboring town, she must stay at home and serve. It would have been so much more delightful to sit at the feast, as did Mary of old, and listen to the story of the progress of the Master's kingdom. But glad, restful thought! tiresome tasks need not shut out from Christ's love. She could pray for the extension of his kingdom if she might not listen to the story, and catch the inspiration of actual contact with those who bore the tidings.

"Jesus loved Martha." The words were as a tonic to soul and body; and when the Bible was laid away and work resumed, the labor seemed lighter, and she has gone in the light of those blessed words many days.

The other clipping is headed

CAREFUL MARTHA'S MESSAGE.

Of the two sisters at Bethany I have always preferred Mary, imagining her, after giving due attention to the requirements of her guests, sitting cool and quiet listening to the words of Jesus, our very ideal of the gracious hostess. Then Martha appears, heated and officious, more intent upon exhibiting her own house-wifely skill than on entertaining her friends, and reproves her sister because she will not turn away from Jesus to perform some little unnecessary labor.

But on a certain washing day Martha taught me a lesson that I never have learned from Mary. It was not only washing day with an incompetent washer-woman, but it was also threshing day, and there were six hungry men to cook for besides our own two; I had the care of a nervous invalid, and was sick myself with the kind of faintness in which one cannot decide whether the soul is dropping out of the body, or the body is falling away from the soul.

Standing before a sink full of unwashed dishes I was pervaded with the idea of how far away the Lord was from me; never before had he appeared so high and holy and unapproachable. He was the judge of all the earth, he was the King in his glory, he was the High and Holy One who inhabiteth eternity; no name brought him near to me.

"Master, carest thou not that I serve alone?" suddenly rang in my ears, and Martha, with her face as heated as my own, seemed close to me.

"Oh, how well acquainted she must have felt with him before she could have said that to him!" I thought, with a throb of joy, "and as he is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, he is just as human to-day as he was eighteen hundred years ago, when he was so human that Martha dared tell him of a household perplexity."

And then the Man, Christ Jesus, our Friend and Helper, came back to me, near and real.

Anecdote.

"Why do you whip me?" said the long seam little Maggie was sewing in the dress she had torn." Because I hate you and you keep me from play," replied little Maggie. But presently she remembered the way her mother spoke to her on occasion, and she said, "I whip you, my dear seam, for your own good, so that you may grow strong, and not rip and tear as you have done.—Harper's Young People.

The Gentlewoman.

A gentlewoman never fails in the small, sweet courtesies. Instinctively she respects the feelings of others, and having the golden rule by heart, it is from her heart that all lovely, love-compelling graces flow. "In her tongue is the law of kindness," and she has the ready tact which takes advantage of every opportunity to render the lives of others happier,

And every morning, with "Good-day,"
Makes each day good.

Her winning smile and gentle minis trations, her soft voice and unfailing sympathy, insure her always a ready welcome, and, like the sun, she "finds the world bright, because she first makes it so." The fairy tale of our young days has a peculiar charm and attraction. The courteous, cheerful maiden who draws water for the withered old crone, and who listens to her and replies with amiability is rewarded with the gift of uttering pearls and diamonds; and, in the less romantic German version, Frau Holle bestows gold pieces as the reward of civility and diligence with that delightful prodigality so characteristic of fairyland.

Self-Consciousness.

Self-consciousness is not to be cured by any patent method, and cannot be explained in a sentence. If you want to cure it, the first thing is to diagnose it. What does it spring from? There are some cases in which it is of the nature of a physical infirmity, no doubt. But dismissing cases of hereditary shyness, timidity, seclusiveness, it will be found that in most people self-consciousness is the product of restless egoism and morbid vanity. The remedy, therefore, is to suppress yourself, to try not to think of yourself, to get outside yourself, to avoid the habit of morbid self-introspection, to cultivate social life, and acquire interest in those pursuits and services for humanity which enable you to forget yourself in the life of others. I know no other remedy. I am acquainted with several people in whom the torture of self-consciousness amounts almost to a disease. It grows by what it feeds on. If it has gone on unchecked into middle life, it is almost past cure. But in youth it may be conquered, and by such simple means as I suggest. Get rid of vanity and self-love, and you will have cut the root of this upas-tree of self-consciousness, which darkens so many human live.

Serenity of Old Age.

One is sometimes very much impressed with the wonderful reserve of strength shown by people who are in extremely feeble health, as, for instance, the very aged. They bear great troubles, which one would think sufficient to crush them, with a fortitude and resignation surpassing the courage and strength shown by younger people.

Perhaps it is because they are so much nearer the other world that their vision has grown clearer, and already the promise is fulfilled to them: "Thine eyes shall behold the King in his beauty. Thou shalt see the land that is very far off." Younger people shrink from pain and are overcome by burdens and cares, but the dear old people calmly meet whatever is appointed to them, and serenely accept whatever the day brings.

Mulberry and Williams Memorial :—We have just had a great blessing upon our two adjoining little churches—Mulberry and Williams Memorial. We rejoice in the reception of thirty-nine new members and our two greatly aroused communities.

On Thursday, April 26th, Bro. J. H. Harrell came and preached until Wednesday, May 2nd at Williams Memorial. He came, like Apollos, "mighty in the Scriptures." He expounded extended passages in such a way that God honored his word in a genuine revival of true religion and fourteen additions to our membership. On Friday night we began at Mulberry and, on Sunday night (May 6th), Bro. J. W. Siler came very quietly into our midst, and began by saying he had just come to "talk" to us about Jesus. "It was the Lord's doings and it is marvellous in our eyes." Already there have been twenty-five added to our little roll of ninety-eight members. Bro. Siler left us this morning (Saturday.) The meeting continues until Sunday. I attribute the great measure of blessing received under God and his ministering servants to the fact that in both churches there is a working as well as a praying membership. Praise the Lord !

Vass and is remarkably proficient and sings beautifully. A large delegation of the girls and boys built up gradually a "Monument of Christian Character," with blocks, named from virtues, and with recitations and appropriate hymns. The pastor, Dr. L. C. Fire destroyed the Edgestone Methodist church, near Chester, Pa., on Saturday last. Said to be the work of an incendiary. The church cost $28,000 and furniture $3,000.

At the Arlington Hotel, Washington City, on 2d inst., the trustees of the American University (Methodist) was held. The Baltimore Sun says : Among other gifts of the past three months special recognition was made of the contribution of $100,000 by a lady of New York whose name is not announced. It was unanimously voted, in view of the fact that sufficient funds are now in hand to justify the opening of a department of history, that two buildings—a hall of history and a hall of administration—be begun so soon as additional funds sufficient to complete them shall have been secured in cash and reliable pledges. The meeting was the most widely representative one yet held in the history of the institution.

INSTALLATION OF REV. L. B. TURNBULL.

At Durham, Thursday Evening, May 10th 1894.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

On Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, the Presbytery of Orange met in the First Presbyterian church, of Greensboro, according to adjournment and amongst other matters of interest and importance, received the Rev. L. B. Turnbull, from the Presbytery of East Hanover, Va., and thereupon the call for his pastoral services by the church of Durham, was read and put into his hands, and the call accepted by him. The following brethren were appointed to install him as pastor on on the following Thursday evening, May the 10th : Rev. J. Henry Smith, D. D , was appointed to preside, to preach the sermon, propose the questions to the pastor elect, and to the people, to institute the pastoral relation and to charge the pastor, and the Rev. M. McG. Shields, of Roxboro, to charge the people. This duty was performed by the above committee on Thursday night according to appointment. It was an exceedingly pleasant visit to Durham and to his many warm friends there, that this appointment required the undersigned to make—not only because of the hearty welcome and charming entertainment he received, and the large and full congregation that assembled to witness the service and attest their interest and joy, but because of the assurance he felt that the Lord had guided this people in their choice of a successor to my old and dear friend and brother, Rev. H. T. Darnall, who had served them so long and happily, but whose last months had been saddened and darkened by that greatest and heaviest of all bereavements—the death of his sweet and charming wife—his companion and helper for years, and the mother of his boys. As I stepped into the church I recalled the sad fact that when last I entered there, it was to meet a full and weeping assembly gathered for the funeral and burial of their beloved pastor's wife, and my own dear friend.

On the occasion of the installation of Bro. Turnbull—though it was a weekday night, and in a busy city—yet the house was filled with an attentive audience whose interest and attention did not seem to flag from beginning to end. The charge to the people given by Bro. Shields was a specially good one—earnest and appropriate, and if the good people and the pastor will heed and carry out the charges given them, we think a happy and prosperous future opens up before our cause in the town of Durham. I have taken part in many installations, but I recall none where the indications of God's smile and approbation were more manifest—where the prospect of growth was more encouraging and where the cordial grasp of the new pastor's hand by old and young gave more pleasing evidence of "cordial reception and affectionate regard." May I be permitted to add that so many of my old friends of the Durham church, came up at the same time to greet me with smiling face and cordial shake, that a stranger might have been at a loss to know who was the one that had just been installed. Grace, mercy and peace be upon this church and its pastor and upon all their work and co-operation in advancing the cause of "one Jesus."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., May 9th, 1894.

The most important act of any member of the present administration. from the standpoint of those who believe in moral reform, was Postmaster Bissell's determination not to appoint any man postmaster who is engaged in selling intoxicating liquor. Mr. Bissell's argument is unanswerable. He says that a man who sells intoxicationg liquor is, in his opinion, unfitted to occupy a position of trust. He is right ; there is a screw loose in the moral machinery of any man who is willing to engage in a business which contaminates everything it comes in contact with and which creates more misery and entails more suffering upon innocent women and children than any other business that is recognized by law ; but, he should not stop at refusing to appoint sellers of intoxicating liquor ; he should also refuse to appoint drinkers of the vile stuff, and then the President and every other member of the Cabinet should do likewise. Many good men, aye, and women too, have for years been studying and promulgating methods of purifying politics, but none of them have made a striking success of it, although their earnest efforts have resulted in some improvement. This administration has an opportunity to do more towards purifying politics than has been done during the preceding century, by taking whiskey out of politics. Let it be officially announced that no man who drinks intoxicants can be appointed to or hold office, and temperance would be given the greatest boom it has ever enjoyed and the official business of the country would be better transacted than ever before. Nothing short of a Constitutional amendment can reach the whiskey drinkers of Congress, but it was made apparent this week when a member of Congress while intoxicated made an unprovoked attack upon an inoffensive citizen, on Pennsylvania Avenue, that they ought to be reached in some way. There will be—there can be—no purification of politics until whiskey-drinking is banished therefrom, and Mr. Bissell deserves well of the country for having taken even a short step in that direction.

It was confidently expected by many that the Senate would ratify the Chinese treaty this week, but it did not, although an executive session five hours long was entirely devoted to the treaty, The labor organizations have increased the opposition in the Senate, and they are credited with delay in acting upon the treaty.

The international peace bureau at Berne, Switzerland has selected the following to constitute a branch bureau with headquarters in this city : Alfred H. Love, of Philadelphia ; Belva A. Lockwood, Washington, D. C. ; Charles C. Bonney, of Chicago ; Rev. Amanda Deyo, San Diego, Cal. ; and William F. Aldrich, Aldrich, Ala. This bureau is to be made the medium of communication between the various American peace associations and the Berne bureau. The sixth universal peace Congress will be held from Aug. 29th, to September 3rd, at Antwerp, Belgium, by invitation of and under the auspices of the managers of the exposition now being held there.

Every observer has noticed the remarkable growth in recent years of young peoples organizations of the churches, and none of them have had a more phenomenal growth than the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, which, although only six years old, has nearly 200 chapters in the United States and Canada, embracing in its membership eleven denominations. Washington and Baltimore have united in a brotherhood union, meetings of which are to be frequently held in both cities. At its present rate of growth the membership of to-day will be doubled before the organization is ten years old.

Now that the amendments—more than 400 in number—to the tariff bill have been submitted to the Senate it is expected that the majority will proceed to push the bill to a vote, and, although the amendments are not on the whole entirely satisfactory to any of the Senators, it is not believed that the minority will resort to any dilatory tactics to prevent a vote.

If any proof had been needed that the leaders of the so-called "Coxey' army" are willfully and intentionally misleading the 500 men who was camped in about the unhealthiest spot in Washington it was furnished by the refusal of those leaders to allow ministers of the gospel to preach to the men. The health officials have recommended that the camp be removed, regarding it as a menace to the health of the city. Yesterday, after a trial lasting the greater part of four days, Coxey and two of his assistants, Browne and Jones, were convicted of violating the law for the protection of the Capitol building and grounds. They will appeal to a higher court, if denied a new trial. T.

Having resigned from the treasuryship of Orange Presbytery, I desire to give notice to church treasurer's, that they will send all monies contributed by their churches, to Mr. Thomas Fuller, Durham N. C., on and after the 1st of July.

It certainly was an error, and a very bad error, the saying that Mr. C. S. Tait, of Brunswick, Ga., would send a collection of 13 plants for 5 cents. He proposed to send the collection for 50 cents and certainly that would seem cheap enough. Mr. Tait complains that the error has given him a great deal of trouble. While this shows that an advertisement in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN is read extensively and acted upon, it does not quiet our regret that this dreadful error should have occurred, and we hope that Mr. Tait will be abundantly remunerated by orders for the plants he offers at such low prices. His advertisement to which we specially invite attention, will be found on 6th page.

A highly cultured young lady wants a situation in a school or college. Her advertisement on fifth page gives particulars.

A PIECE OF HER MIND.

A lady correspondent has this to say :
"I want to give a piece of my mind to a certain class who object to advertising, when it costs them anything—this won't cost them a cent.

I suffered a living death for nearly two years with headaches, backache, in pain standing or walking, was being literally dragged out of existence, my misery increased by drugging.

At last, in despair, I committed the sin of trying an advertised medicine, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and it restored me to the blessedness of sound health. I honor the physician who when he knows he can cure, has the moral courage to advertise the fact." The medicine mentioned is guaranteed to cure the delicate diseases peculiar to females, as "Female Weakness," periodical pains, irregularities, nervous prostration, spasms, chorea or St. Vitus's Dance, sleeplessness, threatened insanity.

To permanently cure constipation, biliousness, indigestion or dyspepsia, use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

A man can smile grimly under the tortures of the rack but he cannot tread on a tin tack with his bare foot without a bitter howl.

The little toe is disappearing from the human foot. At a recent meeting of the French Academy of Science it was demonstrated that in the last two centuries the average size of that toe has decreased so much that instead of three joints it has most frequently only two, and that, in addition, the nerves and muscles controlling it are slowly becoming useless.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

On last Thursday night Mr. Mauger London, died in his 82d year. He was the oldest member of the Wilmington bar, and until forced from practice by blindness one of the ablest and most successful lawyers in the eastern section and probably indeed in the whole State.

Memorial Day was celebrated in Wilmington. Col. Julian S. Carr, of Durham, delivered the address, one of the best ever heard here, and which has been pronounced as an incomparable vindication and commendation of the part taken by North Carolina in the late war.

We see it stated that Mr. George W. Watts, of Durham, will donate to that town a city hospital complete in all departments, and present it with an endowment of $25.000. The contract requires completion of the building by December 1st.

Large crowds are expected in Raleigh at the laying of the corner-stone of the Confederate Monument on the 22d inst. That city has given $500 towards making the ceremonies a success.

Chatham Record : From all parts of the county we are pleased to hear encouraging reports of the wheat crop, which now promises to be abundant.

Southport Leader : On last Friday the steamer Wilmington carried up the river probably the largest number of sturgeon ever carried on one trip. There were seven of these fish, some of them weighing two hundred pounds.

Asheville Citizen : E. V. Brookshire, Representative in Congress from the English district of Indiana, has purchased of P. F. Patton the latter's farm on the Hendersonville road, three miles from Asheville. The price paid was $6,000. Congressman Brookshire has been in Asheville several times, and on his last visit remarked that in a few years all the sightly points about here would be occupied by residences.

Tarboro Southerner : Whoever heard of so many fires in the country—so many barns being burned, so many stables destroyed? The last fire of this sort in the country occurred last Friday night near Battleboro. Mr. Frank Rollins had his stables burned down, and in the fire lost not only his feed but two horses. One of his mules was badly burned, but will probably live. Mr. Rollins' loss is heavy. We have not heard whether he was insured or not. The cause of the fire is unknown, but supposition says it was incendiarism. It seems as if nobody is safe.

Second Quarter.—Lesson IX.

May 27.—Moses Sent as a Deliverer.

Exodus iii. 10–20. Commit vss. 10–12.

Golden Text. Fear thou not; for I am with thee. Is. xli. 10.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Moses grows up "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22). A tradition preserved by Josephus says that he had received command in the army and made an expedition into Ethiopia from which he returned as a conqueror. Something like this is implied in the expression "mighty in words and in deeds" in the verse just cited. At forty years of age he espoused the cause of his people. The narrative in Exodus might leave us under the impression that his act was one of sudden and rash impulse (ii. 11, 12,) but the N. T. (Acts vii. 25; Heb. xi. 24–26) show that it was deliberate choice. Still the act was rash in that it was entering upon his mission of deliverer without waiting for the Divine command. He was trusting in his own resources and leadership, just as Paul thought he had peculiar qualifications to be a minister to the Jews (Acts xxii. 18–21). The killing of an Egyptian official, and the cutting off his prospect of immortality (according to Egyptian belief) by burying him without embalming was an offense that could not be overlooked, and Moses has to flee. In Midian the same hatred of oppression and injustice that brought him into trouole in Egypt, brings him into favor, and finds him a home and a wife. Here he settles down into the quiet life of shepherd and has given up all other ambitions when the voice of God speaks to him out of the burning bush. Read carefully Ex. ii. 11–25; iii. 1–9. God's hour has struck. Rameses II has gone on filling the land with magnificent buildings, and covering old buildings with his names and titles, for a quarter of a century since the flight of Moses. He has built and adorned his magnificent tomb and at last he has occupied it. The chemists have done their work, and the bandages have been wrapped around him and carefully marked in fadeless ink, waiting for the 19th century discoverer. His son Menephtah with all his father's vanity, but without his father's ability, has been on the throne 12 or 13 years. But the change of kings has brought no relief and Israel's bondage has waxed worse and worse. Now the Lord comes to judgment. No wonder that Egypt's monuments that are so full of the beginning of this reign tell us nothing of its close. No wonder that the succeeding reigns are wrapped in obscurity, and that years of anarchy follow. Egypt in its pride is about to engage in battle with the Most High, and to come out broken and humbled for years to come.

Second Step. Study the points of the lesson; (1) the call and commission, vs. 10; (2) Difficulties, (a) Moses' insufficiency vs. 11; (b) the need of a Name whose authority would be recognized, vs. 13; [(c) the need of credentials, iv. 1]; (2) Answers, (a) God's presence, vs.12(b) the Name given, vss. 14, 15; (c)[a sign for Israel, iv. 2–5], and judgments for the Egyptians, vs. 20. (4) Assurances of success: (a) Israel will hear and unite in the request, vss. 16–18; (b) Pharaoh will be overcome and yield, vs. 19, 20; (c) "ye shall worship on this mountain," vs. 12.

Third Step Study with your helps any points requiring explanation:

Vs. 10. That thou mayest bring forth, the ultimate object of his mission, but not the first demand, see vs. 18.

Vs. 11. Who am I. Moses' thought is, "I tried this once when I had the prestige of a princely position, and failed. What can I hope to do now as a proscribed and perhaps forgotten exile?

Vs. 12. Certainly I will be with thee—the essential element.

When thou hast brought forth, etc. A strange "token" this seems. How could that encourage him to do which was to happen after he had done?—(1.) God's assurance that a certain definite thing would happen is encouragement to take the intermediate steps; (2.) When Moses had brought the people out his hardest work was still to be done, and the experience of God's faithfulness so far would encourage him for the rest.

Vs. 14. I am that I am—a revelation of his nature as the self-existent Being. Without vowels (as the ancient Hebrew was written) it consisted of the four letters J. (pronounced y). H, V, (pronounced w), H. The Jews had a superstition about pronouncing it and so, when the vowel points were added, pointed it with the vowels of A'donay, Lord. This gave rise to J'hovah, or Jehovah. Whenever the word LORD (in capitals) is found in our version it stands for this name. We had much better read "Jehovah," as urged by the American revisers.

Vs. 15. This verse identifies Jehovah, as He now wishes to be known, with the El Shaddai (Gen. xvii. 1) who had made the covenant of circumcision with their fathers.

Vs. 16. Elders. Israel even in bondage was an organized people. They had carefully kept their family records, and the heads of the houses of their fathers "had a recognized authority. Government by elders has been the recognized organization of God's Church in all ages, and will be unto the end (Rev. iv. 4.)

Vs. 17. I have said, i. e., to Abraham (Gen. xv. 14–21. This prophecy had been kept in their remembrance by God's counsel to Jacob on going down into Egypt (xlvi. 3, 4) and by Joseph's dying command (l. 24, 25).

Vs. 18. Now let us go, etc. It is strange that any Christian student should interpret this as Pharoah evidently did, as a lying pretence to get out of the land and then escape altogether. Had Pharoah granted the request, Moses would have kept faith and returned and waited for further revelations of duty. God prompts Moses to make of Pharoah first a very moderate request that the tyranny of his refusal may be more conspicuous.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours.

SUMMARY.—God speaks to Moses feeding his flock on Horeb from out the burning bush and commissions him to deliver Israel. Moses pleads his insufficiency; God promises His presence, and assures him that Israel shall worship Him upon this very mountain. Moses asks for a Name to give the people; God gives Him the name Jehovah—self-existent One—as His covenant name forever; commands Moses to go to the elders with the message that he comes from the God of their fathers who had looked upon their affliction according to His promise to bring them again to Canaan; assures Moses that they will hear him and join in the demand for permission to go forth to sacrifice, and that though Pharaoh will refuse, He will overcome him by signs and wonders and compel him to acquiesce.

Fifth Step. Study the topices suggested by the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. God's calls to service, vs. 10.
   Joshua, Josh. i. 9; Gideon, Judg. vi. 14; Isaiah, Is. vi. 8; Jeremiah, Jer. i. 7-10; Esther, Esth. iv. 14; Peter, Matt. iv. 18–20; Paul, Acts xxii. 14, 15, 18–21.
2. Certainly I will be with thee, vs. 12-
   (a) The promise renewed.
   To Moses, Ex. xxxiii. 14; to Joshua, Josh. i. 5; to Israel, Is. xli. 10; in trouble, Is, xliii. 2; in united prayer, Matt. xviii. 20; in evangelizing the world, Matt. xxviii. 20.
   (b) The need expressed, Ex. xxxiii. 15; Ps. xxvii. 9.
   (c) Fulfilment acknowledged—
   In history of God's people, Is. lxiii. 9.
   In personal experience, Ps. xxiii. 4.
   (4) The secret of power, John xv. 5; Phil. iv. 13.

Sixth Step. In the light of these truths ask for yourself, Paul's question, Acts ix. 6; consider Christ's message to Sardis, Rev. iii. 8; and be ready in response to God's call to give Isaiah's answer, Is. vi. 8; trusting in Christ's promise, 2 Cor. xii. 9.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

After bringing out the connecting history, tell of the Burning Bush. Mention that it was the emblem of the Presbyterian churches of the Reformation—remaining fresh and vigorous under the fires of persecution. Call attention to the fact that God's revelations are made to those who approach them reverently (Ex. iii 5). The Divine is manifested in nature, in man, in the Bible, in Christ, but it only appears to those who draw near with reverent feet. So Mrs. Browning:

"Earth's crammed with heaven,
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes;
The rest sit round it and pick blackberries."

Make the point that this was the very place where God afterwards appeared to Moses in fire and smoke and gave His law. Then draw out the points of the lesson from the class, explain difficulties, and take up the Bible readings, pressing the practical applications of the Sixth Step.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAY 3.

55. The term "Jewish" does not properly describe any except the people of the kingdom of Judah and their descendants. Those of the Northern kingdom and all who lived before the division are properly designated as Israelites or Hebrews. We know no Israelites now who are not Jews because the Ten Tribes were scattered and were either absorbed into Gentile races, or returned in small remnants and became incorporated with the Jews.

56. The Sanhedrim, Ex. xxiv. 1; Num. xi. 16.

57. Haman, Esth. iii. 8, 9, 13.

(We did not intend plotting by open, foreign enemies, but in a parallel situation to the Israelites in Egypt. The question, however, does not make this sufficiently clear, so we count as correct those who answered Balak, (etc.)

NEW QUESTIONS.

61. What N. T. prophet got his training in in the wilderness?
62. What reference does our Lord make to their interview in this lesson?
63. What assertion does our Lord make of Himself that seems to claim a right to the Name here communicated to Moses?

The special of the N. O. Picayune from San Antonio, May 12th, gives an interesting account of the breaking of a long drought in that State: The drought stricken sections of Duval and Zapata counties, where rain had not fallen in four years, was visited yesterday by a heavy rain and the rejoicing among the starving people is being manifested in many remarkable ways. When the rain began falling the people rushed out of their houses at Carrizo and other villages in the affected counties, shouted and cried with joy. Men, women and children marched through the streets singing and praising the Lord for the blessing that had been given them. The drought had caused thousands of head of cattle in Zapata county to die from starvation.

Tip, known as a "rogue" elephant was killed by poison in the Central Park menagerie, New York, last Friday He was induced to eat some balls of wet bran which contained capsules of cyanide of potossium. Almost instantly after swallowing the balls of bran he exhibited uneasiness, trumpeted once or twice, and went into convulsions. He died in twelve minutes after taking the poison. An elephant is never considered safe after he has killed a man, and as a dangerous character is branded as a "rogue" Tip had killed first and last eight men and was presented to Central Park menagerie by Adam Forepaugh because he dared not carry him around with his circus. He was chained tightly by the legs in the menagerie, but lately came near making an end of his keeper and was condemned to die. He was only 33 years old and so had not attained maturity. Several times his tusks had been shortened and several hundred pounds of ivory taken from them. He had been in this country since 1882. He was originally imported from Ceylon for the zoological gardens of the king of Italy.

FOREIGN.

The agricultural districts in Spain have asked the Cortez to permit the free growth of tobacco in that country. They say this will prevent importation of American leaf tobacco.

Baltimore Sun: The minister of foreign affairs of Spain has instructed the minister of colonies to include in the colonial budget the sum of $17,000 in gold, which will be paid as an indemnity to an American Methodist missionary who was unlawfully expelled from the Carolina Islands when Spain annexed that territory.

An important discovery of gold is said to have been made in the State of Guerrero, Mexico. The mines are said to equal in richness those of South Africa.

A vast nihilist conspiracy is said to have been discovered in Petersburg, Russia. One hundred persons have been arrested.

On April 27, 1894, JENNIE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Cuthberson, aged 2 years and 21 days. "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

At Green River, Polk county, N. C, Sunday, Feb. 11th, 1894, Capt. WM. V. SEVIER, aged 57 years.

He was a ruling elder of Sandy Plains church, and will be sadly missed by this little band of Presbyterians. Appropriate memorial services were held May 6th, conducted by Rev. G. A. Hough, assisted by Rev. C. B. Justice. He was married ten years ago to Miss Lizzie Mooney, of South Carolina, and with her, leaves a little boy, to mourn the loss of a devoted husband and father. Truly he "lived not to himself," and has gone to the reward of the faithful.

In Charlotte, N. C., May 11th, 1894, FRANK DEAN, JR., infant son of Rev. D. and Janie A. Hunt, aged 2 month and 20 days. Jesus takes the little lamb to His bosom and His grace sustains the afflicted parents.

In Lincoln county, Mrs. RITTA M. NIXON, on 5th inst., aged 87 years and six months. She was a consistent member of Unity church.

On the 26th of April, 1894, at his residence in Orange county, N. C., Mr. SAMUEL D. BLACKWOOD, in his 58th year. He had been in feeble health for some time past; but until within a few days of his death, his friends did not think his end so near. He had been for many years a professing Christian. He was a sincere, faithful, conscientious man. He was a true friend, a kind neighbor and a devoted husband and father. The sorrow of those who mourn his loss is great; but it is not like that of those who have no hope. C.

On May 10th, in the Oxford Presbyterian church, by Rev. J. Ernest Thacker, Mr. WM. H. BAIN, of Raleigh, N. C., and Miss MARGARET C. HUGHES, of Oxford, N. C.

At the residence of her nephew, Hamilton Erwin, near Morganton, N. C., in the early morning of May 3d, Miss CECILIA MATILDA ERWIN, in the 86th year of her age, greatly beloved by a large circle of relatives and friends. Her death was the result of a severe fall, sustained two or three weeks before. Though so advanced in age and for three years totally blind, Miss Erwin up to the time of the accidental fall had been in excellent health and was conspicuously active for one of her years. She was born May 11th, 1808, at the old Belvidere mansion on John's River in Burke county, the home of her honored father, Col. W. W. Erwin, and lived there all but the last few years of her life. She was one of sixteen children and the last surviving member of the family. She was buried at the old family burial-place at Belvidere in the grave of her twin-brother, A. H. Erwin, with whom she had lived till the time of his death, both unmarried and clinging to each other with the tenderest brotherly and sisterly affection. A large number of sorrowing friends gathered at her burial; the services were conducted by her pastor, and she was laid in her grave by loving hands. The day of her funeral, May 4th, was the 40th anniversary of the marriage of a niece whom she had taken a motherless child in her infancy and reared as her own. This niece became the mother of the nephew who cared for her in her old age and in her blindness. The place and hour of the funeral were the place and hour of the marriage. Many of those present at her grave, weeping with those who wept, had been faithfully taught by her in their childhood in the Sunday-school which she conducted in the neighborhood, and some tearfully and gratefully said: "She taught me to read and gave me my Bible." Her life had been devoted to doing good.

In her girlhood Miss Erwin made profession of faith in Christ at Silver Creek campmeeting (Presbyterian) under the preaching of the Rev. Daniel Lindley (afterwards missionary to Africa) and united with the Presbyterian church at Morganton. At the time of her death she was the oldest member of said church, and will be greatly missed. Her presence and attentive interest were always an inspiration to her pastor. The suffering of the last two weeks was most intense, but she bore it without a murmur. She was heard more than once to whisper the prayer, "Help me, Lord, to see Thy tender mercy in it all," and toward the last, as if the grace she had sought had been given. "My Father I thank Thee for Thy tender mercy and loving kindness."

The following quotation, a newspaper clipping, the words of Dean Stanley as he spoke of death, she had carefully preserved, and how fittingly they describe her own decease: "Then the soul finds itself on the mountain-ridge overlooking the unknown future: one company before is gone; the kinsfolk and friends of many years are passed over the dark river, and we are left alone with God. We know not in the shadow of night who it is that touches us—we feel only that the everlasting Arms are closing us in; the twilight of the morning breaks, we are bid to depart in peace, for by a strength not our own, we have prevailed, and the path is made clear before us!"

"E'en down to old age, all My people shall prove
My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love;
And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

How sweet to her in her blindness the promise now realized! "And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever."

FOR THE FAMILY.

MOTHER'S ROOM.

The core of the house, the dearest place, the one that we all love best,
Holding it close in our heart of hearts, for its comfort and rest,
Is never the place where strangers come, nor yet where friends are met,
Is never the stately drawing room, where our treasured things are set.
O, dearer far, as the time recedes in a dream of colors dim,
Breathing across our stormy woods like the echo of a hymn,
Forever our own, and only ours, and pure as a rose in bloom,
Is the centre and soul of the old home nest, the mother's darling room.
We flew to its arms when we rushed from school, with a thousand things to tell;
Our mother was always waiting there, had the day gone ill or well.
No other pillow was quite so cool, under an aching head,
As soft to our fevered childish cheek, as the pillow on mother's bed.
Sitting so safely at her feet, when the dewy dusk drew nigh,
We watched for the angels to light the lamps in the solemn evening sky.
Tiny hands folded, there we knelt, to lisp the nightly prayer,
Learning to cast on the Loving One early our load of care.
Whatever the world has brought us since, yet, pure as a rose in bloom,
Is the thought we keep of the core of the home, the mother's darling room.

Items for Lady Readers.

The recent marriage of Princess Victoria, of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, to Grand Duke Ernest, of Hesse, places another of Queen Victoria's own blood and immediate posterity on a European throne. She must now accord the equality of a "brother ruler" to two of her grandchildren, Emperor William, of Germany, and Grand Duke Ernest, of Hesse, as well as to her second son, Alfred, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Sovereign rank must also be accorded to her eldest daughter, Empress Frederick, of Germany, mother of Emperor William, and the same royal recognition was due her Majesty's second daughter, the late Grand Duchess Alice, of Hesse, mother of Grand Duke Ernest. The other grandchildren of the Queen, who will, in all probability, inherit or share thrones, are the crown princesses of Greece (Princess Sophia, of Prussia), and Rumania (Princess Marie, of Edinburgh), the Crown Prince of Germany (great-grandchild of the Queen), and the Crown Prince of Coburg-Gotha. To these must now be added Princess Alice, of Hesse, who has become engaged to the heir apparent of Russia. The good old lady of Great Britain can, indeed, be called the mother of kings and queens; and, of course, in the above list must be included England, Ireland, Scotland Canada and Australia's future kings, and India's future emperors, her Majesty's eldest son, the Prince of Wales and her grandson, the Duke of York.—Independent.

MRS. JEANNIE WASHINGTON STORY.

The unveiling of the monument to "Mary, the Mother of Washington," which took place on the 10th of May, will mark an epoch in the efforts of the women of the United States, being, it is said the first monument ever erected by women exclusively to a woman. And when it is remembered that it is the mother of Washington that our brave and patriotic women have chosen to thus honor, the work acquires an historical and memorable signification. It is gratifying to note in connection with this movement the part played by the women of Louisiana in contributing towards this fund. The vice-presidents of the National Mary Washington Association were chosen from all the States in the union—one for each State. It fell to the privilege of Mrs. Jeannie Washington Story, of this city, to represent Louisiana in this representative body of women. Mrs. Story efforts in behalf of the Mary Washington cause is best told in the fact that she was the first woman in the United States to send a large sum to the treasury. Mrs. Dillingham, of Vermont, sent $600, and Mrs. Lewis, of Vermont, sent $600, but Mrs. Storey sent at the start $900, which she collected for the monument fund. In a recent letter received from the secretary of the Monument Association, the following graceful compliment is paid to Mrs. Story, and through her to Louisiana:

"The monument will be unveiled on the 10th of May. I hope, dear Mrs. Story, that you, who have done so much towards its erection, will be present. You were the first to send a large sum of money to the treasury and for nearly a year Louisiana was the banner State of the association."

Mrs. Story, as is well known, is one of our social leaders and a woman of broad intellectual thought. Her beautiful home in St. Bernard parish, which she has gracefully called "Saxenholm," is the ideal plantation mansion of the olden days. The rooms are filled with rare and costly relics and pictures and bric-a-brac, many dating from the colonial epoch, and nothing so pleases the gracious chatelaine as to gather her friends about her and entertain them in the whole-souled hospitality of the good old times. The grounds about are those of the typical plantation era, and the plantation itself is one of the finest in Louisiana. Mrs. Story is a connection of the immortal George Washington, and it was therefore a most graceful tribute that she should have been chosen to represent Louisiana in the National Monument Association, organized to perpetuate the name and memory of his illustrious mother.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

An excellent hair tonic, it is said, is composed of sulphate of quinine, twenty grains; cologne water, two ounces; infusion of sage leaves, two ounces. Rub a little into the scalp every day.

Make a mold of lemon jelly. Cut bananas in slices and line the bottom and sides of the mold. Pour the jelly in slowly, that it may not float the fruit. Set in ice water until hard. If you have no mold, use a round glass dish. Put the sliced bananas on the bottom, and turn in a little jelly; when hard put a row around the sides, with spaces between, and fill the center with bananas; cover with jelly. Reserve a cupful of jelly, and when ready to serve, break this up lightly and scatter it over the top.

Mint sauce for spring lamb is now in season.—Take only the young, tender leaves, not a bit of stem, and chop very fine indeed. To two tablespoonfuls add a tablespoonful and a half of brown sugar and three of vinegar. It should be quite thick, not as we so often see it—vinegar with a few bits of mint floating around.

Ice cream is very delicious when served in meringue shells. These are thus made: Put a pound of loaf sugar and half a pint of cold water over the fire in a thick saucepan; add a third of an even teaspoonful of cream tartar to prevent graining. When a little of the sugar cooled in ice water can be rolled to a little ball in the wet fingers, remove the sauce pan from the fire and let it cool five minutes. Meantime beat the whites of five eggs to a stiff froth, and slowly pour the contents of the saucepan over them, beating the mixture constantly that it may be smooth. Pour on a board covered with buttered paper and set in a cool oven till nearly hard. Then split with a case knife. Each meringue should be large enough to contain sufficient cream for one plate.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work, besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem a most superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A CHILD'S LADDER.

BY M. G. R.

A little boy to his mamma said,
As she was putting him to bed,
"If I should pile up barrels high
Until they reached clear to the sky,
And then, dear mamma, if some time
I should up those barrels climb,
Would God from heaven reach down His hand
And take me into the promised ?"

At such a thought the mother smiled,
But gently said, "Ah ! no, my child !
God tells us 'tis by faith and love
That we must enter heaven above ;
By love to Him, and faith alone
In Jesus Christ His only Son,
Who died to save us from our sin
And make us fit to enter in.

"Jesus has told us o'er and o'er
That He the way is and the door ;
He's the Good Shepherd, we are His sheep,
If we give to Him our hearts to keep ;
But if we try to climb to heaven
In other ways than He has given,
But thieves and robbers we shall be,
And ne'er in bliss His face shall see.
So learn, my boy, the story old,
Of the one shepherd, the one fold ;
How the Shepherd His life lay down,
Wearing meekly the thorny crown.
Listen at once and hear His voice :
It is a wise and happy choice ;
'Twill lead you to the mansions fair ;
And this Good Shepherd will be there.

Making Spring.

"When will the spring come, mamma? I'm so tired of cold and snow and ice. I'm tired of stay in-the-house plays. I'm tired of every thing."

It was Flossy Manning who made this plaint one February day. Flossy was what people called "a delicate child." She was not strong enough to go to school over the half mile of country road with her brothers and sisters; she could not coast, or skate, or play at snow-balling. She went sleigh riding sometimes, wrapped in shawls and rugs till she looked like a big rag baby. But that she considered a rather tame amusement.

"You might play at making spring," said mamma.

"Making spring! Why, I can't make flowers and sunshine and blue sky."

"I thimk you can, dearie. The flowers of love are the most beautiful of all. The sunshine of kindness is the brightest, the warmest of all. Think of some one to whom you can be kind, and see if you do not bring the spring right into this very room."

Flossy's face brightened, She was sitting on a cricket at mamma's side. She leaned her elbow on her knee, put her little hand to her forehead and reflected.

"I was cross to Johnny this morning," she said, after thinking very hard for a minute. "I think I'll be good to him, to make up. I wouldn't let him play with my new ball. I'll tell him when he comes home from school that he may play with it all he likes. And, mamma, don't you think Carrie Hall must be lonesomer than I? Her grandma is deaf, and her mother has to work out all day long."

"I think she must be very lonely," said the lady. "I wonder my little daughter has not thought about it before."

"May I go see her, and take Maude Ellen if I am very careful? I don't b'lieve Carrie ever had such a splendid doll come to visit her."

"Certainly, dear."

"And I will take Minnie and Katie with their little trunk. We will undress them, and play put them to bed. I'm sure that will 'muse Carrie."

So Flossy, well wrapped up, with her dolls and their belongings in a basket, started for Carrie's house. Her face was so bright that anybody could see that the lovely spring had come to her heart.—New York Examiner.

Being Good.

BY REV. DR. JOHN HALL.

"Now, listen, Johnnie. You're talking about the pleasant fellows that you play ball with. I want you to be pleasant, too, and I want you to be good, too."

"All right auntie: just tell me about it. I get my lessons, I never cheat the fellows, and you can ask grand'ma how I do at home."

"Well, now, listen, Johnnie. A boy—we'll call him Frank—finished school and got a place. It was in a big store. There were ever so many girls and men in it, working all day, and sometimes, when not very busy, chatting together pleasantly. Frank was as nice as he could be, civil to everyone and obliging, and they all liked him. The gentleman just over him thought a great deal of him, and gave him a better place. Not one in the big store had a fault to find with Frank. He was a favorite with everybody."

"Did he get more money, auntie?"

"Wait, now, and listen, Johnnie. The man who owned the store never came through it; he had his office on the upper floor, but he gave the money to pay every one, and everything in it was his. Now what do you think Frank did? He got into the way of taking home with him such things as he could put in his pocket. Of course he told nobody in store. And when he got the higher place I told you of, he took away as much as he could of the money; but he did it all secret, and every one about him kept praising him. Now was he good?"

"Why, of course not, auntie. He was a thief."

"But they all liked him, and thought him so nice."

"No matter, auntie, he was stealing."

"Just so, Johnnie; you are quite right. Well, now, listen. This world is a great place, with many thousands in it, and we meet them now and then, and can be nice to them. We don't see the owner of the world, but he owns it all, for he made it. So we call him our Creator, and we owe love and obedience to him. Don't you recollect what you learnt, 'Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth?' Now, Johnnie, if we are kind and nice to all about us, but don't think of and obey and give the Creator what we owe to him, we are just as bad as Frank. Our fellow-creatures like us, as they all liked him, but what about our Creator?"

"And what became of Frank, auntie?"

"Why, the owner of the great store, who got all the accounts, found out who was stealing, and Frank was tried and put in jail as a thief. Do you see it now, Johnnie? To be really good we must not only be nice to our fellow-creatures, we must do right to our Creator. Do you see, Johnnie?"

"Yes, auntie; I see, I see."

"Well, keep it in your mind; fix it in your heart, dear Johnnie. Some time again I may tell you more about it."—Harper's Young People.

A Queer Coach.

Louella Allen lives on a big farm in California. There were some very large squashes on the place, and one of them was so large that her father had it hollowed out to make a Cinderella coach for Louella.

One day while a gentleman from the East was visiting the family, Mr. Allen and Louella and the guest were walking over the place. Louella slipped away and ran to her squash and got inside.

Then, as they walked over the field, Mr. Allen said, "I suppose you would hardly believe that girls would grow in squashers out here; but I shouldn't wonder if you would find one in this big squash."

He tapped the squash, the side fell apart, and out sprang his little girl!

The Eastern gentleman was so astonished that his hair has been white ever since; but I rather think it was white before.

This squash was more than three feet in length.—Sunbeam.

CHAT WITH A VISITOR TO OUR OFFICE.

"What is the ELECTROPOISE that I have heard so much about ?"

"It is a thermo-electric battery, when connected with the body of the patient."

"How does it differ from an ordinary battery or belt? I have tried different kinds and obtained no relief."

"Thermal electricity is generated by the difference in temperature. The ELECTROPOISE is made cold, and the treating plate fastened to the patient, (usually at the ankle on retiring at night) the difference in temperature puts the body in such an electrical condition as to cause the entire surface of the system to absorb oxygen from the atmosphere."

"Why don't the other batteries do the same thing ?"

"Because they give both the positive and negative elements of electricity, while the ELECTROPOISE gives only the positive, and causes the system to attract the negative from the atmosphere, and as oxygen is one of the principal ingredients of air and highly negative in its nature, is is readily attracted through the pores and membranes, coming in direct contact with the impure blood in the veins and capillaries. It partially reoxydizes this blood, builds new tissue, tones and strengthens the entire system, putting every organ of the body in a normal condition."

"Well, with all this what disease will the ELECTROPOISE cure ?"

"It will practically cure all disease where there is vitality to build on. All disease is but a decrease of vitality; for some reason the body fails to absorb sufficient oxygen to keep the system in an electrical 'Poise' or balance; the result is that disease attacks the weakest point, and as it spreads and develops itself, receives different names, but as there is but one cause (decreased vitality) so also need there be but one remedy, increased strength. Oxygen is the greatest enemy of disease, and when applied direct to the cause of the disease may be said to be invincible."

"These are very broad claims you make, and you must know how the public regard a cure-all."

"Yes, we know that, but make no claim we do not substantiate. Where the ELECTROPOISE fails after a fair trial the case is practically incurable."

"What do the physicians say about it ?"

"As a profession they say it is the most gigantic humbug ever sprung on the public. Quite a number of them who have given it any thought or investigation say it is a wonderful instrument, and its field of usefulness is unlimited."

"How do they account for the cures you claim have been wrought by the ELECTROPOISE ?"

"They say they are 'faith cures,' forgetting or not knowing that we cure infants that have no imagination, patients who are delirious, and in some cases where they have been bereft of all reason and were applicants for the insane asylum. Dumb animals are also treated in the same magical why."

"How long will the ELECTROPOISE last, and does it need to to be recharged ?"

"It will last indefinitely, does not need to be recharged, as it does not lose its force; however, the wire inside of cord sometimes wears out and it is a good idea to bring or send it to us about once in six months to be examined, there is no charge for this unless we have to supply new cord or plate, and the charges never exceed seventy-five cents."

"What is the price of the ELECTROPOISE ?"

"The Pocket or portable size $25.00 and $50.00 for the Standard or wall size. The Pocket is cheaper, and for many purposes practically as good."

"The Standard possesses the power to purify the atmosphere in the room, converting oxygen into ozone, this prevents malarial and contagious diseases. Two or more persons can use it at the same time, and the strength of the instrument can be regulated to a nicer degree. For general family use it is far preferable.

"Is not this a high price, and do you not find difficulty in selling them ?"

"No; it is economy to possess an ELECTROPOISE. It saves doctor and drug bills, and if you will take a look at our order book it would not seem that there is a great deal of difficulty in selling them. Our New York office reports the sale of fifty-three instruments one day this week and that they have done better."

"What proof can you give me that I will be benefited by its use ?"

"Just read a few of these letters from the best and most intelligent people all over the country, people you know."

"You can wrap up one for me! I see Rev. ——, Dr.——, Judge—— and many more that I know personally recommend it highly, and the endorsements of such men do certainly carry weight.

THIS WORLD ABUSED.

As much as we are urged to use this world so much are we urged not to abuse it. In a general way we will agree that whatever is lent us or given us for some good is abused when we pervert it to some, specially if it be unworthy, service or association. If a father should give his son a knife, even without instructions that son ought to know it was for use in some good service. If that son, in wilfulness or ignorance, should go through the house cutting the furniture or disfiguring the walls, he could not claim that he was right because the knife was his own. No more may we claim that we have a right to do what we please because our possessions are our own. The implied truth must be acknowledged that what we have as gifts from God is our own to use not to abuse—not to put to some other, specially if injurious, use than that intended. We refer to this subject again and from a negative view because it is of vital importance. It is a matter of our responsibility to God and accountability for the gifts and possessions He has bestowed. We may not dismiss it lightly nor treat it with indifference. Besides it is an abuse of kindness and generosity to abuse gifts. It is of the nature of an insult to the giver. In abusing the good things we have we trample upon the mercy of God and despise His goodness. We do not mean it so, surely.

It is an abuse of this world to receive its good things as if they came by chance—as if the harvests were independent of day and night, sunshine and rain and any personal control of the forces which God has created in maintenance of the laws which He has established, as if life and light and love were mere happenings in the course of time and grace, mercy and peace sprang from machinery self-directed and self-regulated by laws and relations of several parts established, unalterable and uniform, or as if we deserved what we receive and for this or any other persuasion were not sensible of our dependence on God, did not recognize Him as the source of all good and are not thankful for the blessings we receive.

It is abuse of this world to live without regard to the interests and needs of our fellowmen and our ability and opportunity to serve them and without any reference to the right limitations of God's laws upon our getting and holding worldly goods, controlling and administering secular affairs, conducting and managing business concerns, making and executing laws and interpreting or enforcing principles of public responsibility. It is abuse of this world to live for self alone, practically denying our duty to our fellowmen around us and to God above us. A purely selfish life is out of place in this world, out of harmony with the law of God and far away from the blessed example of Him who went about doing good. This is as true in the failure on our part to contribute directly to the general good as in demanding that everything shall minister to our self-interest. It is as much abuse of this world to neglect our duty of helping others as to insist that the world owes us a living and determining to get it by any means, good or bad, without contributing our part for the public good and for helping individuals as their need is. Selfishness is not only degrading all the better elements of our natures, but dragging down from high and noble purposes the multiform agencies and manifold forces created and given from God that the world might be improved while we are made better by their use to honor God and help our fellow-men. It is abuse therefore not only, as we all acknowledge, to injure or destroy any good there is in the world, but, having time and talents, to fail of their use or application to improve the world as we pass through it. There is great need of material improvement in the variety and preparation of food, in the taste and comfort of clothing, in the plans and construction of houses, in the supply and purity of water, in the cheapness and excellence of lights, in the healthfulness and permanence of systems of drainage and sewerage, in the machinery for labor and recreation, in the arts of painting and sculpture, and cultivation of musical talent and refined literary tastes, for the better appeal from brush and chisel and musical instruments to eye and ear and heart. These in continuation with all agencies of every kind, religious or secular, should cultivate the moral sense, and improve the moral tone and strengthen the moral fibre of our generation, and all with the uplift of a spirituality which shall raise the spiritual standard of holy living higher and help our fellow-men up to its height. Any failure to contribute to this is an abuse of this world.

This abuse may come from setting our heart upon this world as a good, sufficient in itself. Indeed the abuse may be in choosing this world and its present advantages or pleasures or occupations as an end to be reached rather than as a means to something better. We may love the world for its own sake, either with miserly greed, grasping everything in reach and holding on to it and rejoicing in it, or getting only to waste with reckless extravagance in selfish indulgence of appetite or passion or lust. This is near of kin to covetousness and from one side or another will lead to or foster base means and crooked methods to secure, or pride, or display, in having, or tyranny, or corruption, or cruelty in administering office, or conducting business, or discharging trusts, or superintending subordinates. It may consist in a real uncharitableness that cloaks a present refusal to give a little under a promise to conscience to give a larger sum later. It is all one with making this world a stage on which to display and seek to satisfy our ambition, vaunt our pride and gratify our lusts. All through this way of living runs self-love and self-seeking which fails to feel our fellows' woes and has no heart to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever.

It is abuse of this world to treat it as a place of permanent abode and ourselves as destined to live here forever. To arouse us from this folly we are told, that the fashion of this world passeth away. The form and appearance of all scenes and all people is continually changing. A little retrospect will convince us if we have passed the meridian of life. The old homestead is not the same, the faces familiar to our youth have passed away, and all the early scenes have changed. If these have changed little we are changed with passing years, and if these abide we must sooner or later leave them all. We are fading as a leaf. By and bye the world shall be burned up and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth. We too will be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump. Seeing then that we change now with passing years and all of us are destined to a glorious change of mortal bodies to be like Christ and with Him forever, what folly to live as though we can live on here forever! To live for self, to have unthankful hearts to make things temporal, essential good and to make no preparation for another world; if these be abuse of this world how much more is it to take anything to harm ourselves or injure our fellow-men or dishonor God.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The trip through the mountains of North Carolina is one to be remembered. The striking beauty of the scenery of the eastern slope, the wide view of the more distant peaks, the sudden glimpses of rushing torrents and narrow gorges, the play of light and shadow upon the hills, the triumphs of the engineer's skill, the slow and toilsome climb, the swift dart through the final tunnel into the light that illumines the western slope, all make distinct impressions upon the memory; while the descent of the French Broad is a long series of varied delightful sensations. And when the river has been left behind and the Great Smokey and the Bald Mountains all growing dim in the hazy distance, and the fertile farms and rolling pastures tell of the Tennessee Blue-grass Region, I think how far I am from the piney-woods and sand-hills of old Fayetteville Presbytery where they raise —— men.

The city of Nashville, where the Assembly meets, claims now a population of 110,000 souls. The Assembly met here in 1867 with Dr. T. V. Moore, as moderator. Two members of that Assembly are commissioners to this, the venerable Dr. H. R. Raymond, of Mississippi, and the retiring moderator, Judge Lapsley, of Alabama. The great majority of them have taken their places—some recently, as Junkin, Smith, Markham—in the "General Assembly * * * * whose names are written in Heaven." But the Assembly that meets to-day represents 200,000 Presbyterians as against the 75,000 of its former meeting here. The stated clerk of the former Assembly, Dr. J. R. Wilson, is with us still, while the permanent clerk, Dr. Brown, has in the last few weeks passed to his reward.

The Moore Memorial church in which the Assembly meets is a monument to the moderator of the Assembly of '67. It is most conveniently arranged for the business of the Assembly, having ten commodious committee-rooms, though the auditorium is rather small. A midday lunch on the grounds greatly facilitate the business of the Assembly and has a home-like suggestion of the country Presbytery. The pastor, Rev. Angus McDonald, D. D., is a son of Fayetteville Presbytery and his features at once betray his kinship to the sturdy Scotch of that section. He is untiring in his efforts to provide for the convenience and comfort of the commissioners, while his broad humor has already made him a welcome interrupter of the more prosaic proceedings of the body. His address of welcome was striking for its cordiality and simplicity and at its close he reminded his brethren that another Guest had been invited to attend the meetings of the Assembly and that wherever there was room for Him in their hearts there He would abide.

The Assembly is composed mainly of middle-aged men, though there are some venerable "brethren" and even boyish looking "fathers." It might be styled a bald-headed body rather than a gray-headed. There are few men of commanding influence. All the more probably perhaps, the question to be decided will be settled on the lines of common sense.

FIRST DAY.

Promptly at eleven o'clock on Thursday morning. Dr. H R. Raymond led the congregation assembled in prayer, and after a hymn, read the second chapter of Isaiah. Judge J. W. Lapsley announced that the opening sermon would be preached by Rev. J. M. P. Otts, D. D., of Talledga, Ala. His text was the continuation of Isaiah 2: 3–4, and Matthew 28: 18–20. The sermon was carefully prepared and read from manuscript, and the main theme, the evangelization of he world under the gospel dispensation, with all the attendant blessings of liberty, peace and happiness was one thoroughly in accord with the belief and principles of our Church. It might be questioned whether the private views of the speaker on the subject of Organic Union, Colored Evangelization and Church Societies would better have been omitted from the authoritative exposition of the pulpit.

A new Presbytery, the Presbytery of Norfolk, was by permission added to the roll and the roll was then called.

Nominations for moderator were then made. Dr. J. R. Graham, of Winchester, Va., Dr. J. W. Rosebro, Dr. George Summey, Dr. Eugene Daniel and Dr. H. B. Boude were nominated. Dr. Rosebro and Dr. Daniel gracefully withdrew their names in favor of Dr. Graham and he was elected on the first ballot. His speech of acceptance was a model. Modest, dignified, concise, and pervaded with a spiritual magnetism that augurs well for successful performance of the arduous duties of the office. After the election of Dr. T. H. Law and Rev. F. H. Webb as reading clerks, the Assembly took a recess until 3: 30 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Dr. George Summey took the moderator's chair during the afternoon and evening session and displayed the eminent qualifications for the office of which his admirers had spoken in the morning. Dr. Hazen read an admirable and business-like report on the Publication work. There seems to be no question as to the fact that he is the right man for the successful conduct and prosecution of this cause.

The report of the Executive Committee of Education is discouraging to say the least. Notwithstanding the reduced amount promised the candidates this year, there is owed to them the sum of $4,356, one-fourth of the amount paid out to them. This deficiency means disappointment and need to men who deserve better treatment by our Church. One resolution of the report is to the effect that no definite sum be promised the candidate. It is to be hoped that the standing committee appointed at this meeting will devise some plan more successful for work for the coming year. The report on Home Missions shows a collection from all sources of $55,840 during the ecclesiastical year. However, since the new plan went into operation the first of January, only $14,879 has been collected.

Something more must be done or we shall be unable to prosecute our frontier work.

The report on Colored Evangelization was heard with marked interest and attention. The report indicates an economical management of funds and shows increasing interest in the cause. The report of the Birmingham Conference was referred to a special committee, with one member from each Synod. The rejection of the report is a foregone conclusion.

The report from the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, is in our judgment the best that has ever been made in our Assembly. A large advance in the acquisition of new territories and the number of workers has been followed by a corresponding increase in the funds for the work. The report is clear and business-like. The good sum of $143,774 has been raised during the year and a balance of $19,158 was reported on hand; a reduction of the expense account by the sum of $4,584 is also to be noted. The committee asks for $155,000 for the coming year. These reports were all referred to committees to be announced tomorrow.

NIGHT SESSION.

An encouraging report from the Assembly's Home and School at Fredericksburg, Va., was read by Rev. J. W. Rosebro, D. D. This enterprise conceived by Rev. A. P. Saunders has touched the heart of the Church. Already an endowment equivalent to $50,000 has been raised. Five orphan children of ministers are already at the school and thirty have applied for positions there next fall. The report was referred to a special committee.

Then the Assembly heard from Rev. R. E. Steele, Chaplain of the Seaman's Bethel of New Orleans, an institution of our Church long associated with the name of Dr. Witherspoon. The report showed an immense amount of good accomplished in simple ways and urged the establishment of such institutions in the other seaport towns within the bounds of our Church.

The Assembly adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock on Friday morning.

SECOND DAY.

The Assembly met according to adjournment. The moderator announced the following Standing Committees.

[The committees are published on our fourth page. The Committee on Colored Evangelization—there omitted—is as follows: Dr. L. H. Blanton, Chairman, Rev. A. J. McKelway, Rev. E. P. Davis, R. H. Alston, (col.,) E. A. Smith, G. W. Watts, L. H. White, A. H. Roller, A. F. Hass.]

Dr. J. R. Wilson, the Stated Clerk, announced that there were more than fifty overtures addressed to the body. He disclaimed any responsibility for their number or length. Among the more important ones may be mentioned, one from the Presbytery of Memphis to institute measures for increasing the Invalid Fund: West Hanover, Louisville, Enoree, Mecklenburg, Charleston, Wilmington, and Bethel with regard to some change in the Church's policy concerning the rules for licensure. It seems safe to predict that some change will be made. The matter was referred to a special committee consisting of one member from each Synod. Overtures from the Presbyteries of Louisiana, Ebenezer, Central Texas and Dallas, with regard to the action taken at the Birmingham Conference were referred to a special committee, one from each Synod. Dr. Daniel is Chairman of the committee.

Albemarle Presbytery and three others united in substantially the same overture with regard to establishing a Bureau of Information that shall put vacant churches in correspondence with ministers seeking a field of labor.

The Presbytery of Holston overtured the Assembly to appoint a committee from our Church to confer with a like committee from the Northern Church on the subject of Organic Union. The overture was referred to a special committee and rests in the safe hands of Drs. Geo. Summey, Eugene Daniel, J. W. Rosebro, Wm. M. McPheeters and others, one from each Synod. Not much debate is expected on this subject.

There was an overture from Athens Presbytery with regard to the evangelization of the Jews.

There were two overtures from the Synod of North Carolina. One with reference to our correspondence with the Waldensian Church, the other asking whether a minister is transferred from one Presbytery to another when his field is transferred. Your correspondent was called upon to explain the facts in the case and when it was learned that there was no possible objection to the brother whose case was the occasion of the overture, one of the committee expressed his opinion of the quandary in which they were placed by saying that we had "dug a hole, built a bridge across it and crossed the bridge before we ever came to it." The answer will sustain the action of the Synod.

There was a tossing of heads and a bristling of manes when the Presbytery of Augusta asked a question concerning its relation to Dr. Woodrow. He had never returned to them the letter of dismission rejected by the Presbytery of Charleston. But Charleston Presbytery again comes to the front in the appeal from the Synod of South Carolina with regard to the Means Case. It is impossible to forecast the issue of this case. Regret is expressed everywhere that the matter was brought before the Assembly, but "a great deal can be said on both sides" and beyond doubt will be.

The Committee on Devotional Exercises had asked for an hour during the morning session for public worship. Rev. Egbert Smith will preach to-morrow morning.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

This was occupied with the reception of various communications which will be noticed in their proper time. Encouraging reports were received from the Seminaries of the Church: Union, Columbia, Louisville and the Theological Department of the Southwestern Presbyterian University. There was no report from the school at Austin. Assembly took a recess after a brief session.

NIGHT SESSION.

The order of the day, the hearing of the report from the Committee on the Assembly's Home and School, was taken up, Dr. Rosebro presiding. The report was a revelation to many. The history of this institution which bids fair to become one of the most important of our Church is in brief as follows: The ladies' of Fredericksburg, Va., conceived the idea of building an orphanage as a memorial to Mary the mother of Washington.

It was partially successful during the period of prosperity before the war, having some thirty orphans under its care. Its operation was discontinued after the war, but there remained a commodious building and an endowment of about $10,000. About two years ago Rev. A. P. Saunders, one of our missionaries to Greece, returned home having failed in health. He was called to the pastorate of the Fredericksburg church. Burning with a desire to aid his brethren in the foreign field, where his heart still was, he conceived the idea of founding a home for their children. The ladies of the Mary Washington Association promised to turn over their property to him if the Synod of Virginia would guarantee its being used in the education of orphan children. But the enterprise soon grew too large for Synodical lines and so the institution was placed under the care of the General Assembly at the last meeting. It has three definite objects: First, to care for and educate the children of foreign missionaries who must be sent from the degrading influences of heathenism to be educated in this country. Second, to do the same thing for the orphans of deceased ministers at home or abroad. Third, to provide a training school for those who intend to engage in mission work. An additional scheme already partially in operation is to have a caretaker for the children and the widows of ministers and missionaries, thus providing a home for them and securing faithful and loving service. The school happens to be situated in a region destitute of higher educational advantages and is already admirably equipped with distinguished teachers and is self-sustaining. The Church is asked for permanent and cash endowments for the support of the Church's children—$1,000 as a permanent endowment or $60 a year as a cash endowment will support one of these children. Dr. Daniel introduced a series of resolutions, praising the school and commending it to the care and interest of our ministers and churches, and made a stirring and eloquent address. He was followed by Rev. Theron Rice, Dr. Yerger, Dr. Converse, Dr. Chester, Mr. Neel, Mr. Saunders, Ex-Governor Marye, Mr. McPheeters and Dr. Howison. The latter introduced himself as the professor of History in the school and incidentally demonstrated the historical fact of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence.

After the announcement for the supply of the churches in Nashville, and vicinity, in which nearly every minister of the Assembly is to preach, the Assembly adjourned with prayer by Dr. Rosebro.

WILL.

O well for him whose will is strong!
He suffers, but he will not suffer long;
He suffers, but he cannot suffer wrong.
For him nor moves the loud world's random mock,
Nor all calamity's hugest waves confound;
Who seems a promontory of rock
That, compassed round with turbulent sound,
In middle ocean meets the surging shock,
Tempest-buffeted, citadel-crowned.

But ill for him who, bettering not with time,
Corrupts the strength of heaven descended will,
And ever weaker grows thro' acted crime,
Or seeming genial venial fault
Recurring and suggesting still!
He seems as one whose footsteps halt,
Toiling in immeasurable sand,
And o'er a weary, sultry land,
Far beneath a blazing vault,
Sown in a wrinkle of the monstrous hill,
The city sparkles like a grain of salt.

ARE RELIGIOUS FORMS ENTIRELY UNIMPORTANT?

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It is customary to speak of "mere externalism" very contemptuously, in comparison with what are called "essentials." Yet, to borrow a homely illustration, a snail's shell is very necessary to protect it from dangers which would quickly destroy its little life. The shell contains no vital organ; it has neither brains, nor heart, nor lungs, but these and all the other vital organs, depend for their preservation upon this hard and unlovely covering.

We all know that true vital religion does not depend upon forms and ceremonies. In fact, many theologians seem to think they are hindrances rather than helps, in the strait and narrow road which leads to life eternal. The distinguished historian, Francis Parkman, in describing the conversion of whole Indian tribes by the French Jesuits, says "they taught them a creed which they could not understand; and rites which they only substituted for the pagan, superstitions which they gave up." And this misunderstood creed and these superstitions rites left them in as savage a state as before; still murderous, treacherous and dishonest. The English settlers of the North suffering cruelly by the inroads of these so called Christian Indians decided to send Protestant missionaries to try to convert them to a purer faith. But these English preachers could not stand living with the filthy savages who never washed their hands or their cooking vessels; in fact who never used water at all for cleansing purposes; and so they gave it up. They were either less zealous or more cleanly than the Jesuit missionaries and health failed in the Indian surroundings. We cannot say however, that the Jesuits did any good work, as no semblance of the Christian religion remained to show what they had accomplished. But it leads us to think that the rites of the Mohammedans, would have done more to civilize these poor savages than the rites of Romanism. The latter is a corrupted form of the religion of Christ; the former contains much of the shell which the primitive church used to shield her faith from heathen inroads.

Mohamets' friend and instructor was Bahyra, a Jewish Christian. And it is curious to note that what the followers of Islam claim, at this very day, as the four great pillars of their system, are all borrowed from the Jewish Christians. These four great pillars we call mere forms and yet they are forms which take hold upon the human heart, and make their disciples love their faith from generation to generation and once learned, are rarely relinquished. The Mohametans say then that these four pillars are, "Prayer, fasting, cleanliness and almsgiving. The poor Indians who knew not the uses of water, would have been greatly improved by the Moslem's daily ablutions. Max Muller says this widespread religion requires "one complete and four partial ablutions every day." The Essenes, the purest sect of the Jews requires the same. Any one who reads the laws of Moses, can see that only by these repeated baptisms, can they avoid the uncleanness which is so minutely prohibited by the law. Modern science confirms the wisdom of these laws; and modern customs of refined life puts them into practice. The English gentleman of the most refined class, takes his complete ablution every morning and his partial ablutions—washing of face and hands—at least four times a day. So modern custom and modern science agree on this ancient teaching. What the Moslem calls fasting (the second pillar of his religion) we call in general terms self-sacrifice—or taking up the Christian's Cross. His third pillar alms-giving, we calls Christian charity. Had the Jesuits taught the Indians the daily habit of bathing—the daily habit of alms-giving—if it were only to bestow upon some desolate child a wild dove's egg or a bunch of wild strawberries; and the daily habit of acknowledging God's sovereignty and goodness in prayer; and the daily abstinence from some selfish indulgence—they would have risen at once in the scale of moral worth and civilizations—although all these forms or rites may be called mere externals. They are forms which exalt, refine and purify. They take hold upon the human heart, and are all of divine origin. Tis true the Moslem does not always practice what he preaches; neither, for that matter, does the Christian. But we still have the impression that forms may, like the snail's shell, protect the human soul from many dangers. The primitive Christians, (if we may believe nearly all learned Christian writers,) were mostly Jewish Christians. Bahyra taught Mohamet his religion as he believed it. But he failed to teach him faith in Christ. St Paul said, "A man is not justified by the law except by the faith of Jesus Christ." Mohamet, however, by teaching the externals of the true religion won over the Asiatic Christians to his faith—and hating image worship—succeeding in winning many Jews.

NARRATIVE OF THE STATE OF RELIGION

In Mecklenburg Presbytery. Adopted at the Late Meeting at Lincolnton, N. C., and Forwarded to the General Assembly at Nashville.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg would respectfully submit to the General Assembly the following narrative of the state of religion within its bounds.

This narrative is based upon reports from fifty-four churches. Its representatives are therefore drawn from a portion of the churches of the Presbytery; and is necessarily an inadequate report of the state of religion in our entire bounds.

The failure of twenty-eight sessions to send up any narrative from the churches under them will indicate great negligence on the part of these official bodies or a very low condition of life in the field, not reported. From reports in hand, we learn the following:

1. That pastors and officers report with great modesty and reticence upon their fidelity to the discharge of their duties, but the indications are that our officers are faithful, and while there is a place for greater earnestness yet on the whole they are overseers attentive to the work entrusted to them.

2. The services are attended with increasing interest. Some churches report congregations unusually full and none seem to be declining in this important matter.

3. While most of our churches report no special presence of the Holy Spirit, yet the spiritual condition of the congregations seems to be one of general improvement, additions in every church with one or two exceptions, show that the Spirit has blessed the word to the edification of his people and to the conversion of sinners. It is a subject of rejoicing that some of our congregations have experienced rich blessing and all in every way revived and strengthened.

4. This general improvement in the spiritual tone of our people has manifested itself in greater activity in church work. Reports from Sunday-schools show large interest and faithful teaching of the truth from the Bible direct or from the catechisms of the church. We are willing to speak thus cheeringly, but we do not forget the many churches who report neglect and unfaithfulness. There are some of this kind, yet there is undoubtedly a general and most encouraging activity in all branches of ecclesiastical enterprise.

5. The old story concerning family worship and home training of children, must be told again. A sad neglect of these important exercises exists. This is the uniform report of all the churches. No improvement is noted. No remedy is suggested, but the reluctant confession of all narratives indicates that the conditions are grievous and call for earnest attention.

6. We are pleased to report that the Sabbath is still reverenced by our people and there is no visible decline in the spirit of the proper observance of the holy day. Complaint of laxness comes from some fields, but the general tone of the papers indicate a conservatism that holds faithfully to the religious sanctity of the Sabbath.

7. Owing to the general financial depression it is difficult to discover the true state of benevolence among our people. There is a decline in the amount of contributions, and complaint is made of this in many cases, but how far this is due to unavoidable strain and inability, we cannot say. We are reluctant to think that the deficit is due to other cause than the financial state of the country.*

8. Those vices and amusements which have been proved to be so hurtful to the spiritual life of the church do not prevail in the majority of our congregations, and in a very few alone to any extent.

9. We are sorry to report that twenty-one of our churches failed to pay their pastors' salaries in full. Most of the amounts due are small and will doubtless be paid in a short time.

By order of Presbytery April 12, 1894.

Attest:

R. Z. JOHNSTON,
Stated Clerk.

*Reports from churches received after this narrative was adopted give a more encouraging view of the financial condition of our churches than item 7 gives. The statistical report of Presbytery shows an increase of $8,889 in the benevolent contributions of our churches.

Love Obeys.

It is in the sanctification of the affections that we find the power that leads to obedience. A man will always follow his affections. It may be either an upward or downward path, but he will go if his heart is leading. So when a man is saved God puts a new affection in his heart, and just so far as this is on the throne will the life be one of consecration to God's servies. But what is this affection?

1. It is love to God himself, to God as a person, to God as lawgiver and king. And this love will, of necessity, lead the believer to desire to please, to honor, and obey the Father.

2. It is also to love men. I can no more love God without loving my brother man than I can have one side of my hand without the other. And this love will not allow me to sin against my fellows. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" between man and man.

3. It is love to goodness for its own sake. There is a natural affinity between Christian love and every form of moral and spiritual goodness. Goodness charms the heart that loves the Holy One.

4. And it is hard to sin. Sin is the natural antipathy of sanctified affection as water is the natural antipathy of fire.

And thus with the affections purified the man is lifted above sin, finding obedience a joy to the spirit even when it is a cross to the flesh—Sunday School Times.

The Gift of Gifts.

BY THE REV. R. TAYLOR, D. D.

We call to mind an aged man whom we knew in days long past as he came with trembling steps to the house of God. He was poor as to the things of this world but rich in faith. He had an only son who had worked his way through college into the ministry. As a scholar he stood so high that he was chosen a professor in his alma mater. There he might have led an easy, quiet life and been of great service to his parents in their declining days. But there came a call for him to go to heathen lands. His father was asked if he could consent to have him go. And what was his reply? "God gave his only Son to come from heaven for me and shall I not give mine to go to the heathen for Him?" And that answer, as we remember, is cut in the marble that stands at the head of this father's grave that it may preach to all who visit that spot till the marble itself shall decay. Of all which that dear man of God could do for the cause of Christ, or any other cause, was not that the gift of gifts?

And so of the offering that Abraham made when he bound his son Isaac and laid him upon the altar. And so of the offerings which many a father and mother made when they gave their sons and daughters to go to the heathen in those days when they could hardly expect to see them again, or their sons to the war. What greater offering could those parents make who had already laid themselves upon the altar?

But these all, great as they were, fade away to things of naught along side of that gift of God through which we have eternal life—Jesus Christ our Lord. That was such as God only could give—infinitely beyond the reach of man. Then as the patriot esteems those who gave themselves, or their sons, to the war, as the Christian esteems those who gave their children or themselves to go the most distant and trying fields of labor, among the heathen, so should every one to whom the gospel comes esteem, not only this gift of gifts as he esteems no other, but the giver too and so much the more than he esteems all others as this gift is greater than theirs. Hence no language can express the tender, high and holy regard we ought to have for him who gave his Son and for that Son who gave himself to die for our sins. How poor the return we make though we lead lives of supreme devotion to him.

—Mid-Continent.

Overcoming Dislikes.

One evidence of a Christian's progress is the growing consciousness that he is overcoming his natural dislikes. If a professed Christian continue to maintain a sharp attitude toward the things which he has always disliked, he may decide for himself, without aid from any one else, that he is quite mistaken in supposing that he is indeed a Christian. And this standard of judgment is embodied in these words: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." This means that the man who proposes to love God and yet hatefully dislikes his brother is really not a Christian. He does not in any true way, in any Christian way, seek to overcome his natural dislike of his brother, and hence he proves himself to be destitute of the love of God. Now, just as surely as the love of Christ is directly and vehemently opposed to sin's hatefulness, just so surely does that love in a Christian heart seek to overcome the natural dislikes of the old man. We have a very beautiful illustration of success in one's overcoming his natural dislikes in the case of the lamented A. M. Mackay, missionary to Uganda, of whom this is said: "Mackay's love for his black converts was very touching. How eagerly, eloquently, vehemently, he would plead their almost hopeless cause! Yet, strange to say, he told me that at one time he had an almost uncontrollable aversion to black people; yet a childlike sense of duty had enabled him to overcome his dislike." This man had a noble apprehension of his Christian duty, and the duty performed ripened into a choice privilege. Moreover, the very effort made in overcoming that dislike enlarged his capacity to grapple with other dislikes and convert them into loving likes. Such a man is a progressive conqueror, a victor whose rewards, even in this life, are greater than those which come to military heroes. Let us overcome our dislikes and make them the servitors of our better natures, the ministers of the highest Christian manhood.—Northern Christian Advocate.

MAGAZINES.

The Century Magazine for May appears in an interesting serial descriptive of a bicycle journey through the Asiatic continent. Its monthly contribution to art literature is a pleasing feature. Mark Twain's serial is continued. Much could be said of the entire contents, but for want of space. Illustrations and varied articles make it exceedingly attractive. Published by The Century Co., Union Square, New York.

The Ladies' Home Journal presents a singularly attractive array of pleasing articles. Every department is well filled and worth many times its price, ten cents a number or one dollar a year. The Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

The Golden Jubilee number of the North Carolina University Magazine for March-April is before us—a double number. It would be hard indeed to produce a capital number if this is not one. The articles are exceedingly appropriate; "The Magazine for Fifty Years;" "The University for Fifty Years," and "The University of To-day"—both with admirable likenesses of members of the Faculties and others and fine views of the university buildings and grounds. These articles we say are exceedingly appropriate to a jubilee number, but there are other articles of merit, of course. Altogether the magazine is highly creditable to the great institution it represents. Price 50 cents.

BOOKS.

H. Clay Trumbull has prepared a new book entitled "Studies in Oriental Social Life," to be issued about the first of June.

The basis of this book is a series of lectures on "Oriental Social Life," delivered by Dr. Trumbull before the University of Pennsylvania and Yale University, and received with special interest in both cases. These lectures are on Betrothals and Weddings in the East, Hospitality in the East, and Funerals and Mourning in the East. To these are added various topical studies of Oriental ideas and customs, such as Prayers and Praying in the East, Calls for Healing in the East, The Primitive Idea of "The Way," The Oriental Idea of "Father,' The Samaritan Passover, Lessons of the Wilderness, etc. Taken together, these chapters cover nearly the whole social life of the East, and furnish a key to the social environment of the Bible story. Nor are they without their bearings on many matters now in controversy among biblical critics. While the various topics of this book are prssented in the light of careful study, they are treated popularly. Hence the work will have value alike to scholars, on the one hand, and to general readers on the other. It is very different from a mere book of travels in the East, or from a miscellaneous collection of Oriental illustrations, while it has the advantages of both, and more. Topical and Scriptural Indexes render it available for use in Bible study generally. The book is a large octavo, containing about 430 pages, with some thirty illustrations, and will be handsomely bound. Price, $2.50.

Joanna.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

This lady was a Jewess. Her name is the feminine of Johanan, or John and means "Jehovah's gift." Luke tells us in the eighth chapter of his gospel that she was the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and that she was one of the woman who ministered to Jesus of their substance. We are told also that she was one of the women who went to the sepulcher, on the first day of the week, early in the morning, with spices to anoint the body of our Lord, Luke xxiv. 10. Nothing more is said about this woman, though she was probably with Mary the mother of Jesus and his brethren in the upper room at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. See Acts i. 14.

In reading these brief statements we are led to ask. How did the wife of Herod's steward become a follower of Jesus? The king, or rather tetrarch, whom Chuza served, was one of the worst men of his day. He married Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. He beheaded John the Baptist to gratify his guilty paramour. Was Herod's steward like himself? His steward was his treasurer, and he would secure an honest one if possible. He would rather trust a pious man than a skeptic and a sensualist. Every reader of the Old Testament knows that Ahab, the worst of all the kings of Israel had for "the governor of his house," my namesake Obadiah, "who feared the Lord greatly," 1 Kings xviii. 3.

There is plausibility in the suggestion that Chuza was the "nobleman" spoken of in John iv. 45 whose son Jesus healed. The word translated nobleman is literally "a king's man," an officer of the court, and would be specially appropriate to the steward of the royal household. Chusa and his wife belonged, it may be, to that class in Israel who waited for the coming of the Messiah, who had been interested in the preaching of John the Baptist and who, when Jesus began to teach and work miracles hoped that he was the promised one. Animated by this hope the steward went to Cana and brought our Lord to come and heal his child. And when his request was granted, we are told that "he believed, and his whole house." No wonder then that Joanna ministered to Jesus of her substance, and that she was one of the women who attended him not only to show her gratitude, but to hear his words.

This company of female disciples, who stood by the cross while Jesus suffered, who watched to see where he was buried, who were at the tomb before daylight Sunday morning, and received the angelic announcement of the resurrection, marked a new era in the progress of humanity. They composed the first Woman's Christian Association. They stood in the forefront of that grand movement which is so marked a feature in the religious activities of to-day. It is stated by Luke that some of those women had been delivered by our Lord from bodily and mental sufferings. They were prompted, primarily by gratitude. But soon no doubt, they became interested in the truth he taught. They loved to sit at his feet, like Mary of Bethany, and learn of him all about that wondrous love which he came to reveal in his teachings and his life.

And the Christian women of to-day have caught the spirit of Joanna, Susanna, and the Marys of the days of the incarnation. Grateful to Christ for all that he has done for them and for their sex, they come together in their Woman's Associations and Boards to learn how they can most acceptably minister to him, what they can do for their sisters who are yet in bondage, and for the poor and suffering whom their Lord sends to them in his name.

When I read what Luke tells us about Joanna, I can not help thinking of what Matthew tells us about Herodias. She was Herod's wife, while Joanna was the wife of his steward. They were therefore in the same circle. The tetrarch's steward was a member of his court, as the prime minister is of any royal court to-day. But what a contrast between those two women! Herodias lived for this world. She was vain and proud and selfish. She left her husband because she was wooed by his brother who was richer and more powerful, and when John the Baptist denounced her marriage as incestuous, she asked for his gory head on a charger, i. e., a platter, a dinner-dish; for on it she would feast her "eyes full of adultery." We can well imagine what Herodias thought of Joanna, and how scornfully she talked to the ladies of her court about the steward's wife, who was always sending delicacies from her table to that low-born street preacher, and running over to Cana and other places to listen to his harangues, associating with Mary the carpenter's wife, that crazy Mary Magdalene, and the Galilean fishermen.

Our queens of society are far superior to Herodias in many respects. None of them could enjoy the sight of a gory head on one of their silver platters. And yet, do they not feel and talk about the Joannas of to-day as the tetrarch's wife felt and talked about the wife of her husband's steward? Are there not ladies in Chicago who despise the "holy women" who meet at room 48 McCormick Block to talk about and pray for the heathen, and such cranky philanthropists as Miss Addams of the Hull House in that city? But the modern Joannas will stand with their elder sister, white-robed and golden-crowned for ages, after all the pomp and glory of the earth has passed away.

The Joanna of Luke's gospel was the wife of a steward, and no doubt she exerted in many ways a salutary influence over her husband. If Chuza had married a woman like Herodias he would not have been as honest and upright in office as he was. But every modern Joanna's husband is a steward, a steward of the Lord. His wealth and his talents are not his own. They are given to him for service in order that he may be useful in his day and generation. And who can tell how great is the influence of a wife upon her husband's character, how much she can do in a quiet, loving way to help him to be true to humanity and to God?

Luke tells us that Joanna was in Jerusalem when Jesus was crucified, and a careless reader of Luke's gospel might infer that she went tramping up from Galilee with the carpenter and the fishermen. But we read in the twenty-third chapter that Herod was in Jerusalem at the time. He called himself a Jew, and went up to attend the Passover. His steward went with him. Joanna accompanied her husband. But when in the Holy City she did not spend her time with the ladies of the court, but sought out her old friends and the friends of her Lord, so that she was with them near the cross on Friday, and at the tomb on Sunday morning.

Herodias and Salome were beautiful, but was Joanna? We can not think of her as possessing such charms as would please King Herod and his courtiers, But she had that purer kind of loveliness which irradiates every form in which truth, purity and goodness abide. As an old English poet saith:

—Her pure and eloquent blood
Spake in her cheeks, and so distinctly wrought,
That one would almost say, her body thought.

Steele, in the Spectator, calls the women who try to make themselves beautiful by the use of figments and cosmetics, Picts—painted savages. But the woman who cultivates beauty of character, becomes transfigured by the outbeaming of the inner radiance.

Her face shines because her soul is aglow. Such no doubt was the beauty of Mary the mother of Jesus, of Mary the sister of Lazarus, and of all those noble women who were the disciples of our Lord. And such may be the beauty of the Christian women of to-day, a beauty that shall not fade but brighten ever until she is "changed into the image, from glory to glory."—Interior.

The Balance of Life.

One of the most striking phenomena in nature is the wonderful system by which the balance of life is duly maintained. The ruling idea seems to be this: the subordination of all to a great controlling force, which gives to each form of life its place, and gives it, in that place, certain instincts, pleasures, duties, and destinies.

When one looks into the records of all these phenomena, it seems like reading the pages of romance. Whole broods of insects seem called into being to be the means of fructifying trees and flowers and smiling fields. Without them barrenness would result. And, though the insects may not have any conception of their high mission, yet out of their humble, transient lives, come forces which are necessary in nature.

Similar influences may be observed in all forms of organic life. Kind acts on kind, species on species—here it is to preserve life, there it is to destroy it when its work is done; but everywhere one may notice the wise effort which nature makes to preserve what is called the Balance of Life.

If all forms of life were imbued with the idea that they were each equally important, and those of humbler destiny refused to do their tasks, but aspired constantly to the higher position of those who seemed more noble, what a confusion in nature would ensue! It would be worse than the revolution among our human members, of which St. Paul speaks. It would plunge all into a present chaos. But such rebellion, fortunately, is not possible in animal or vegetable life; or in the chemical compounds of earth and air of fire and heat, of light and darkness; each and all are constant in their peculiar spheres; and never cease in their labors, to praise God and magnify him forever.

Now this law of the Balance of Life, which prevails in nature, and this subordination of all to a supreme controlling force, powerful as God, and as irresistible as fate, must have its counterpart in human affairs. It is obvious that men are under the laws which govern the material world, and, although they are set therein to rule it and to use it, yet they themselves are subject to its laws and must, if they are truly wise, obey them. They cannot break the laws of biology at their will; nature instantly punishes them if they dare to do so. Men are constantly tempted to assert their wills against every law of health and life, but stern order holds them in check and smites them with death if they persist in their madness.

As man is tempted to disobey the physical laws of life, so is he tempted to ignore its order and its stern laws of subordination, and the sacrifice of the many for the few. He strives to blot out of his vision such a law as this, and the self-willed cry goes forth that all men are equal, and that none are separated by Almighty God for higher destiny, or for lower toil. The whole drift of so-called modern progress is to emphasize the fallacy that the same possible destiny is for all men, the same pleasures, the same advantages, the same duties, the same responsibilities. It is utterly unscientific to imagine so; it is dangerous and misleading to teach such doctrine; it is not found in the Word of God; it is not in accordance with the order of the Church. No, the very words of St. Paul hint the truth, though spoken in another connection, for philosophy and experience will ever say, "Every man in his own order."

The present madness of the people, their discontent, their restlessness, their threats of social revolution, all is the result of the forgetfulness of this order. Sad it is to see poverty and suffering, idleness and starvation, but it is a sadder sight to see armies of misguided men rushing on to the ends of horrid possibility, all the result of ignoring those laws of being which prevail in human affairs, precisely as in the lower forms of organic life.

Some men are born to rule, some to serve, some men can never be anything else but "hewers of wood and drawers of water," some men must absorb into their more potent lives the labor and the fruit of thousands. It ever was so, it ever must be so. Into this condition of irresistible law comes the ameliorating influence of Christ. As Moses stood before the contending Israelites, so does he ever stand amid the necessary conflicts of our being, and say to those who must engage in that tragic conflict: "Sirs, ye are brethren;" and so divine compassion goes about among men, healing the wounded, building up the broken-hearted, loosing those who are bound, and comforting all who labor and are heavy laden.

This is legitimate, this is in accord with the mysterious law of sacrifice and suffering which we see about us in nature, this is acting in accordance with the divine law of the subordination of all to that controlling power which in nature and in man ever strives to maintain the Balance of Life.—The Churchman.

Early Rising.

More nonsense is talked about getting up early than probably on any other subject. The proper time to get up is when the sleeper is rested—neither before nor after.

There is no more virtue in the air between 6 and 8 than between 8 and 10 a m. Of course if anyone goes to bed at half-past nine at night, he does not want to rise so late as half-past nine the next day. Eight hours' sleep is, as a rule, sufficient even for the hardest worker.

If people went to bed shortly after sunset, they would naturally get up early; but it is a great question whether they would feel any better for the feat of commencing the toil of the day before, as Lamb says, "the world is really warmed."

Wise people tell us that so much sleep before midnight is worth double the quantity afterward; yet this maxim is merely due to the fact that, to the ordinary man, sitting up till twelve means over-fatigue, needing consequently more rest next day.

The safest sleeping rules are to leave the bedroom window open two inches at the top in mild weather, for the purpose of ventilation, and to get up as soon as the first good wake comes.

After from six to eight hours' rest the average man and woman becomes restless. The brain regains its energy, sleep is broken, and for all practical purposes the night's rest is over. This is the time to rise, and for a man to take, if he can stand it, a cold bath, commencing the work of the world again with the finest and healthiest stimulant which he can enjoy.

The Bitter Fruit.

In the days of King Solomon there lived among the Jews a wise man named Lokman. Many stories are told about him and various fables and parables are said to have been written by him. He was a native of Ethiopia; and, after being a slave in many countries, he was finally sold among the Israelites. Some suppose him to have been the same with Æsop, and all agree in saying that he was a truly good man, "remarkable for the love of God, and reverence of His holy name."

"Always speak the truth without disguise," said he. "Strictly keep your promises;" and, "Do not meddle with what does not concern you."

Good advice, certainly; but what I want to tell, particularly, is the following incident; His master once gave him a very bitter kind of melon, called the coloquintida; he ate it without making wry faces or speaking a word.

"How was it possible for you to swallow so nauseous a fruit?" asked the master.

Lokman answered: "I have received so many sweets from you, that it is not wonderful I should have swallowed the only bitter fruit you ever gave me."

The master was so much charmed with this reply that he gave Lokman his liberty.

The beautiful answer teaches us a lesson.

We take the pleasing gifts from our Heavenly Father with a smiling face: but when he sees best, for our good, to send us something we do not like, our countenance falls, and, even if we do not speak, our sullen discontent is apparent to all. Let us remember that God's way is always the best.

Don't Be Too Critical.

Whatever you do, never set up for a critic. I do not mean a newspaper one, but in private life, in the domestic circle. If you don't like any one's nose, or object to any one's chin, don't put your feelings into words. If any one's manners don't please you, remember your own. People are not all made to suit one taste; recollect that. Take things as you find them, unless you can alter them for the better. Continual fault finding, continual criticism of the conduct of this one and the speech of that one, and the dress of the other, will make home the unhappiest place under the sun.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address:

Rev. R. L. McNair, from Hampden Sidney, Va., to Banner's Elk, Watauga county, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Monument to Rev. D. B. Black:—Rev. A. D. McClure writes: A friend from Pike church has sent me the first cash instalment of the proposed fund to erect a monument over the grave of Rev. D. B. Black. The amount is seventeen dollars. If others have collected or propose to raise or give anything to this fund please inform me. The other churches so long and faithfully served by Bro. Black, and individuals, will surely wish to contribute to this fund.

St. Andrew's Church:—At the monthly business meeting of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip in St. Andrew's church last week reports on personal work showed a steady increase of the attendance of young men on the church services and great interest in the men's meeting every Sabbath morning at ten o'clock for study of our Confession of Faith and Catechisms. It appeared that the church notices and invitations had been appreciated by strangers and had been sent to pastors in different places. Among these were churches in Boston, New York and Liverpool, England.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Kinston:—Communion services were held in the Opera House on Sunday, 13th inst., with Rev. C G. Vardell assisting. One elder, Mr. H. H. Wilson, and three deacons, Messrs. S. B. Claytor, M. H. Wooten and W. H. Hickson, were ordained and installed. Six members have lately been added to our number of communicants. This little vine of God's planting has been steadily growing. It is our ardent hope to begin building very soon. But it will be a great tax on this little church, even with the help we have received already. We expect to begin building, but we are not able to finish with our own means. Those who desire the Presbyterian cause to succeed in Eastern N. C., can help it on by helping us. This is a Home Mission field that cannot long remain dependent, when we once have a church in Kinston. W.

Installation at Rutherfordton:—The Presbytery of Mecklenburg installed Rev. G. A. Hough pastor for half his time at Rutherfordton on 17th of May, he having been installed at Little Brittain a few months ago for half his time. Bro. Hough now belongs to two churches which have long claimed one pastor, and who will work as their missionary in Rutherford county. May it be a long and successful pastorate!

In the afternoon reports from various seminaries were received—all showing a prosperous condition of affairs.

A committee on Young People's Societies was announced.

The report of the Committee on Licensure was presented, showing a prevailing sentiment that unauthorized and illegal preaching should not be permitted, and that there should be some change. Licensure should be at an early date in the theological course. Candidates would have much desired practice before ordination. The period should be reduced to four years of six months terms. If the change is deemed inexpedient candidates should be strictly enjoined from preaching until licensed. The reception of a candidate is now practically a license to preach. The report is signed by E. M. Green, J. H. McNeilly and W. R. Dobbins.

On motion the moderator appointed a committee, to be composed of one from each Synod, to consider the question of licensure of candidates as follows: Rev. T.E. Converse, D. D., Rev. W. W. Elwang, Rev. H. R. Raymond, Rev. J.M.P. Otts, Rev.G.T. Story. and Elders F. F. McCutcheon, F. S. McPheeters, W. M. Hall, T. E. Hastings, S. P. Waite and W. C. Clayton.

THIRD DAY.

Saturday, May 19th.

The Assembly adopted the report of the committee on the Birmingham Conference which report commends the diligence of the committee and rejoices in the fraternity and mutual confidence manifested by the members, but moves rejection on the simple, but insuperable ground that the Church does not approve of the plan.

Rev. Dr. C. A. Tron, of the Waldensian church, was heard with great pleasure in regard to his people.

A telegram from the Northern Church was received announcing the appointment of a committee of nine to confer with a similar committee of the Southern Church looking to Organic Union.

[EDITORIAL.]

HERE AND THERE.

THE REPORTS of the Assembly gathered from the unusually good reports of the Nashville American and Nashville Banner were in print or largely so when the report from our correspondent reached us. Our readers will approve our giving the latter, though the freshness and liveliness with which they present the business of the Assembly renders the other report in great measure superfluous.

The publication of this correspondence, too, let us say incidentally, will readily excuse the omissions of other matter usually given.

OUR SPACE is necessarily so largely taken up with our own Assembly and its proceedings that we cannot spare space for notes of the Northern Assembly. That body met and was treated to a genuine surprise in the vote for moderator. It looked at first very like the Briggites and their sympathizers might have the Assembly. However, Dr. MUTCHMORE, thoroughly conservative, and well qualified otherwise for the position was chosen. His principal opponent was Dr. BROWN, who had been a pupil of Dr. HENRY P. SMITH, whose trial for heresy comes before the Assembly on appeal.

PERHAPS the large vote for Dr. BROWN was partly by conservatives voting under misinformation or misapprehension, but his followers are said to be mostly young men and a painful fear can hardly be dismissed that these broadviewed young men will in time rule the Church. The truth may as well be looked squarely in the face that ministers who do not regard the Scriptures as fully inspired, or as the sole authority for faith and conduct are in the Northern Church, and will through the action of some Presbyteries increase in numbers within the Church so that in time, our sister Church will be honeycombed with this heresy.

THE ONLY alternative—by which the purity of the Church can be preserved is to compel these people to leave. There never was a notion more absurd than that union necessarily is strength. Separation here would be strength, as always where association is discordant.

UNDER THESE circumstances it seems to us little short of direst infatuation that urges some persons to desire the Southern Church absorbed in this cauldron seething with discord and confusion. They seem utterly carried away with the mere barren sentiment that because on some subjects we agree, therefore in spite of warring elements we ought to associate. However, let us leave the question for the future.

WE ARE glad to see that the State Board of Charities deprecate public executions. We have heretofore called attention to the unseemliness of the State affording opportunities, for those who delight in witnessing the agonies of their fellows, to gloat their eyes upon one doomed to death by legal means The result is only evil, in hardening those disposed to criminal practices, and we trust steps will be taken before our Legislature to remove from North Carolina the disgrace of allowing public executions.

"For ways that are dark
And tricks that are vain
The heathen Chinee is peculiar."

The first law requiring the Chinese in this country to register was entirely inoperative—theChinese just simply would not register. Under the present law they have gone into registering with a vengeance, and it is now said the registrations out number the Chinese residents. The Baltimore Sun explains it thus: "The trouble is, it is said, that the wily Chinaman has registered over and over again in order to get extra certificates to sell to such of his compatriots in China as propose to emigrate to this fair land of freedom. It is charged that they organized a registration business, providing professional witnesses to accompany traveling Chinamen and swear to their identity in a number of cities. Another explanation of the full registration is that a great many Chinese have smuggled themselves into the country since the census year."

THE Independent says: "It is said that Abd-ur-Rahman, the Emir of Afghanistan, has sent an extremely valuable copy of the Koran to a city in Persia. It is in a casket of gold and silver, whose carvings are said to be of great beauty. The Koran is written on parchment and was copied by a famous Marabut, an ascetic who enjoys great reverence as a saint in Afghanistan. The bearers of the book were received with great pomp by the Governor of Khorasan, who, with a numerous suite, met them at the Persian border and escorted them to the holy city. The book, which is valued at $125,000, was placed in the mosque with appropriate ceremonies.

IN THE late Methodist Triennial Conference these sound views were announced:

"It is not amiss to repeat what has often been declared—that our Church is strictly a religious and in no wise a political body. Our sole business is to preach and serve the kingdom of God. There are many questions, economical, social, and in part ethical, of burning interest in this day, which our pulpit and churches may be tempted to substitute for the simple Gospel. Men claiming to be advanced thinkers and wide-awake philanthropists may sneer at us as unpractical dreamers and devotees of shadows and abstractions because we give ourselves wholly to things spiritual and eternal. But Christ is the Rock, and only those who build on Him build safely. The more closely we keep ourselves to the one work of testifying to all men repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, the better shall we promote the highest good of our country and race. As a Church we are not related by affiliation or antagonism to any political party. As a citizen, every man should carry his judgment and conscience into politics and all other spheres of life.

HERE IS something good of its kind from the United Presbyterian:

There are probably as many Methodist voters in this country as there are Roman Catholic. We believe there are more, as many of the Roman Catholics are aliens, and nearly all Methodists are citizens. And yet, we venture to say, there are fifty Roman Catholics in public office for one Methodist. The departments at Washington are full of Catholics. The municipal government of most of our large cities, as New York and Chicago, are controlled by them.

How are we to account for their prominence in political affairs? Are they "born rulers?" Have they superior intelligence? or has the South of Ireland some special adaptedness for producing statemen?

The true explanation is this: the Roman Catholic Church has gone into politics. It is the most powerful political machine in the country. It is unitedly seeking the political promotion of its members. If the Methodist Church should seek political control as the Roman Catholic does, it would secure it. If it was universally understood and agreed that Bishop Newman, for example, or some other prominent bishop, should have absolute control of the Methodist vote with the view of using it in the political preferment of the members, we would undoubtedly have more Methodists in office and not so many Roman Catholics. But neither the Methodist Church nor any other Protestant denomination has gone into politics as a Church. They do not propose to do so. They have a higher mission in the world.

The Roman Catholic Church is controlling the voters of its own faith, in fact, has control of the saloon for political purposes, as the great majority of saloon keepers, so far as they have church attachments belong to that Church.

Abolish the saloon and you destroy one great source of Catholic wealth and political power.

WE CERTAINLY are under great obligations for a copy of Princeton Theological Seminary General Catalogue. It comes down to and includes the class of 1893 and is simply invaluable as a historical record.

PULPIT ELOCUTION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

During my recent visit to Durham to take part in the installation of Bro. Turnbull as pastor of our church there, I was the guest of Mr. Geo. W. Watts, in his beautiful home where I was charmingly entertained for the two brief and pleasant days spent in Durham. While there, I was interested in the perusal of a weekly paper which Bro. Watts takes called "The Lutheran World," of date May 3d, 1894. One article especially attracted me, entitled "Pulpit Elocution," and I heartily wish that the views expressed in that paper could be republished in all our Church papers, and read and reread, and that all our candidates for the gospel ministry and all who give instrucrion to our young men in our schools and colleges and theological seminaries might "read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them."

The article above referred to, begins thus: "A writer in this week's World, under the caption "A Scriptural Teacher of Pulpit Eloquence," Neh. 8:1-8, laments the lack of good and competent readers in many pulpits of the present day. The lament is in place Who does not deprecate the blind, lame and halt reading of Scripture and hymns that are often heard from the sacred desk—the reading that by its awkward inflection, its inappropriate modulation, its false and misleading emphasis, mars the native force and beauty of the Word, that is so fatal to sustained and interested attention, so offensive to refined taste, and that so detracts from the beauty and power of the entire service?"

How sadly true all this is! How often are the Scriptures and the hymns read in tones that are flat, unsympathetic, dry, nasal and unnatural, sometimes so halting and uncertain, as if the reader were reading the chapters or the stanzas for the very first time and under a dim and insufficient light. We would not wish to be misunderstood as if we were advocating the poses and tones of the artificial and crack-brained elocutionist, whose style and mannerisms are both amusing and ridiculous. The article from which I quote, expresses well and forcibly what is so desirable and needed, and often wanting, "plain, dignified, manly, effective reading, suitable alike for the cultured and refined, and for the illiterate and coarse. Such reading as where a man stands erect and does not lounge; where he speaks out in clear, honest, virile tones, and does not piously and nasally whine, as if he were reading a death-warrant in prison, in full view of the scaffold; where, by modulation and inflection, he conveys intelligently the thought he would present, and where, by a judicious and graceful adaptation of tone to sentiment, he reads with becoming discrimination."

When we occupy the pulpit, when we read the word of God, or the psalms and hymns and spiritual songs that embody and express the tenderest emotions of the heart, when we preach to the congregation in all these exercises there is something more to accomplish than merely to make ourselves understood. If the minister feels aright, he wishes in every part of the service to impress the thought he utters upon the listening mind; he aims or ought to aim at persuasion. It is one thing to make one's self clear; it is another to convince and move. No one is "thoroughly furnished" until he understands the principles of correct reading and speaking and can apply them himself as he reads or speaks to his fellow men. Our Seminaries ought to pay far more attention to this matter than they do. The writer from whom I have quoted, closes his article by saying: "The rich laymen who will endow a chair of Sacred Oratory in our Seminary, will do more by that act for the honor of the church, the efficiency of the ministry and the glory of God than they now perhaps think."

This topic seems to be awakening at this time a general interest. In a special copy of the "New York Observer," of May 10th, sent to my son Egbert W. Smith, it appears that Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, spoke freely to his brethren of the ministry recently, in his address before the Protestant Episcopal Convention, and urged the necessity of a study of elocution on the part of the clergy. "He did not expect to effect a change in those whose habits are formed and hardened—but he hoped to rouse the younger clergy and the students of the ministry to the supreme importance of a simple, natural and reverent rendering of the service." He denounced artificial culture and untrue methods—but he thought the evil of no culture at all and of no methods was worse. There are speakers whose habits and mannerism and unconscious faults in public speech belie their character and cause them to express very different shades of meaning than is their intention."

A chapter properly and distinctly read, or a hymn is often more effective than many a sermon. A minister once preached a sermon on Christ as our substitute, and as he closed his sermon he read the 64th hymn, of our "Psalms and Hymns," and as he left the house and was standing in the vestibule, an intelligent Christian lady came up and thanked him with unusual feeling and emphasis for his two sermons that morning. At first the minister thought, she meant to intimate that he worked up two sermons into one, but she soon relieved him; as she said: "Oh that hymn, as you read it to-day was a precious sermon and I thank you for it. It never seemed so beautiful and expressive—it was the second sermon."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., May 16th, 1894.

When the Indian appropriation bill was reported to the House of Representatives many people were surprised and not a few alarmed, at the manner in which the recommendations of the Indian Bureau had been cut in the name of economy. It is said by those familiar with the subject that great inconvenience and may be serious trouble will be the inevitable result if the amounts appropriated are not increased. No one who has taken the trouble to make an intelligent investigation of the Indian schools maintained by the government can be found who will deny that they are doing much good. That the good that they are doing was not appreciated by those who constructed this appropriation bill is shown by the cutting of $273,000 from the estimates of what was needed for the schools. This cut, if the bill is not amended, will necessitate the abandonment of nearly all of what are known as "contract" schools. An estimate of $85,000 to send Indians to industrial, mechanical, agricultural and other schools in various States is entirely ignored by the bill. In this connection it may be stated that one of the heaviest guns of those opposed to educating the Indians was spiked by the official denial of the statement made before the House Committee that "Apache Kid," the notorious outlaw, was an educated Indian. He never was in school a day, and he learned what English he speaks while serving as a government scout. The educational feature of the bill is not the only one that is criticized. Representative Wilson, of Washington, says the cut of 35,000 in the amount for the Apache Indians will necessitate a reduction of 1,000,000 pounds of beef and 30,000 pounds of flour, which he fears may lead to trouble. A strong effort will be made to get the appropriations increased, and, as a majority of people believe the Indians should be justly dealt with, it is likely to succeed.

The celebration of the fifth anniversary of the Epworth League was the largest event of the week in Church circles. Five years old and a membership of more than 600,000. No wonder the leaguers are proud of the record. It it something to be proud of. For the especial benefit of your Epworthian readers and as a matter of interest to everybody I

Second Quarter.—Lesson X.

June 3.—The Passover Instituted.

Exodus xii. 1-14. Commit vss. 13, 14.

Golden Text.—Christ our passover is sacrificed for us. 1 Cor. v. 7.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Between the last lesson and this occurs one of those long gaps that constitute the most unsatisfactory feature of the International Lessons. It is necessary to fill it by as careful a study of the intervening history as you can make. Chapter iv. tells of Moses' obedience and his acceptance by the people; chapter v. of his first appearance before Pharoah and its consequences in increased hardships to the people, and their consequent murmurings against Moses. Then follows the long struggle of about ten months in which God executed judgment against Egypt and its gods, poured contempt upon its superstitions, and humbled its pride, until Pharaoh who at first refused a reasonable request was fain to beseech Israel to depart altogether. We entirely miss the significance of these transactions, if we have no knowledge of Egypt and its idolatries. The ureaus, or poisonous asp, was the symbol of Pharaoh's power of life and death. It is a part of the royal diadem in all the pictures, But God turns a dead stick in Moses hand into a living ureaus, and at his touch the deadly serpent becomes again a harmless stick. The juggleries by which the priesthood deluded the people are speedily brought into contempt by their failure even to imitate—as they did at first—the wonders of Moses. The Nile which was not only the source of all prosperity but was worshipped as a god, the Pharoah himself officiating as priest in the biennial festival, becomes a fountain of corruption. Seti I. the grandfather of the present Pharoah (Menephtah) is represented offering divine honors to a frog, but at Moses' command the frogs, living, fill the land with loathsomeness, and, dead, with stench. The very dust of Egypt was considered sacred, but now it brings forth noisome insects or breaks forth in boils on man and beast. The beetle was their most precious symbol of immortality but the beetle in swarms (not flies, as in the A. V.) becomes a grievous plague. Their cattle was sacred and worshipped with great honor, but it is smitten with boil and murrain. Ordinary plagues such as a visitation of locusts, and periods of darkness from the storms of sand that still sweep over the land, were immensely magnified, and came and went at Moses' command, proclaiming Jehovah "God in the midst of the land" and not merely the "God of the Hebrews." This last plague of darkness also struck at the greatest of their gods the Sun, whose offspring the Pharaoh's pretended to be. It was made more significant by the Israelites having light in their dwellings. This almost broke down the pride of Pharaoh's stubborn heart. But he had resisted so long that now God has given him up to stubbornness as the penalty of his stubbornness. He makes new conditions that show continued distrust of God and of Moses His servant. He breaks off all dealings with Moses. Moses confirms the breach by announcing the last plague, and withdraws with solemn warnings. (Read chapters vi-xi). Here the lesson begins.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson narrative: the birthday of the nation vss. 1, 2; the selection of the lamb, vss. 3-5; the lamb slain, vs. 6; the blood sprinkled, vs. 7; as a protection to the house, vss. 12, 13; the flesh eaten, and how, vss. 8-10; readiness for departure, vs. 11; the feast perpetuated, vs. 14.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points needing explanation;

Vs. 2. This month, i. e., the month Abib, called by the later Hebrews Nisan. It is the first month of Spring, beginning with the new moon after the vernal equinox.

The beginning of months, i. e., the first month of the year. The Hebrews began their civil year in the Fall, but the ecclesiastical or religious year began with the month Nisan according to this command.

Vs. 3. A lamb for a house. This greatest of feasts was a family feast. The household, not the individual is the unit of the Church.

Vs. 4. According to the number. Josephus says that ten was considered the least number and twenty the greatest that could sit down to the paschal feast. Our Lord and His Apostles made thirteen.

Vs. 5. Without blemish, because it was a type of Christ (Golden Text), and because all our offerings to God must be of our best.

A male, as taking the place of the firstborn son.

Of the first year, literally, "a son of a year," which is the Hebrew idiom for, "one year old." The lamb was then in its full maturity and prime.

Vs. 6. The fourteenth day—the full moon.

The whole assembly. The killing was a solemn act done in the presence of the whole congregation. Subsequently the lambs were brought to the priests at the door of the tabernacle or temple and slain by them.

In the evening, literally, "between the evenings," a Hebrew expression for between 3 o'clock and 6 in the afternoon.

Vs. 7. Ye shall take of the blood, etc., explained in vs. 13. In later times it was sprinkled upon the Altar. In either case it marks the lamb as redemptive.

Vs. 8. Unleavened bread. See 1 Cor. v. 6-8. In the commemorative feast they were commanded to use unleavened bread for the seven days following in memory of the haste of their departure, (vss. 34, 39).

Vs. 9. Not raw nor sodden but roast. Raw it was unfit for food; sodden, its juices were lost. Roasted, all its virtues were preserved. His head, etc. It was to be roasted whole, not a bone of it broken (vs. 46), because of its typical character. John xix. 33-36.

Vs. 10. Nothing of it remain. Because it was wholly devoted to the Lord.

Vs. 11. These were directions for this feast, and were not required in the permanent, memorial feast. Their attitude indicated their belief in the approaching deliverance, and readiness to obey the command to depart when it came.

Vs. 13. A token. God reads the heart, why does he need an outward sign who are His? Because it tests their faith and obedience, and vindicates the difference that He makes.

Vs. 14. An ordinance forever. When the typical character of the Passover is fulfilled in Christ, the Lord's Supper perpetuates it "till He comes" (1 Cor. xi. 26), and then His people shall sit down at the marriage Supper of the Lamb (Rev. xix. 9).

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with ours.

SUMMARY.—When God was about to bring Israel of Egypt, He commemorated the birth of nation by making that month the beginning of the year, and ordaining a feast to be eaten the night of their redemption as an act of faith, and afterwards as a grateful memorial. On the tenth of the month a lamb or kid, one year old, a male without blemish, was to be selected for each household or two or more small households, and kept up until the fourteenth day when it was to be slain in the presence of assembly between 3 and 6 p. m. That night it was to be roasted whole and eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, and those who eat it should be all prepared for the journey. The blood was to be sprinkled on the lintel and door posts to mark the true Israelites while the destroying angel went through to slay the firstborn of Egypt.

Fifth Step. Study the principle topic in the light of God's Word.

The Passover and the Lord's Supper.

The lamb slain, vs. 6; 1 Cor. v. 7 (last clause); xi. 23, 24.

The blood of remission, vs. 13; 1 Cor. xi. 25; Matt. xxvi. 28.

The unleavened bread, vss. 8, 15; 1 Cor. v. 7, 8.

The bitter herbs, vs. 8; 1 Cor. xi. 27, 28, Matt xxvi. 21, 22.

A memorial, vss. 14, 25-27, 42; Luke xxiii. 19, (last clause).

Nourishment, vss. 4, 9; John vi. 51.

Communion (with one another). vs. 3, 4, 46; 1 Cor. x. 16, 17.

Testimony of faith in the promised redemption, vs. 11; 1 Cor. xi. 26.

Separation from the world; vss. 12, 13; 1 Cor. x. 20, 21; 2 Cor. vi. 14-18.

Consecration for service, vs. 11; John xiii. 4, 12-15.

Sixth Step. The lessons of faith and obedience are the main practical teachings of this lesson. God has provided redemption. Have we accepted it? He has revealed the Lamb that taketh away sin (John i. 29; 1 Pet. i. 18-20). Is His blood sprinkled on our hearts (Heb. x. 22)?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

After reviewing rapidly the intervening history, give a clear view of the situation as described in the "First Step" of the study. Show the necessity of this last judgment upon Egypt to procure Israel's release. Show the benefit to Israel in being called upon to separate themselves by an act of faith. Draw out the elements of the obedience and faith required and take up the Bible Reading. Older scholars might well study out in a Bible Dictionary or other work the way in which the Passover was celebrated by the Jews in the time of Christ. Show that as celebrated by the Jews now without the sacrifice of a lamb and without faith in Christ as the Lamb of God, it is emptied of its meaning.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rains now abundant after the long drought in the Greensboro section and everything is lovely.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

A correspondent writes from Fayetteville 17th.:

After a long dry spell, we have seasonable rains and the farmers are in better spirits. A few strawberrys, but other fruits and berries very scarce.

The Commencement Exercises of Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C., begin on Friday, May the 25th, and continue through Tuesday, May 29th. The Baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. A. J McKelway, of Fayetteville, N. C., and the address on Monday delivered by Rev. Robert Caldwell, of Winston.

The State Medical Society of North Carolina last week made several new doctors among them three ladies. Dr. Annie Alexander, of Charlotte, read a paper before the society, on the "Physical Training of Girls." A request was made for its publication.

Weldon News: The Great Falls Water Power Company turned on a full headway of water last Friday to test the banks of their canal. The works stood the test all right and the great volume of water rushed through the gates with mighty power. The canal is four miles west of Weldon, is two miles long, one hundred feet wide and fifteen feet deep, and is a magnificent water power.

Dunn Times: As far as have been able to learn, the crops throughout Harnett and adjoining counties are in a flourishing condition. We have learned also that notwithstanding the large amount of commercial fertilizers purchased through this section this spring, the cotton crop is reduced by at least one third of former years.

Red Springs Scotch Scion: They say one of our sawmill men begins the operations of each day by calling all hands together and having prayer just after the whistle blows in the morning.

Charlotte News: Mr. J. B. Hartman is a farmer and a horse jockey, living on the Kennedy farm to the west of the city. Something was the matter with his horses and he was advised to feed them with lime. He accordingly mixed a liberal quantity of lime with their food, and since then Dr. Smith, the veterinary surgeon. has been busy at work on Mr. Hartman's stock. The horses may live, but it will be some time before they have an appetite for lime or anything else.

Rockingham Spirit of the South: An epidemic of typhoid fever in the city is threatened. Several cases have already occurred, and the health officers are on the alert to discover the cause.

Raleigh Press: Treasurer Tate informs us that there are still about $1,000,000 old N. C., bonds unfunded. This would be equivalent to an issue of $300,000 of consols under the act to compromise the State debt.

Concord Standard: Mr. John R. Bradford's father, who is now 86 years of age, does not use any glasses at all. He can see the finest print in any newspaper.

Charlotte News: The stand of cotton is said to be very imperfect, especially on red lands. Many farmers are plowing up and planting over. This seems to be especially the case in the southern part of the county. The cotton that has sprouted has a very healthy looking growth.

A storm last Friday gave the people of Augusta a terrible fright, causing them to leave their houses for the street and blowing down some frame buildings, but no lives were lost.

The Commonwealers have had a hard time. Smallpox broke out among them at Toledo, O. In California they raided fruit farms driving out the Chinese and Japanese laborers. The whole crowd, about 150, were arrested and placed in custody.

Coxey and Browne of the Commonwealers around Washington were sentenced on Monday last for violating the laws of the District of Columbia, to twenty days imprisonment and a fine of $5 each. Jones was sentenced twenty days imprisonment. They were sent off in the patrol wagon handcuffed.

In Lumberton, on Wednesday, the 9th, inst., SALLIE NEILL, daughter of Nannie H. and C. B. Skipper, aged three months and nine days.

"Like snow that falls upon the river,
A moment white then gone forever."

Our little cherub was loaned us for a short season, and then the Lord carried her away in His arms to that kingdom, the subjects of which are composed of "the little children." Though the departure of our little Sadie from earth left no perceptible gap unfilled in society, the circle of which she was the comfort, the sunshine, and the joy, miss her and mourn for her at morn, at noon and at night, and while we know that our darling passed through the pearly gates, which opened wide at her approach, and she was welcomed with joy by the "Angels who stand around the throne," and by "our loved ones who have gone before," and is now in the bosom of that dear Saviour who has promised to carry the lambs in His arms, and though the most tender and sensitive cords of our hearts have been painfully snapped asunder, and our family circle now broken, can never be made whole on earth, in giving up our Sadie, we must obey that command of the Master, who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Farewell little darling, we have parted, but for a season; therefore,

"Firm my fort, for well I know
The goal cannot be far
And ever through yon rifted cloud,
Shines out one steady star;
For when my guide went up
He left those pearly gates ajar."

THE DAY'S WORK.

Do thy day's work, my dear,
Though fast and dark the clouds are drifting near,
Though time has little left for hope and very much for fear.

Do thy day's work though now
The hand must falter and the head must bow,
And far above the failing foot shows the bold mountain brow.

Yet there is left for us,
Who on the valley's verge stand trembling thus,
A light that lies far in the West, soft, faint, but luminous.

We can give kindly speech,
And ready helping hands to all and each,
And patience, to the young around, by smiling silence teach.

We can give gentle thought,
And charity, by life's long lesson taught,
And wisdom, from old faults lived down, by toil and failure wrought.

We can give love, unmarred
By selfish snatch of happiness, unjarred
By the keen aims of power or joy that make youth cold and hard.

And if gay hearts reject
The gifts we hold—would fain fare on unchecked
On the bright roads that scarcely yield all that young eyes expect—

Why do thy day's work still,
The calm, deep founts of love are slow to chill;
And heaven may yet the harvest yield, the work-worn hands to fill.

Items for Lady Readers.

Very handsome lamp shades may be made at home, and most women have found out that the fragile-looking crepe paper, so silk-like and lustrous in texture, is remarkably durable, and those who do not care for the countless pretty trifles now fashioned from it favor the pretty lamp shades. The large shades of yellow and white which look like mammoth jonquils are simplicity itself to make and retain their freshness through two seasons, while a delicate silk shade fades before one season is over. A roll of yellow crepe paper nineteen inches deep and one of white the same depth may be obtained at any fancy goods store. Take two yards and a half of three-inch wide yellow ribbon, satin preferable, and a brass wire frame, and you have all the necessary materials. Lay the two papers together, using the white for the underside, and place them over the brass frame; with a strong wire fasten the paper tightly to the little brass ring at the top of the frame, setting the gathers evenly round it, leaving about seven inches of paper to flare up above the ring; curve up the yellow paper at intervals round the bottom leaving the white to show, and finally tie the ribbon over the wire in two long looped bows and buds, and you have as handsome a lamp shade as may be purchased at the dealers.

Blessed is the plant lover that can count among her possessions an old sewing machine. Mine was gathering dust and cobwebs in the garret, when the happy thought suggested itself to make it into a plant stand. The top works and large wheel underneath were soon taken away, and here was a strong, pretty-looking table on iron legs with casters, the last being invaluable on zero nights to wheel my establishment nearer the stove. A box was made, six inches high and somewhat larger than the stand. This was half filled with sand. Here I learned a florist's secret. You notice they put their pots on sand or soft earth and not on a dry shelf or table, as we amateurs generally do. So my geraniums and other plants were put down on the sand, and the air was kept moist, as plants like to have it. Trandescantia was stuck in around the pots, making a shaded carpet. The old-fashioned green Wandering Jew has gone out, and lovely colored leaves takes its place—striped, silvered, pink, white, gray, bright as flowers. My stand was a grand success all winter, and I hope to get hold of another old sewing machine to make a fernery for my north window. In the summer it will be moved to the piazza, and I can have a geranium in bloom, or some other pot plant, and it will be a grand place for the chrysanthemums later. If I want stands or vases for my plants, I am pretty sure to find some discarded thing in garret or cellar that answers the purpose.

Things Useful.

Sprinkle the inside of damp gloves with violet powder.

When you are hurried and a postage stamp will not stick, moisten it and run it on the flap of an envelop, and then quickly put it in its place.

To make peach cream, boil a pint of canned peaches with a coffeecupful of sugar; strain them through a sieve or colander, then add half a package of dissolved gelatin and a cup of cream. Stir well, and when nearly cool add a pint of whipped cream; beat all together and pour into a mold.

How to make shortcake, to one orange allow two bananas. Peel and slice the bananas very thin; grate the rind of the orange, and then peel and take out the pulp. Mix with the fruit a cup of sugar and the grated rind. Make a rich biscuit dough, bake in a thin sheet: when done split and butter it, spread over it the fruit mixture, and serve with whipped cream.

Love Puffs.—To the yolks of eight eggs add one pound of the best pulverized sugar, and beat very light. Flavor highly with vanilla. Take colored paper and cut round pieces about twelve inches in circumference, then crimp each piece all round with a penknife, and it assumes a cup shape. Then shape it with the fingers so it will set flat. Fill each of these cups half full of the batter, and bake in the slowest of slow ovens. If there is a warmer to your stove they can be cooked in that. They are served in the paper cups piled up in a stand. Use several different colors for the cups. Nice with ice-cream.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A MAY-DAY SONG.

Now the wild birds' music fills the wood,
And we, with garlands gay,
Will go tripping and singing—singing,
To welcome in the May.
Merrily, merrily, merrily we
Join with the birds in their May-day glee,
And Spring a sweeter song ne'er heard,
Than flows from the heart of child and bird
Merry May, Merry May!
Oh! the gladdest month, we children say,
Is merry, merry May!

—Beth Gray, in Our Little Men and Women.

A Democratic Aristocrat.

There has been so much criticism adverse to the Prince of Wales lately in circulation that the following anecdote, showing a pleasanter side, is worth repeating. It was related to the writer last summer by a friend, and can vouch for its accuracy, barring a change in the name of the chief actor.

"It was in the autumn of '72," said my friend, "that I was on my way home from Europe by one of the old Cunarders. We had a dreadful passage, and, being the only lady who was not seasick, I had the exclusive attention of most of the well passengers. Among them was a small boy, who was one of the plainest little mortals that I have ever beheld, red haired and freckled, but with a bright, sharp little face like a terrier.

"My attention was first called to him by noticing his intimacy with an English baronet abroad who seemed to derive the keenest delight from his conversation, and was constantly being reduced to a helpless condition from laughter at the remarks of his small friend. In the course of time, he drifted into my vicinity and opened conversation.

"'Ever seen the Prince of Wales?' he said.

"'Yes,' I answered, 'I have seen him.'

"'Nice man, very. Nice in his own house. I like him very much.'

"'O, don't talk that way, Jack,' I exclaimed. 'That's silly.'

"'But I mean it,' he persisted; 'I know him. I've dined at his house.'

"'How was that?'

"'Well, you see, it was when we were travelin' in Italy. I was puttin' my head out of the car window, and I saw two boys puttin' their heads out, and I says "Hello!" and they said "Hello!" back again, and I says, "Come in here; there's lots of room," and they said, "No, we can't, but there's room in here, and when the train stops you come in here with us." So, when the train stopped, I asked pa, and he said I could go, and I got in their carriage. And I asked them what their names, and one said, "I'm Prince Albert Victor of Wales," and the other said, "And I'm Prince George, his brother."'

"'And what did you do then?'

"'Why, I says, "Whee—ew, is that who you are? "Well, I'm Jack Post, of New York."

"'They were real nice fellows, and we were having a splendid time when the cars stopped, and their pa got out of the next carriage and came to speak to us, and then my pa saw it was the Prince of Wales. So he got out himself and told him that he didn't know who they were or he wouldn't have let me go, and he was going to take me away, but the Prince of Wales said, "No," he was glad to have his boys meet a little American boy, and he would be much obliged if he would let me stay all day. So I stayed. We played games, and their pa told us first-rate stories; and when we had to change cars he took me back and asked my pa to let them know when I was in London, because he would like me to come dinner with them. Pa said it was an "opportunity," so just as soon as I got back to London I wrote a note.'

"'What did you say?' I asked.

"'O! I said, "Dear Princes, I've come. I'm here at the Langham. I can come around just as soon as you want me.'

"'Well, it hadn't hardly had time to get there when a gentleman came back with an invitation for me to come and take dinner with them in the middle of the next day. When I got there, they were waiting at the window. It was an awful nice house. Their ma came in and shook hands, and we had our dinner. Didn't think much of the things they had to eat. I'd have given them lots more if they'd come to dinner with me in New York.' But they treated me just fine, and their ma was an awful pretty lady.'"—Christian Union.

The Little Runaways.

Winnie and Marion were running away. They had good reasons, they thought. Had they not been called in from an archery match with the boys to mind baby? And then, had they not been scolded for being cross to him? A few muttered whisperings while the little fellow was falling asleep had decided it all.

"I wish we had thought to put some crackers in our pockets before we started," said Marion, before they were out of sight of the house. "I begin to feel hungry already."

"Oh, we'll find berries and things in the woods," said Winnie brightly. The day was beautiful, and she began to think running away good fun.

"Berries, Winnie?" queried Marion, the doubter. "I looked all over the strawberry patch yesterday, and not one was ripe. And what other things are there in the woods that are good to eat?"

"Well, there's"—Winnie had to pause, "There's birch bark for one the—chewing-birch, you know."

"Oh, yes, so there is," asserted Marion, reassured. She was fond of chewing-birch.

"And sour sorrel," Winnie proceeded, "and grape tendrils and young raspberry shoots. Why, if it comes to the worst, we needn't starve where there are dandelion leaves."

They had reached the foot of the hill now, and a swampy piece of ground to be crossed. This gave opportunity for what they called "navigation," a pastime of which they were fond, but one which always resulted in wet feet. A little shriek soon announced that in jumping from one island to another—the small clumps of grass were "islands" to these young navigators—Marion had miscalculated her distance, and was standing ankle deep in water. Winnie had to change her course and go to the rescue, and in reaching out to help Winnie to dry land she also got one foot into the water. Such adventures made the delight and excitement of navigating. In the pasture was a high and dry ridge of land, and when they got this far they sat down, took off their boots and stockings, and spread them out in the sun to dry.

"It seems a long time since we left home," said Marion. "I suppose it's about lunch time."

"They won't be thinking much of lunch," said Winnie, a note of triumph in her voice. "They will be searching everywhere for us by this time, and they will almost have given up hope of ever seeing us again. They'll wish they had been better to us."

"Shouldn't wonder if Jack was sorry for calling me a crybaby yesterday, reflected Marion.

"I wish I had written a will," said Winnie, turning the stockings, "and left my 'Robinson Crusoe' to Maurice. He always said that Aunt Eleanor should have given it to him, because it wasn't a book for a girl."

"Are they nearly dry yet?" asked Marion. "I'd like to go on and find some chewing-birch. I wish we had put some crackers in our pockets. I'll never run away again without something to eat."

"Are you very hungry, dear?" asked Winnie, pityingly. "Well, these are as dry and warm as toast, now. Put them on and we'll go and look for berries. I know the earliest spot in the whole place for them. I never told anyone before, because I like to get the first one for mamma myself. You shall have all that we find; so cheer up."

Boots and stockings on, Winnie led the way to a little knoll around an old stump. Here a diligent search began, and for ten minutes not a word was said.

"I'm afraid there are none," Marion said at last, but next minute gave a little cry of delight. "Oh, here's a great, great big one, red as fire. Look, Winnie! Let us hurry and bring it to mamma."

"What a beauty!" exclaimed Winnie. "Come on-"

The first strawberry was the great event of each season, and, in the excitement of the moment, they forgot that it was not to seek it they had started out that morning. They were half way across the swamp before their original purpose came to mind again. Winnie was selecting an island for her next jump when Marion called out:

"But, Winnie, we didn't mean to go back at all."

She stood still.

"Neither we did. Now that we are this far, though, perhaps we had better go the rest of the way."

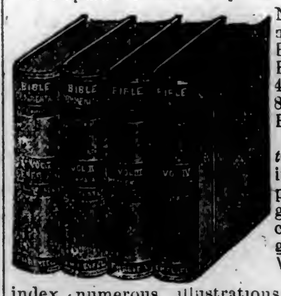
"Yes, for how would mamma get the first strawberry it we didn't bring it to her?"

When they came near the house, a feeling of guilt caused their steps to lag. They watched anxiously for the first signs of the disturbance caused by their absence. Surely, they said, that couldn't be Maurice and Jack still at their bows and arrows. Winnie seized Marion's hand firmly, and hurried into the house. Their mother met them in the hall with her usual smile.

"Have you been out for a walk?" she asked. Marion ran and kissed her.

"Here, mamma; it's for you," she said, opening her hand and disclosing a crushed strawberry. "The first one!"

"Would you like me to mind baby for you?" Winnie asked, holding out her arms for him.



"No, dear. Lunch is just ready. There is the bell."

Marion gave a rapturous sigh.

"I'm so glad we came back," she said softly to Winnie.—The Indian Witness.

A Popular Commentary on the Old and New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10. A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index, numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

This is the only Commentary upon the whole Bible published at a moderate price. It is, therefore, within the reach of the masses, while no commentary published is so highly commended, or so well adapted for the home, the teacher, or the preacher.

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

"I think it is the best Commentary upon the whole Bible which has been issued within the last fifty years, and I should be be very sorry to be deprived of the pleasure of consulting it."—C. H. Spurgeon.

In cloth sent to any one who send sus ten new snbscribers at $1.50 each, prepaid—or for 11 subscribers at $1.50 each we will send the half morocco edition.

present a copy of the new league rallying song, rendered for the first time in public at this meeting, to the air of "Marching through Georgia." It was written by Mrs. Hattie A. Buell, who has dedicated it to the Washington District :

Come and sing a cheery song, ye Epworth Leaguers all;
Sing it with a spirit that is like a bugle call,
Let it echo around the world in every cot and hall,
While we are marching to Canaan.

CHORUS.

Look up! Lift up! and sing our Jubilee,
Look up! Lift up! the cross that makes us free,
Ring aloud the chorus from the mountains to the sea,
While we are marching to Canaan.

We have left Eygptian darkness, far far behind,
And the glorious land of Promise now we seek to find;
Raise on high our banner bright and fling it to the wind,
While we are marching to Canaan.—Chorus.

We are a League of workers true, six hundred thousand strong,
Soon six hundred thousand will swell our triumph song,
Sworn to battle for the right—to fight against the wrong,
While we are marching to Canaan.—Chorus.

Wesley's loyal leaguers all! unite this song to sing,
Sing it with the spirit that shall honor Christ, our King,
Sing it as we hope to sing it when the heavens ring,
While we are marching to Canaan.—Chorus.

The United States Supreme Court is justly regarded as being as near infallibility as anything human can be, but it proved itself in a decision handed down this week to be human enough to make mistakes and to be great enough to acknowledge and to correct them afterwards. Some years ago the U. S. Supreme Court, in a case involving the title to a piece of property in Nebraska, construed a will. Afterwards in another suit the Supreme Court of Nebraska decided that the construction put upon the will by the U. S. Supreme Court was wrong and the case was sent to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which certified the case to the U. S. Supreme Court and asked which construction of the will it should follow. Here is the answer of the Court, voiced by Justice Gray: "Ordinarily there would be no doubt as to how to answer that question and the inquiring body would be told to follow the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court. But here we are satisfied that the Supreme Court of Nebraska was right and the U. S. Supreme Court was wrong, and the Court of Appeals will be so informed." There is a beautiful lesson for us all in this action of our highest court in acknowledging its error and reversing its previous decision. T.

Say Soes.

To Prevent the Hair from Falling Out.—A good wash to prevent the hair from falling out is made of one ounce of powdered borax, half an ounce, of powdered camphor, one quart of boiling water and a gill of alcohol. When cool, pour into a bottle for use, and clean the head with it, applying with a flannel or sponge once a week.

You can drive nails into hard wood without bending them if you dip them first in lard.

A QUEENLY HEAD

can never rest on a body frail from disease any more than the lovely lily can grow in the sterile soil. When Consumption fastens its hold upon a victim, the whole physical structure commences its decay. At such a period, before the disease is too far advanced. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will arrest and cure it. So certain is this, that an offer is made to refund the money paid for it when a failure can be found under the condition of a fair trial.

Once used, Dr. Pierce's Pellets are always in favor. Specific for constipation, piles, billiousness, and headaches.

A Cure for Snake Bite.—Dr. Shaw, writing to the "Medical Times" from Water Gap, where poisonous snakes abound, says that during the past six years, in which he had followed out a method of cure for snake bite, he has not lost a case. He gives sixty minims of aromatic spirits of ammonia hypodermically and an ounce of whiskey every two hours. A large poultice of bruised raw onions is applied to the wound and renewed every hour. The whiskey and onions are continued until cure is effected, which is usually on the third day.

A successful man usually has four metallic qualifications—gold in his pocket, silver in his tongue, brass in his face, iron in his heart.

For Seasickness

Use Horseford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. Fourness-Brice, of S. S. Teutonic, says: "I have prescribed it in my practice among the passengers travelling to and from Europe, in this steamer, and the result has satisfied me that if taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Taking my cue from a copy of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of this week's issue which fell into my hands, I send you only a running commentary upon the business of the Assembly leaving the daily papers whose accounts have been improving in accuracy of late, to furnish the bulk of the news. Allow me to correct a typographical error of some importance in the last issue. I wrote (in substance) that the widows of missionaries and ministers would be employed in the Assembly's Home and School as the care-takers of the children.

FIRST SUNDAY IN NASHVILLE.

All the Presbyterian churches of the city and near vicinity were filled by the visiting brethren. It was astonishing how many there were to be supplied. The Cumberland Presbyterian, the Methodist and the Baptist churches were also freely and cordially thrown open to the commissioners. Dr. Daniel preaching in the largest Cumberland church, Dr. Wharey in the Methodist and Dr. Rosebro in the First Baptist. I did not hear that any of us preached in the beautiful Episcopal churches. There may have been such preaching but it was kept out of the papers.

FOURTH DAY.

The Assembly met according to adjournment. A half-hour is spent in devotional exercises, and as a lunch is served on the grounds the Assembly has insisted by several test votes to have preaching during the last hour of the morning session.

The Committee on Leave of Absence is a hard-headed, dogmatic body, much approved by the Assembly and cordially disliked by those who want to get away. It made a report this morning that no one would be allowed to leave except in cases of absolute necessity. Heartily approved.

The Chairman of the Foreign Correspondence Committee reported on an overture from the Synod of North Carolina and expressed the wish for closer relations with the Associate Reformed Synod.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures reported and its answers and recommendations were adopted:

From Potosi Presbytery. Can a Presbytery dissolve the relation existing between an elder and a church without prejudice? It can. From North Carolina Synod—ministers are transferred with the territory transferred by the higher court. The request from Wilmington Presbytery was granted and a "judicious" committee ad interim on Beneficiary Education appointed.

The committee consists of the following: T. H. Law, F. B. Webb, J. M. Wharey, J.W. Lapsley and J. P. Hobson.

Fayetteville Presbytery will take notice that by the answer to an overture from South Alabama Presbytery, ruling elders are not permitted to charge the pastor or people in installation service.

The Assembly observed the order for public worship and heard a sermon from all of the North Carolina ministers.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

There was a warm discussion upon the question as to the ordination of a minister by an evangelist in the foreign field. The action of the last Assembly with its unconstitutional commission of ordained ministers from different Presbyteries was disannulled by vote of the Assembly. Then the question arose as to the right by a Presbytery to delegate its power in the matter to a missionary (evangelist.) Dr. White denied that there could be such power delegated.

Rev. S. L. Morris, of Macon made a clear and telling speech in favor of the report of the Committee of Bills and Overtures—that the evangelist was a Presbytery when the Presbytery delegated its power to him, as in the ordination of elders and organizing of churches, acts already performed by the evangelist. The book must be changed however, to establish this development of its own doctrine, so the answer is sent down to the Presbyteries. It is to be hoped that this long mooted question will be finally settled by a favorable vote of the Presbyteries.

An overture from Dallas Presbytery coupled with a cordial invitation from Dallas church was offered to the consideration of the Assembly in determining the place of its next meeting. The Texan brethren fairly spread themselves.

An invitation from the Grace Street church, Richmond, Va., was made by proxy. The roll-call was begun, but it soon became evident that the Assembly was inclined to take Horace Greely's famous advice and "go West." The breezes of the prairies swept the Assembly off its feet and Dallas was unanimously chosen before the Virginia delegation had a chance to cast its (usually) solid vote.

THE MEANS CASE

was brought before the Assembly by the report of the Judical Committee, George Summey, D, D., Chairman. The report admitted that the complaint bristled with technicalities and recommended that the case be heard as a complaint according to the alternative prayer of Charleston Presbytery.

Rev. J. W. Flinn, D. D., was granted the privilege of the floor as the representative of the Synod of South Carolina. He made a masterly argument tending to prove that Charleston Presbytery had no standing in the case.

First, it had made the error of making a complaint after taking an appeal. This is not such a mere technicality as might be supposed. The appeal which was first made deprived Miss Means of her privilege as a member of the church until the meeting of the Assembly. But there was some doubt as to the regularity of an appeal so a complaint was made as an alternate proposition.

Second, a court cannot appeal unless it has been on trial—(Book of Church Order, paragraph 256), nor can a court as such complain according to the statement of paragraph 267—"any member of the church" is entitled to complain.

Dr. Flinn, waived his claim on this point, but on motion of Dr. Daniel the Assembly refused to accept his waiver. It was seen at once that this was a good opportunity to throw this troubling case out of court and at the same time to settle the law of the church, in which the precedents are all one side and the book all the other. The excitement which the calling up of the case had produced was allowed to cool while the Assembly took recess.

NIGHT SESSION.

A popular meeting in the interest of Foreign Missions was held and the church was crowded to the utmost capacity. Dr. White presided. Rev. S. R. Gammon gave an instructive address upon the work in Papal lands especially in Brazil. Mr. Grinnan followed with a plain and matter-of-fact description of the real state of affairs in Japan. He made a most pleasing impression upon the Assembly and the congregation. We all felt that there was no allowance that was necessary to be made for enthusiasm and extreme optimism. He has evidently studied thoroughly the problem of mission work. Rev. T. H. Rice followed from the standpoint of the missionary pastor. His own church, Alexandria, Va., has done nobly in this great cause, and his experience and even his personal descriptions were listened to with interest and attention. His address was perfectly informal and the appeal was not without its fruits, we trust, in a consecration of life and means to the Master's service.

FIFTH DAY.

A telegram of fraternal greetings in response to one of our own was received from the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, signed by Rev. S. P. Jones.

The report on Sabbath Observance was encouraging in that fifteen Presbyteries reported improvement and fourteen a backward tendency. The report was promptly docketed on account of an ill-advised reference to the Means Case.

An impertinent paper was received by the Assembly from the "National League for the Promotion of Social Purity." When read (on Friday) it was tabled as soon as the name of Breckinridge was mentioned.

The tabling of the paper was misunderstood and misrepresented in the secular press, so that Rev. W. H. Woods finally introduced an admirable paper, resenting the insinuations and making a perfectly general deliverance which could not be twistod into a campaign document. This paper was adopted finally. A congratulatory telegram from the League was heard with respectful silence.

The sermon this morning was by Rev. W. H. Woods, on the text, "Behold I make all things new."

In the judgment of your correspondent it is one of the best sermons he has ever heard; deeply spiritual, thoughtful and original to a high degree and expressed in vigorous English, it compelled attention from beginning to close and left only the regret that it was remembered too well for future use.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The special committee on Young People Societies reported. Rev.Mr. Purcell, from Central Texas Presbytery, chairman. It was very pertinently asked by a member of the Assembly what had been done with the ad interim committee's report. That report was offered as a substitute and both reports were docketed.

The Means case came up as unfinished business. Dr. Daniel offered a substitute from the Judicial Committee's report, in line with the argument of Dr. Flinn, before mentioned. The question was most ably debated. One brother who passed as a lawyer found to his cost that there were some ecclesiastical lawyers who were not to be trifled with, a few pointed questions from Dr. Campbell, of Texas "winging him—to adopt one of the Assembly's slang phrases.

Dr. Daniel's argument in support of his paper was a miracle of strength and compact logic. At one time it looked as if the case would be certainly cast out of court. Rev. Dr. McPheeters, of Columbia Seminary, easily took the position of one of the first debaters of the Assembly. Possibly no man on the floor is better versed in the law of the Church as set forth in our standards. Dr. Leeper of the Presbytery of Charleston, also made a strong speech and Rev. G. A. Blackburn, the pastor of the Second church, Columbia, where the trouble occurred, appeared before the Assembly for the first time. He made a plea that was very effective in view of the fact that the law of the Church had been interpreted often by the precedents of the Assembly itself. There was a feeling in the Assembly against dodging the issue involved and against any action which should have even the appearance of an ex post facto law. The ayes and noes were called for on the substitute of Dr. Daniel and it was lost by a vote of 57 to 89. The minority comforted itself with the thought that its supporters were all in excellent company.

So it was decided to try the case.

The night session was opened with a popular meeting in the interest of Home Missions. Dr. Daniel presiding. Short and stirring addresses were made by brethren who have been prominent in Home Mission work. Dr. Rosebro indicated the importance of keeping Home Missions abreast of Foreign Missions in the individual churches by having Home Mission organizations. Rev. J. D. McLean is an enthusiastic worker from Texas, who was attentively heard. Some of the facts brought out in his speech and that of our faithful teacher among the Indians, Rev. C. J. Ralston, were that there would be 3,000,000 people in Texas in 1900 according to the present rate of increase. That there were 75,000 Mexicans withrn the borders of the State and 275,000 white people in Indian Territory. Rev. J. W. Moseley, of Arkansas, brought down the house with the unconscious humor of his experience in Home Mission work in his State. He has a very penetrating voice and is a clear and forcible speaker as was shown by a subsequent debate, with Dr. Howison in which the brother from Arkansas upheld the scholarship of the Directory of Worship with regard to the paptismal formula. Dr. Howison made the change such a serious one as to call for his resignation from the ministry.

After the popular meeting the Assembly passed to the second order of the day and then began the memorable debate on ORGANIC UNION.

Dr. Summey, as chairman of the special committee, reported adversely to the overtures of the Presbyteries on the ground of the distinctive principles of the Southern Church, and recommended an answer to the Northern Assembly saying that it was unwise to reopen the question of Organic Union. Dr. Webb offered a substitute for both their paper and Dr. Blanton's urging that a committee of nine be appointed to confer concerning the difference between the bodies, especially these of the separate and independent colored church, our relation to the civil government and the policy of ecclesiastical Boards. Mr. Elwang, of Florida, made the opening speech making a special plea for the appointment of the committee on the grounds of Christian courtesy, and speaking of the effect of an opposite course upon the Florida churches composed so largely of Northern people. Then Dr. Howison opened the whole question of Organic Union and it was only occasionally afterwards that the question was confined to the single issue of the appointment of a committee.

The time would fail me to tell of the McPheeters brothers, elder and minister, of Blanton and Rosebro and White, of Otts and Purcell and Storey and Sneed of Daniel and Summey. One of the remarkable features of the debate was the fact that several of the speakers made votes for the side opposite that which they were upholding. One brother in favor of Organic Union out and out declared he had joined a Northern Presbytery under a solemn covenant that he was not to be disturbed in his rights. Another represented the condition of affairs in the Northern Church as so unspeakably bad that we wondered where his principles had been during the fifteen years of his connection with that Assembly. One rash young brother invited those who differed with him to get out of the Southern Church, but was interrupted in a lofty flight of eloquent reference to the Church of his fathers by the question as to where he came from. He admitted that his people were from Pennsylvania. He was "winged."

One of the strongest speeches made was hurt in the offset, though it undoubtedly made votes, by what was regarded as an unkind reference to the negro. But a brother on the other side counterbalanced all that by his rash statement with regard to our unalterable position on the question of a separate colored Church. The question of courtesy to the Northern Assembly was partially balanced by the question of the rights of the Presbyteries and the people to be heard before the question was opened at all. One of thr best speeches was to the effect that the larger body always wanted union with the smaller. That the case was exactly the same in Texas when the larger Southern Church would receive and the smaller Northern Church declined it. The Assembly enjoyed the spirited debate between Rev. W. M. McPheeters, of Columbia Seminary, and his brother, an elder from Missouri. It suggested to several the thought that there must have been many a boyish fight between them, and when Dr. McPheeters referred to that exact state of the case by way of illustration, the Assembly roared. The illustration was a telling one however. He spoke of his brother's marked independence and individuality and we cordially agreed with him—then of his own and we assented again. Then he referred to the boyish battles of "thirty years ago" and how they had been forgiven and forgotten, or were remembered without any sad association. "But," he said, "if we were shut up in the same house with one in control of the other there would be bigger fights than there were thirty years ago."

Just before the vote was taken a letter was read from Dr. Murkland giving the state of feeling in the Northern Assembly on the subject. At the same time one of the secular papers distributed through the house contained an account of Dr. M.'s introduction to the Northern Assembly as a minister of the Southern Church and of his speech to that Aessembly. "In opening he expressed the hope that the time might soon come when the effort to bring back the Southern Church like a daughter to the bosom of her mother might be crowned with success." Here again the effect was opposite to that intended. Of course there is wide room for a mistake by the secular press, but the Southern Church is not in love with this sort of representation. There was a case of the same kind last year.

Sixty-eight voted aye on the substitute and 90 no. Five of the North Carolina delegation voted aye and 8 no. Your correspondent was in the minority and if he had been allowed the floor he would have said very briefly that in his opinion Christian courtesy demanded a conference when the invitation was thus freely and warmly extended. That he regarded it as a good opportunity of declaring the distinctive principles of the Southern Church and of removing from her whatever odium may attach from her known position in favor of an independent existence.

Notice of protest was given by Mr. Elwang and about twenty names were added to the paper—with a majority of the minority vote. I suppose that the brother needed to be recorded thus in view of the fact that so many Northern people are in his churches. The vote was taken late Thursday afternoon. So we have anticipated somewhat the order of business.

MORNING SESSION.

Thursday, May 24th.

The report on Publication showed $100,000, assets in the hands of the Executive Committee. The Synodical Records were acted upon and only unimportant exceptions taken.

The Revised Directory was enacted by the Assembly, a part of the Constitution—fifty-seven Presbyteries having voted for it.

One of the commissioners, Dr. Yeaman was called home by the news of the drowning of his eldest son. An expression of sympathy was offered by the Assembly. Many a heart turned to home and loved ones far away and prayed God's protection and tender care. Rev. J. H. Thornwell, D. D., worthy son of noble sire, conducted the devotional exercises, preaching on the "One Mediator." The sermon was a profound and analytical theological discourse upon that great theme and was heard with deep interest and great profit by all. After the debate on Organic Union the Assembly adjourned till Thursday morning, and the members accepted the invitation to attend a reception held at Ward Seminary—a Presbyterian Institute for young ladies. The music and recitations of the girls were of the highest order of merit and were followed by refreshments. It was a great relief after the long strain of the debate to be permitted to enjoy the social pleasure for a while.

At this present writing, Saturday afternoon, the Means case has been decided in favor of the young lady, and the report on the change of licensure adopted, and the secretaries for the ensuing year elected: Chester, Craig, Phillips and Hazen.

The Presbyterian.

IF I KNEW.

If I knew the box where the smiles were kept,
No matter how large the key
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard,
'Twould open, I know, for me.
Then over the land and the sea, broadcast,
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day.

If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would like to gather them every one,
From nursery, school and street,
Then, folding and holding, I'd pack them in,
And, turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depth of the deepest sea.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

THIRD DAY.

Saturday, May 19th.

Various overtures and communications were read and referred. A letter from the Waldensian Synod expressing the most cordial fraternal feelings was read (translated) by the permanent clerk. The special committee on the action of the Birmingham Conference reported that the plan, meeting large and influential opposition, would be necessarily impracticable and is therefore rejected. The report was unanimously adopted.

The order of the day having arrived the moderator introduced to the Assembly Rev. Dr. Tron, of the Waldensian Church, who made a pleasing and instructive address. The Church has a colony of 5,000 in Uruguay, two colonies in Missouri and the one with which we are familiar in Burke county, N. C. Several ministers in Chicago, Pittsburg and other places are working among the Italian population. There is a mission also in Africa. The speaker referred to the glorious history of his Church, to its martyrs, in the thirty-five persecutions through which the Church has passed. Forty ministers are working in Italy and 5,000 communicants and 4,000 children in the Sunday-schools give proof of the success of their work. Dr. Prochet is in close relation with the king of Italy, and the condition of affairs in Italy may be stated thus. A patriot cannot be a good Catholic. A good Catholic must be a traitor to his country. Now is the opportunity for Protestant work in Italy. An earnest appeal was made to our Assembly to organize a Presbyterian mission in Italy. Would that it might be heard!

The moderator made a most happy reply and the Assembly was evidently greatly touched by the address. The second order of the day was the hearing of the Rev. Dr. McLean, secretary of the American Bible Society. He spoke of the great advance of the work during the year. He referred to the Confederate Bible Society of which Dr. Wilson was chairman, of the application made to the British and Foreign Bible Society for work, of the burning of the cotton that was meant to pay for them, of the wiping out of the debt by the generosity of its creditors, of the fact that thousands of Bibles were sent through the lines under a flag of truce, and that a debt of $100,000 against the local societies of the Southern Church was wiped out after the war. This little bit of history unknown to the most of us gave a ground for the appeal to the Church. The motto of the Society has changed from "A Bible for every family," to "A Bible for every child who can read."

Rev. Frank McCutcheon offered a resolution asking the Presbyteries to send their overtures to their respective Synods whenever possible, instead of to the General Assembly. Adopted.

A telegram was read from the Northern Assembly announcing the appointment of a committee of nine to confer with a like committee from the Southern Church on the subject of Organic Union.

While history is sometimes careless of the reputation of prophets your correspondent predicts that our Assembly will courteously decline to appoint the Committee.

The hour for public worship having arrived the Assembly joined in singing: "Come thou Fount of every blessing" and "Jesus lover of my soul," and Rev. Egbert Smith preached a sermon upon the text of Philippians 4:11. "I have learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content." The sermon was simple, tender and practical, and produced a profound effect upon the congregation. The good taste cannot be too highly commended of refusing the temptation to intrude the business of the Assembly upon the worship. The Assembly adjourned to meet on Monday morning at 9 o'clock.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT

Of the Executive Committee of the General Assembly.

The following facts gathered from the valuable report, just laid before the General Assembly, will be of peculiar interest to our readers. We only regret we have not space for more:

From the beginning of the year to its close, the work has been environed with difficulties. There were difficulties connected with the home administration, and difficulties growing our of political complications in the foreign field, and in the business world from which our resources are drawn, there was a world-wide financial depression and panic. But under the good hand of our God, these troubles have, as we believe, only contributed to the greater prosperity of the work, and have been the means of awakening a deep and widespread missionary interest among our people.

While making devout acknowledgement of this fact, the Executive Committee would also express its deep appreciation of the many assurances received, while dealing as best it knew how with the difficult and perplexing problems that confronted it, of the sympathy and confidence of the Church, and of the generous response to our appeals, which have averted the perils with which our work was threatened, and enabled us to report to you to-day that no debt has been incurred, and that no missionary under our care has been recalled from the field, or allowed to lack for the promised support.

The fiscal year was closed without a debt, and leaving a balance in the treasury available for the general mission purposes on April 1st, 1894, of $9,607,14.

Our responsibilities for the present year will be considerably larger than for the past year; so that to maintain our work on its present basis, without any further enlargement, we will need to raise for the present year, not less than $155,000.

But it is hoped that the Church will not be satisfied merely to maintain our present work. The manifestations of life in everything that has life, is growth. For the individual Christian, the individual church, or the collective Church, the cessation of growth means stagnation and death. The maintenance and development of life in the church at home, demands that this work should continually advance. If we prosper at home, we must keep step with the great forward movement of our age for the evangelization of the world. And while a thousand millions of heathen are without the gospel, the time has not come when we can afford to turn a deaf ear to our marching orders, "Go teach all nations."

Our missionary force has grown during the year from one hundred and six to one hundred and thirty, while in two years the number of native helpers in our employ has grown from eighty-seven to one hundred and sixty-five. With a proportionate enlargement of our work during the present year, in order to meet our obligations, we shall need to raise the sum of $175,000. Can this amount be raised without unduly taxing the resources of the church, or doing detriment to other branches of our Church work? The following statement will show plainly that it can be done:

The number of contributing churches was 1,640, being fifteen less than last year. The number of contributing Sabbath-schools was 489, being 125 less than last year; the number of contributing societies was 749, being twenty more than last year. 1,012 churches and more than two-thirds of our Sabbath-schools, gave nothing at all to this cause. If a plan can be devised by which the Presbyteries within whose bounds these non-contributing churches and Sabbath-schools are found can be induced to see to it, that in every one of them during the present year, the cause of Foreign Missions shall be presented, and a collection for it taken, one essential step towards the solution of our problem will thereby be made.

SPECIAL OBJECT WORK.

With the view of bringing the home churches into closer relations with the mission field, the effort has been made to enlist as many of them as possible in the support of individual missionaries. It is believed that by proper effort the number of missionaries supported by individuals may be largely increased. There are enough strong churches within our bounds well able to assume the support of all the workers on our roll who are not thus specially provided for, thus leaving us a large fund from the contributions of the smaller churches, with which to undertake new work and send more laborers into the field. In almost every instance where churches have undertaken this Special Object Work, their contributions have been largely increased: sometimes as much as two or three fold. The attention of the Assembly is called to this matter, in the hope that measures will be adopted looking to the development of the work along this line, on which it is believed that our greatest progress and success for the future is to be achieved.

As we look abroad on the great outlying destitutions, where no gospel is preached, and where innumerable multitudes of heathen people are living their sad lives and dying their sad deaths without Christ and without hope, we are filled with an ever deepening conviction that what we as a Church are doing for this work is altogether too little; and that the great work of this Assembly should be to devise means by which a more general and wide-spread and enthusiastic missionary spirit may be awakened in all our churches.

Avian Athletics.

BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

The study of athletics, just now so popular, may be my excuse, if I need one, for spying upon my friends the birds, and reporting their gymnastics. One of the three things, yea, four, that passed the understanding of the old writer in the Bible was the "way of an eagle in the air;" and to this day, how a buzzard sails has not been satisfactorily explained.

Last November my attention was called to a flock of hawks (I do not pretend that the phrase is technically good) going southward high in air, moving by circular flight, each horizontal ring of advance forming a link in an imaginary chain which was to connect our frost-sprinkled climate with the warm, dreamy spaces of the South. Looking through a strong binocular glass I followed the birds therewith till they passed beyond the horizon; and not a wing did I see make a stroke, save at long intervals an oar-like dip, as if merely to relieve the tiresome strain on the muscles.

Round and round they sailed, more than a hundred of them, a great giddy wheel rolling flat against the sky and gradually sinking from zenith to horizon, shrinking, shrinking, until, at the point of disappearing, they glittered like a silvery whiff of chaff just above the hills far southward.

I call that an incomparable display of ærial athletics. From how far north they came or to what southern point they went I do not pretend to know; it is enough that as far as I could see them they went on and on, apparently without effort.

There was a description in a newspaper the other day of how a hawk caught a carrier pigeon. The writer said that so long as the pigeon flew in a straight line it gained and drew away from its pursuer; but as soon as it began to zigzag the hawk overtook it. This brought to my mind what I once saw in the woods. A blue-tailed hawk was pursuing a turtledove; the flight seemed as swift as that of an arrow, although it was through a close growth of maples and beeches. Over and under boughs and around the boles of trees the birds whisked apparently reckless of direction, and yet neither ever touched even a twig. How could eyes see and wings evade the multitude of obstacles behind obstacles? At last when the hawk was within two feet of its victim the latter dashed headlong into a flicker's hole in the body of a dead beech. Now think of it; that hawk was going faster than ever express train went, and yet it applied brakes and stopped short before reaching the tree! Speak of readiness, dream of what instantaneous response to exigency is, and then think of that movement; it was quicker than the burning of powder.

I have often wondered at the ease with which a great hen hawk drops from on high, like a falling shot, hitting so accurately its quarry on the ground; for at the moment of beginning its descent it closes its wings almost tight against its sides and goes as true as a plumb-line. Before it reaches the ground its speed becomes so rapid that you hear the air fairly shriek through its feathers, and the heavy thud of the blow at the last is of deadly suggestion. I have seen a full-grown hare snatched up into the air limp and dead after such a performance and borne away dangling in a grip of fate.

An expert trapeze man does many wonderful things; but his extremest cleverness cannot equal that of a hawk which I saw dart under a flying kingfisher, turn back downward, and catch the bird in the breast.

Hawks, however, are not more expert than kingfishers themselves. The belted halcyon makes an unerring missile of himself when he sees a minnow shining in a pool of the brook, and from fifty feet distance goes, like a blue flash, to the silvery point. Chuck! Up leap a thousand shining drops and fall around like rain, while that animated and winged fish-spear comes forth from its plunge with the minnow safely held. Well may Halcyon giggle a raucous, clattering strain of joy; he has done what no man of us can learn to do.

The drowsy-looking little pewee fly-catcher of our woods does almost impossible feats of agility in taking on the wing some species of dancing insects. I have seen one of these birds turn three or four complete somersaults in the air before finally he caught his gnat, which, like Galatea in the idyl, skipped hither and yon and up and down, after the manner of a harl of dry thistle-down—ὡς ἀπ' ἀκάνθας ταὶ καπυραὶ χαιται—but there I go again; and a critic (of a sort) recently warned me that if I kept on with Greek I should soon be no better than Matthew Arnold and John Milton! As I was about to say, however, a kinsman of the pewee, the tyrant flycatcher, shows how a light and plucky tilter in the fields of air can outdo his most savage foe, by dint of superior cleverness, at lofty tumbling. Many a time have I seen him bobbing up and down above a worried and disheveled hawk so high in the air that he looked like a bee harassing the wide-winged thing, mounting and hurrying through the hyacinth spaces of a summer sky.

Our black-capped titmouse is inimitable as a trapeze performer when he gets good hold of a twig's end. He can swing head-downward, sidewise, curved till beak and tail touch; swing by one foot, and the wind may blow as hard as it can, he never loses his grip. No wonder Emerson loved him for his pluck and nerve. Some years ago it created a stir in old London when an athlete climbed to a temple's arch and hung head downward from a beam; but what is a feat like that when compared with what you may see any June morning when a titmouse hangs by one claw to the topmost leaf of some tall forest tree, and the wind blowing boisterously.

Have you ever seen two cock bluejays fighting in midair? There is a joust of brilliance! They whirl over and over so fast that they look like a blur of amethyst smoke, shot with gleams of white fire, and their wings clash and their bills clack! Not much harm is done; but I venture to guess that no two human prize-fighters (but are they ever human?) can give and take blows so rapidly.

The mockingbird, greatest of all the wildwood singers, has his own way of showing off his athletic nimbleness and grace. He somersaults backward in the midst of a staccato strain and never loses a note. Let some tenor try it in the opera one of these fine evenings.

All the woodpeckers climb the boles of trees not by stepping one foot at a time, but by jumping vertically. This may at first thought seem easy, yet a little reflection will disclose how difficult it is. The bird does not use its wings, and of course must spring upward and at the same time keep within reaching distance of the tree. Let a man try it with his two feet or two hands no matter how well armed with spikes or claws and he will, trained athlete tho he be, certainly have a good, thumping fall for his pains. And more difficult still is the nuthatch's hopping headforemost down a tree-stem, yet he does it with as much ease as you walk on the ground. The great pileated woodpecker will hang to the underside of a branch by the grip of his toes, and hammer away for hour after hour without changing his position, when every powerful stroke is upward, and the heavy strain on his short legs is never relaxed.

Large migratory birds, the cranes, herons, geese, brant and the like, fly steadily night and day from Florida to the far North without rest, water or food, and at a rate of speed almost incredible. I do not know that they semi-annually go into training for their long flight, as our oarsmen and sprinters and football players must do before they can trust themselves to stand the strain of any, even the shortest, contest.

We have all read of the tireless flight of the albatross and have seen the pearl-white seagulls wheel about from day-break to nightfall; but to me the pelicans seem to undergo the greatest strain that birds can bear. It makes me tired through sympathy to watch them feeding. They seem to fly so heavily while curving above the sea, and when they strike down at a fish it is the dash of a great hulking bulk into the water. For hours and hours up and down they go, a plunge and a rise, the constant flapping of enormous vanes, the ludicrous poising of a strangely overweighted head; it is a picture of stolid persistence, of activity almost prevented by bulk and ill shape. Yet watch a pelican with a good glass and you will see that he is as sure of his strike as the kingfisher. His apparently awkward tumble into the flashing white-caps is, after all, an amazingly accurate shot at a nimble mullet which he literallly brings to bag.

The beautiful silver-breasted kite of our Southern States occasionally performs the feat of letting fall his prey and catching it again before it reaches the ground. A fine sight it is when he goes earthward from the clouds like a white bolt. I saw one drop a water snake which must have fallen fifty feet wriggling and squirming when the kite, so high that it looked like a forked-tailed swallow, shot down after it. With half-closed wings it whistled through the air so swiftly that my eyes could scarcely follow and struck the reptile just before it touched the earth. I have seen a red-headed woodpecker in the same manner catch a beechnut that he had let fall.—Independent.

The Hallowed Home.

That home is hallowed into which Jesus is invited and comes with the master of it. He who goes with us on the dusty, weary way will abide with us in the hours of rest. Christ sanctifies domestic repose, and will sit at our tables, if we will. Luxury and levity and excess banish Him. How many so-called Christians are there who would find His presence at their meal very inconvenient. Where Jesus is invited as a guest, He becomes host. He takes the place of master of the house, according to His own deep saying, "I * * * will sup with him, and he with me." He takes the humbler fare, blesses it, and gives it back to the owner, sweetened by His hand. His blessing mends the feast; and makes the coarsest food a dainty.—Alexander McLaren. D. D.

A Wise Decision.

Mrs. Marchmount said with dignity that she should always hold the lines in her own household as long as her strength would at all permit. Several friends had advised her giving up control of affairs to her son's wife, or if she preferred, urged her sending for a daughter to come and assume management in the family.

Mrs. Marchmount was immovable. True she could no longer go to the kitchen and prepare the nice dishes she had excelled in once. neither could she perform many of the duties it had until late been a pleasure to busy herself about. But she still paid the bills; settled with the provision dealer and grocer every month; gave the serving maid her wages, and ran over the accounts satisfying herself that everything was straight and accurate. It was in no spirit of defiance or unseemly independence that Mrs. Marchmont insisted on superintending affairs and remaining the head of the family. She recalled vividly the case of old Mrs. Leslie, who came one day to call, and upon being congratulated on her freedom from household worries and cares had suddenly burst into tears, and once she could find voice, said she had committed the mistake of her life in surrendering her old established rights even to her own married daughter.

"But you are still your own mistress," urged Mrs. Marchmount. "Living in your own house and still largely supporting it; who can really interfere with your wishes or rights?"

"You can't understand unless in the same position," Mrs. Leslie had replied, "which I hope you never will be. It is not in great matters, not in affairs that seem important the repression is felt. It consists chiefly in the many nameless little liberties and power of control that it becomes a constant source of inward irritation to feel I have become subordinate to the will and ordering of others. For instance, last week I wanted old Mr. and Mrs. Parkins who were on their way home from the West to stop and spend a few days with me. Laura's face at once clouded over. She said she was sorry, but husband wanted to invite an old college mate and his wife to spend a few days here next week. There was but one spare-room, and she must fulfill her promise to her husband and entertain his friends. I gave in at once, not wanting to stir up any friction. At the same time I knew it was very doubtful if my old friends ever left their home again to journey so long a distance. On two or three occasions when I have felt particularly well, I have proposed going to the kitchen to prepare a favorite dessert or to make a loaf of old-fashioned pound or fruit-cake. But no; there's sure to be some reason why I can't have the oven, and Susan, the girl, I'm told, is angry, and threatens to leave if she is interfered with. If I want anything carried to my room, Laura must herself request Susan to do me the favor, as no girl will stand having two mistresses. Now my daughter would shed bitter tears if accused of being unkind to me—which she is not. She thinks as you did a moment ago, that I am fortunate and to be congratulated on having a daughter to take charge and relieve me of my former cares. The truth is, old people don't want to be relieved of their legitimate leadership."

Added to Mrs. Leslie's testimony, Mrs. Marchmont remembered with what a twinkle of amusement a shrewd old gentleman once said in her hearing: "Some of our young people who have come to live with us think ma and I are wilful because we insist on having things done in our old accustomed way. But I tell ma they have no idea what tremendous perseverance and strength of will they exhibit in their determination to turn our old rules topsyturvy. They won't succeed, however, until ma and I are a great deal older than we are now." Mrs. Marchmont felt a thrill of satisfaction at the last cool assertion, but reflected how that smile of amusement would have given place to a justifiable sigh of indignation and regret if her spirited old acquaintance had yielded to "some of our young people" and let them drive him and his aged companion whither they would.

And then again she recalled the grieved look with which another aged and infirm friend had said: "We have somehow never been able to have family prayers at our house since I gave up control of things; I can't quite understand why it need be so, but our whole life seems altered."

The experiment has been tried time and again, too often with disappointing and depressing results. Not that it fails under all conditions; where a daughter has never left the old home, is unmarried and not subject to counter influences, the management can glide naturally into her hands and no difference be felt. But as a rule Mrs. Marchmont's instincts were in nowise misleading. She argued sensibly that truly filial children and kindly connections would not be anxious to hasten a change in the conduct of affairs in the old homestead, and such as were impatient of the rightful old rule were surely not the ones to be trusted with instituting a new regime.

Is the central point from which he measures every distance
Through the gateways of the world around him."

Keep Out.

One man escaped the dangers of strong drink and reached manhood sober and prosperous, by keeping a promise which his mother exacted, never to take off his hat to a public-house, and never to sit down in a place where strong drink was sold. His tarrying in such places was short, and the shorter the better.

A reformed saloonkeeper, who signed the pledge and closed his house, gives this testimony:—"I sold liquor for eleven years, and have seen a man take his first glass in my place, and afterwards fill the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon, who cannot now buy a dinner. I can count twenty customers once worth more than a thousand pounds who are now without a penny and without hope, and without a friend in the world.' He specially warns boys against entering drinking saloons on any pretext, and he has seen many a young fellow, member of a temperance society, come in with a friend and wait while he drank. "No no," he would say: "I never touch it. Thanks all the same." Presently, rather than seem churlish, he would take a glass of cider or harmless lemonade. "The lemonade was nothing," says the publican, "but I knew how it would end." The only safety, boys, for any man, no matter how strong his resolution, is outside the door of the saloon."

God's Garden.

Most of us have gardens of some sort which we like to work in and care for. Now, God has a garden too, and he has given this garden into our keeping that we may till it for him. For God's garden is the human heart.

Now, a garden needs to be dug, and digging is a painful process. And I daresay if the garden itself were consulted it would like to be left alone. But God digs all over our hearts with the spade of sorrow, so that they may yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. And he does this without asking our consent at all.

Then, a garden needs to be sown, and the seed is the Word of God. Of course, there are other seeds to be sown, for we must learn many different things in this world. But the main kind of seed—the seed without which every human garden is a wilderness—is the Word that teaches us to be good, and makes us wise unto salvation.

Then the seed must grow. And in order to do this the garden must be placed in a favorable condition for growing. It must be sheltered from rough winds, and lie favorably to the sun. For evil communications will corrupt good manners, and unless we keep up communion with God the plant of holy living won't grow.

God's garden is a useful garden. It is meant to grow fruit which will benefit our fellow-men. Christ lived a life of usefulness, and went about doing good.

But gardens should have flowers as well as fruit, and the Christian character needs graces as well as virtues. Therefore let us seek to plant in our hearts the white lily of Purity, the blue-bell of Temperance, and the red rose of Love. All God's flowers, too, are sweet-smelling, and like the homely woodruff, they smell sweetest when they are dead and withered.

We must seek to keep our garden clear of weeds, and this is not easy. For the seeds of weeds are in the soil when we are born.

While God is owner of this plot of ground, he is also the head gardener of it, and we must work according to his directions. And he has told us that one day he will judge our gardens and award such prizes as he thinks fit to those who keep them best.—Christian Leader.

Sons of God.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God!" How those words of the beloved disciple thrill the soul of the believer! And it is not a mere name, a complimentary title, that he refers to, for he immediately adds: "Now are we the sons of God." We have been adopted into the divine family. We may enjoy here and now all the privileges of that high position. The son of a king is a prince royal, the son of an emperor is a prince imperial. But how far above both of them is a son of God. He is a prince, not of a kingdom, or of an empire, but of the universe. And to such an one Paul was inspired to say: "All things are yours." Again I say, how such words thrill the soul! How sweet is the assurance of faith, the spirit of adoption, the love of God that is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit.

But are we, who have this wonderful and blessed heritage, to live as pampered sons of millionaires? Is that the Bible idea of sonship? Let us see. The Savior said: "A certain man had two sons. And he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to day in my vineyard." Was that man an unnatural father? Or had he a right to ask and expect that his son would help him cultivate the vineyard? He did not promise him wages, as did the householder in the other parable. "(Matt. xx. 1.) He evidently thought, and the Savior seems to have thought so too, that the son ought to work for his father. He ought to respond to every command in the words of the divine Son: "Lo, I come. I delight to do thy will."

Christ is our model as well as our Savior. How filial was his spirit. When the consciousness of his divine sonship came upon him in the temple at Jerusalem he said: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" And when he bowed in Gethsemane, the night before his crucifixion, he cried: "Father, * * * not my will, but thine." Oh that all of us who name the name of Christ were like him in devotion to the work, and in submision to the will of our heavenly Father!

God has a great vineyard. It is called the world. He sent his eternal and best beloved Son to die for it. He wants all his sons and daughters to work in this vineyard. He has adopted us not merely to be his heirs, but to be "laborers together with him." Sonship means service. And hence the beloved disciple, who writes so glowingly in his first epistle about the great love bestowed upon us in adoption, addresses his report of the revelation on Patmos "unto his servants," i. e., God's and signs it as "his servant John." (See Rev. 1.)

There is a sad tendency in all our churches to regard religion, our relation to God through faith in Christ, as a kind of luxury, a something to be enjoyed, and to ignore the duties growing out of that relation. Our divine Father has begun a great work in the world, and he has chosen us to be his co-workers. He loves us, but he loves also our perishing fellow-men. He wants to save them, and if we are his children in deed and in truth, we will sympathize with him, and do all that we can to secure the object for which he gave his only begotten Son. We all said, when we entered his family, that we would work in his vineyard. But, alas! how many have forgotten that promise!—Herald and Presbyter.

Beatification.

The "cause" of Joan of Arc has been formally "introduced," according to the rules of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Maid of Orleans will in due time appear in the Catholic calendar as a saint. She is to be beatified, and the faithful will be at liberty to invoke her sympathy and her aid, and to ask her prayers in their behalf.

This kind of beatification Protestants do not regard. The Catholic judgment as to whose lives and services are entitled to be thus recognized does not in the slightest affect our estimate of those lives. It is a useless, unprofitable and unscriptural process, cumbering an already crowded calender, leading the thoughtless to a species of idolatry, and resulting sometimes in the canonization of people whose saintship is more traditional than real. The Maid of Orleans will not be any more sacred to the world after her investiture with the signs and honors of beatification than before; and there is not the slightest reason for believing that she can be a whit more helpful to those who invoke her aid and intercession than she has been in the centuries past.

And yet we believe in the saints, and beatification. God has not called here and there a man and a woman, among all the nations and in all the centuries, to be saints; but he has offered the honor and the privilege and the duty to all who believe on him. The Beatitudes which Christ pronounced are not for St. John and St. Mary Magdalen, and St. Catherine and St. Anthony and the hosts of those who have been canonized, but for all who are called to a life of purity, holiness and helpfulness. "Be ye holy, even as I am holy" was not addressed to monks and nuns, wearing out their lives by vigils, fasting, penances, prayers, in caves and cloisters; but to men and women who live in the world and take up the full round of duties as parents and citizens and social beings. There is a great need of saints in the Church and in the world; real flesh and blood saints, with pure hearts, active feet, busy hands, earning their own bread, meeting and overcoming temptations, showing by their daily lives that they love God with all their hearts and their neighbor as themselves. We want saints, not to do great and unheard-of-things; not to perform wonders and miracles of healing; not to adorn them with nimbuses in statues or pictures; but we want them just to live pure, unselfish, humble lives, where God has placed them. This is the ideal sainthood.

The Church of Christ is only an active, aggressive and holy influence in the world, in so far as it is composed of living saints. The saints who have died in the Lord have left us precious memories and examples, and as we read how they met the difficulties of life and overcame them we have encouragement to persevere. Their works do follow them in the true sense; but we do not need them as intercessors in Heaven; we have One there who has a sympathy for us broader and deeper and diviner than the highest saint in all the calendar.

Let us go to the Beatitudes and learn from them the true process of beatfication: and when we have learned it, we shall not care to have a body of grave cardinals sit in judgment upon it, and an "infallible" Pope proclaim it under his official seal. The Church may not canonize until fifty years after death; God canonizes before death.—Independent.

NERVOUS WRECK FROM DYSPEPSIA,

OFFICE OF YORK ENTERPRISE,
YORKVILLE, S. C., August 14th, '91.

For the past six years my wife has been a sufferer from dyspepsia. So completely did the disease make a wreck of her former self that life was almost despaired of. Her nervous system was almost entirely destroyed, and the slightest noise would throw her into a nervous spasm, which would last for hours. Medical skill failed to bring any relief.

Through the recommendation of an eminent divine we were induced to try the Electropoise. After a persistent use of the instrument, the effect has been wonderful. Her nervous system has been restored to its almost normal condition; her digestion is wonderfully improved; she is rapidly gaining in flesh; and, upon the whole, is making a rapid recovery, which speaks volumes for the wonderful curative powers of the Electropoise, as her case was considered hopeless. If any are skeptical on the subject, let them try the Electropoise, and its wonderful powers will quickly dispel all doubts.

Yours truly,
W. M. PROPST.

We are in urgent need, not having sent out missionaries all that is due for the present quarter; to say nothing of other expenses. The May collections have been coming in very slowly, and so much depends on them each year, that delays may result in greater harm than is generally believed.

Orange Presbytery:—The constitutional requirements having been complied with, the Presbytery of Orange is hereby called to meet in first church Greensboro, Friday, June 8th, 1894, at 10 a. m., to transact the following items of business:

1. To dissolve the pastoral relations existing between Rev. E. C. Murray and the Mebane and Bethlehem churches, and to dismiss Rev. E. C. Murray to the Presbytery of Enoree, if the way be clear.

2. To elect, if necessary, a stated clerk of Presbytery, and chairman of Committee on Manual in place Rev. E. C. Murray.

3. To act on a communication from Rev. J. C. Dinwiddie.

M. McG. SHIELDS, Moderator.

Zion Church, Concord Presbytery:—On Sunday, May 20th, we held our regular spring communion. Rev. C. M. Payne, D. D., of Concord preached for us on Friday and Saturday preceding as well as on Sunday morning. On Saturday Dr. Payne installed Rev. R. V. Lancaster as the first pastor of this church. Formerly the church has had only stated supplies. An interesting feature of Sunday afternoon was a sermon by Mr. Osmund White, a son of the church, and who has just completed his second year at Columbia.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Mocksville:—Rev. P. H. Dalton, writes May 24th.: Bro. Black the Synodical Evangelist, has just closed a meeting of ten days in our church. The singing was conducted by Bro. Pool who ought to be called the "sweet singer" of the Synod of North Carolina. Bro. Miller of the Salisbury chapel aided Bro. Black very efficiently, we all thought. He is certainly a devout man of God and ought to be licensed and preaching to one or more of our churches. We had a very interesting and profitable meeting. Bros. Black and Miller, by their preaching, lifted us towards heaven; Bro. Pool, with his sweet voice, raised us still higher towards the house not made with hands. Such a delightful season, I have not often enjoyed. God's people were greatly refreshed and perhaps there were more than twenty-five converted and reclaimed. Of these our little church has already received eight members and may yet receive a few more. Bro. Black is undoubtedly the right man in the right place,

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Pollocksville, Wilmington Presbytery:—Rev. S. H. Isler closed Wednesday night, 23rd inst., at Pollocksville the series of meetings which he had been holding about four weeks in the churches of Cobb Mills, Croatan, Wildwood, and Pollocksville. The Spirit of God was present with unusual power in all of these churches. The attendance upon preaching was quite large during the series of meetings held at each church. Eleven members have been added to these churches. Eight children have been baptized. One elder has been installed. It is highly probable that a good many others will be added as members of the churches as a result of the meetings. A good many have been convicted of their sins and it is hoped will find peace in believing. Mr. Isler has preached thirty-two sermons, has made about two hundred visits to families, and has had more than 1,000 conversations with persons on personal religion. The stores were closed at Pollocksville to attend the services, and the school took recess to do so. Bro. Vardell and some of his members came over from New Bern Sunday night to help him. They rendered very efficient aid. The sermons of Bro. Vardell were well received and did great good. I thank the New Bern church for her kindness to Pollocksville church. She has done nobly not only in this instance, but in helping us to buid. With the fifty dollars promised by Presbytery, we can complete the church at once. I hear it will be sent, and if so we will soon be in our own church.

Rev. R. B. Grinnan:—This brother most entertainingly addressed the children of the First Presbyterian church on last Sunday forenoon and those of St. Andrews in the afternoon, the occasion being Children's Day. On Sunday night he delighted a large audience at First Presbyterian church on the subject of Japan, and the success of missionary work in that country. On Monday night he informally met and conferred with the gentlemen of the First church, assembled in their monthly meeting.

VIRGINIA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Onancock Church:—Rev. Byron Clark, pastor writes: We have just closed a twelve days' meeting in Onancock church. Mr. L. A. Coulter, of North Carolina did the preaching. Mr. Coulter spoke with great earnestness, and his pure, simple, Biblical sermons were not fruitless. The Holy Spirit worked mightily in our midst, and as a visible result of the services, there were twenty professions. The good accomplished among church members cannot be estimated. Mr. Coulter is a young man of strong intellectual parts, and deep consecration and we hope soon to see him in the ministry. In Onancock we have recently raised one thousand dollars towards a new church building.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Installation of Rev. W. McC. Miller:—On the second Sabbath of May the Rev. Wm. McC. Miller was installed pastor of Village church and Drake's Branch church in the Presbytery of Roanoke. The Rev. T. C. Johnson, D. D., of Union Seminary presided, and preached an able and instructive sermon from Luke ii: 42–52, on the lessons of Christ's childhood. The charge to the pastor was delivered by the Rev. L. B. Johnston, and, to the people by the Rev. C. C. Hersman, D. D., of Union Seminary. Both charges were models of their class. On the afternoon of the same day, the same commission with a change of exercises installed Mr. Miller pastor at Drake's Branch church. Mr. Miller, having served these churches for six months as stated supply was warmly welcomed by the people as their pastor. The spirit in which this relationship was entered gives promise of a full purpose of and endeavor after the faithful performance by pastor and people of their respective engagements.

[EDITORIAL.]

HERE AND THERE.

We bring our reports of the Assembly up to Saturday afternoon. Our readers will read and enjoy the lively presentations of our correspondent on the ground. We note with pleasure as most certainly will our readers, the news coming since our report was made up that Rev. Dr. S.H Chester has been elected Secretary of Foreign Missions. The admirable way in which Dr. Chester has managed affairs during the past few months, as Acting Secretary, and the success attending his labors made this indeed a foregone conclusion.

Ours has certainly been a working Assembly and through its representatives the Synod of North Carolina has been well and most creditably at the front in much of the work. The matter of licensure was important. We will try to present it more fully to our readers in a subsequent issue. The Means Case has been finally disposed of. We have not undertaken to give it, even in large part, for it had become so complex in its bearings that those who have not followed it through the courts would hardly find interest in it. It is a great mistake to say, as some of the secular papers have, that the Assembly approves or at least declines to disapprove of Sabbath work. The case did not come up on the abstract question of Sabbath Observance but on an appeal in which the irregularities of lower courts were the main matters of consideration The paper formulating the judgment of the court should be read in order to know what was done.

Organic Union was up. Our correspondent very entertainingly tells how matters stood on the floor of the Assembly. It seemed to some of us outside that the committee on co-operation at Birmingham were not employed at their best when they set that ball in motion. However, it rolled on freely and ran out without causing any trouble. The majority in the Assembly opposed to appointment of a Committee on Conference were opposed simply and strongly to Organic Union. Those who favored appointment consisted of: First those, in favor of Organic Union at all hazards; second, those who were quite indifferent on that subject, but anxious to be duly courteous to the Northern Assembly; third, those opposed to union but who insisted first of all for courtesy, and believed that appointment of the committee would vindicate and strengthen the Southern Church in her position of independency.

We are all peacefully and happily over the Organic Union strain, but we can not think the Northern Church is to be credited with excessive courtesy. The virtual charging of the Southern Church with crime in remaining separated might be considered a mere bit of harmless dogma, but for the fact that with those good souls who always adopt opinions and never form them, such fulminations have the force of unanswerable argument.

And what shall we say about our misrepresenting representative who fired the heart of the Northern Assembly for union and then tried to communicate the flames to her Southern sister! Perhaps it had best be left unsaid.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FOURTH DAY.

Monday, May 21st.

After devotional exercises sundry overtures were received and referred.

The Committee on Foreign Correspondence reported on the overture from the Synod of North Carolina relative to union with the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church expressing a willingness to renew negotiations dropped in 1865.

Quite a discussion occurred on a resolution offered by Rev. W. H. Woods on the subject of Social Purity—regarded by some as objectionable, as inferentially referring to the Breckenridge matter. It was referred to the Committee on Bills and Overtures, by a large majority.

The Assembly in reply to an overture from Fayetteville Presbytery decides that transfer of territory from one Presbytery to another tranfers also the ministers in the separated portion.

The request of the Presbytery of Wilmington that a committee be appointed to consider beneficiary education and report to the next Assembly was granted, and a committee of five will be appointed.

In the Woodrow case, which came up from the Augusta Presbytery, the committe decided that as a minister remains under the jurisdiction of the Presbytery from which he was dismissed until formally received by another Assembly, he is entitled to all the privileges of the dismissing Presbytery, and that the formal return of the letter was not necessary. There was objection to this report and it was docketed.

The overture from Lexington Presbytery as to the constitutionality of the action of the last Assembly in providing for the ordination of ministers in foreign fields was reported on by the committee of Bills and Overtures sustaining the point taken by the Presbytery and recommending that the Assembly send down to the Presbyteries, with a recommendation that it be adopted, an amendment providing that one minister may ordain another in a foreign field, the newly ordained minister to be enrolled in the Presbytery from which he came.

The report of the committee after some discussion was adopted.

Grace Street church, Richmond, and the First church, Dallas, Texas, were put in nomination and the latter was chosen as place at meeting of the next Assembly.

The Judicial Committee reported that they had examined the papers of the case of Miss Means, and found it contained questions of technical complexity. It was a case of complaint and not of appeal, and they recommended it to be heard as a complaint, and the fixing of an order for hearing and deciding the case.

A conclusion on the subject, which elicited much discussion was not reached.

The session at night was devoted to the subject of Foreign Missions and stirring addresses were made by Rev. S. R. Gammon, missionary to Southern Brazil, Rev. R. B. Grinnan, missionary to Japan, Rev. T. H. Rice and others.

FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, May 22d.

The Committee on Colored Evangelization reported, recommending the establishing of separate churches for the colored people and asking that $15,000 be raised for that purpose. This report was afterwards adopted. The following is the Executive Committee appointed for next year: Revs. C. A. Stillman, C. H. Scholl, J. W. Lapsley, L. S. Handley, J. A. Bryan and Elders M. A. Mason, J. H. Miller, R. D. Johnston, J. D. Searcy, and John Barbour.

A request from Abingdon Presbytery that the Executive Committees on Home Missions and Education be united was rejected.

The resolution (previously referred to) regarding Social Purity, as reported by the committee was adopted. It is as follows:

WHEREAS, A communication from a society which calls itself: "The National League for the Promotion of Social Purity" was laid on the table without having been heard; and,

WHEREAS, This action of the Assembly, without explanation of any sort, may be misconstrued to the prejudice of religion;

Resolved 1st. That inasmuch as the communication in itself professes that the matters of which it treats are the particular concern of the Southern Presbyterian Church, this Assembly, as a court of the Lord Jesus Christ, deems it no discourtesy to claim the right to conduct the business with which it is charged in the manner prescribed by its constitution and approved by the experience of the Church.

2d. That, as the supreme judicary of our Church, it would manifestly be highly improper for the Assembly to express an opinion in a case which is before a lower court.

3d. That while thus debarred from dealing with particular instances of sin against the Seventh Commandment, which are not officially before us, nevertheless this Assembly is deeply and painfully sensible of the injury to religion caused by such sins in professing Christians, and does now, as it always has done, desire and intend in all orderly ways to promote, maintain and require in its people that personal purity which is the common foundation of the home, the Church and the State

The report of the Committee on Licensure of Candidates was submitted. It recommended an overture to assemblies asking changes in the rules governing the ordination of ministers. No probationer should be ordained, unless in exceptional cases, until a regular collegiate course has been gone through in an approved theological seminary. Probationers could be licensed after having complied with all other requisites and studied divinity one year. Probationers should continue the studies at an approved seminary and should be restricted in preaching as might suit the judgment of the Presbytery. Their studies would not be interfered with.

A minority report was also submitted and both were docketed, their consideration being made the order for to-morrow morning.

The first business of the afternoon, Young People's Societies came up in a report from the ad interium committee, Mr. W. H. Neel offered a substitute and both were docketed.

The balance of the afternoon was taken up with discussion of propriety of receiving the Means case; its irregularity it claimed throwinff it out. The report of the Judicial Committee was adopted and arrangement made for hearing it on appeal.

At night the matter of Organic Union with the Northern Church came up.

The following is the report of the Special Committee on the subject.

The Committee on Organic Union, to which were referred the overtures from the Presbyteries of Ebenezer, Holston and North Alabama, touching the subject of Organic Union with the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, beg leave to report, recommending that the following answer be given:

The General Assembly declines to re-open the questiton of Organic Union by the appointment of a committee of conference as requested by the said Presbyteries on the following grounds:

First—The historic difference between the two assemblies as to the relation of the Church of Christ to civil government.

Second—To enter into Organic union with the Northern Presbyterian Church involves the surrender of the plan of an independent negro church, which this Assembly regards as essential alike to the religious and social walfare of both races.

Third—The essential difference between two assemblies as to woman's sphere and work in the Church of Christ.

Fourth—God's blessing has manifestly rested upon our church in its separate existence and work and to spring the divisive question of Organic Union we believe will bring upon us needless agitation and hurtful disturbance.

Fifth—Should such Organic Union take place the property interests of the Southern Church under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States would be seriouly jeopardized in the event of any subsequent changes in our relations.

In view of the foregoing recommendations of an answer to the overtures of the Presbyteries the committee recommends that the following reply be sent to the telegram of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America:

"The blessing of God having rested upon our Church in her separate existence and work, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, in session at Nashville, with affectionate fraternal greetings to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, United States of America, in session at Saratoga, and wishing them God-speed in every good word and work regards it as unwise to reopen the question of Organic Union.

From the above report Dr. G. E. Campbell dissents.

Dr. L. H. Blanton offered the following substitute:

In response to the communication from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, in session at Saratogo, N. Y., touching Organic Union of the two Assemblies,

Resolved, That the following action be taken:

1st. That the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States cordially reciprocates the spirit of fraternal regard which the message of the General Assembly in the United States of America implies.

2. This Assembly appoints a committee of nine members to select from the churches at large to confer with a like committee of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and report to the next Assembly.

3d. That this action be communicated by telegraph to the General Asssembly of the United States of America in Session at Saratoga, N. Y. L. H. BLANTON.

Rev. F. B. Webb offered a substitute for the whole a paper recommending a reciprocation of the fraternal spirit of the Church North, and the appointment of a committee to confer with them and inquire into what they intended to do in regard to the negro churches and other questions furnishing barriers to Organic Union, and that the committee report to the General Assembly at Dallas.

SIXTH DAY.

Wednesday, May 23d.

Some overtures were reported on and adopted without discussion.

The Committee on Systematic Beneficence reported they had heard from sixty-two Presbyteries, and contributions had been received as follows: Sustentation, $54,628; Evangelistic Fund, $76,619; Invalid Fund, $16,205; Foreign Missions Fund, $110,105; Educational Fund, $63,015; Publication, $8,090; Colored Evangengelization, $9,904; Church Erection, $10,887; Bible Society, $4,096. Out of all the churches 539 made no contribution.

A special committee on the Sabbath, consisting of Revs. S. B. Campbell, J. M. Wharey and J. W. Moore, was appointed.

The committee on the revised Directory reported that sixty of the seventy-two Presbyteries had voted, the vote standing 57 for and 3 against its adoption. The committee recommended the Assembly to adopt the Directory, and it was done.

The question of Organic Union came up as the first matter of discussion in the afternoon. We cannot give all the speeches, but we give those of Dr. Otts in favor of the appointment of the commmittee and of Dr. Eugene Daniel on the other side.

Dr. Otts said he would not make a long speech. That would be pleasing information. He criticized the language of the committee's report, saying the question of Organic Union had never been opened yet and could not now be reopened. Co-operative Union had been established. From the Assemblies the question had now come for the first time. The appointment of the Northern Committee had been the first step towards Organic Union. He thought the Lord opened the door, and if opened in the hearts of the people no power on earth could shut it. Now for the first time as between the two Assemblies the question of Organic Union comes up. He picked up the objections raised by the committee to Organic Union. He had never known of a woman preaching in a Northern Presbyterian Church. He had never heard of a case, except by rumor, of cases in Texas and the Southwest. Woman kept her place in the Northern Church just as she did in the Southern Church. When woman's missionary societies began to be formed women had to fight for their rights. As to separate African churches, the Northern Assembly had expressed itself as ready for that whenever the colored brother was. The report of the committee was the verdict of the jury before they had heard the evidence. If you know how political differences have been modified or how they may be modified, you know more than any member sitting on the floor of the Northern Assembly to-day. The only way to ascertain the facts was to appoint the committee to inquire. He said the facts had been secured thirty yearsago, and published in a pamphlet entitled "Distinctive Principles of the Southern Presbyterian Church." He cited instances where Southern ministers were filling pulpits in Northern churches. These men, when they went over, said they thought the differences not serious ones, or that they thought the Southern Church in the wrong. He had himself been in the Northern Church under a covenant that he should be asked no questions, and the covenant had been kept.

He argued that the facts could only be ascertained by the committee. The appointment was not asked that it lead to Organic Union. They did not know where it might lead. It might lead to a wide separation. The Assemblies wanted to know where they stood. They were not afraid of the light. They were not afraid of a committee of the Northern Assembly nor of our committee. We must appoint this committee, respond to this courtesy, or hereafter bear whatever blame there may be in continued separation. If it was found there were no differences then there might be Organic Union, but if there were differences, then these would be set forth, restated to our younger brethren so that they might see that there are radical differences between us if that be the case. The new generation did not appreciate the causes of the separation. New causes may have arisen. If so we ought to know it. There was every reason for the appointment of this committee. He was a friend of Organic Union and believed it right, but he had never yet seen the day when he thought Organic Union proper. He did not know whether the apples were ripe. Let us shake the tree a little and if the apple fell it might be ripe. We could try it and if it was ripe we could eat. The Presbyterian Church was the only one of the great religious bodies standing apart. His plan for the unification of Presbyterians was to have several conferences in sections and then have one great Assembly meeting from all sections. The question is upon us. It has met us. The question was too big for us to put one foot down and hold it down. It was too broad for us to pass it around. Jesus Christ was the greatest teacher of politeness, of true courtesy in the world. He put more true courtesy and politeness into one sentence than Lord Chesterfield put into the five volumes he wrote to his son, "How to be a gentleman," and that sentence was, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Courtesy is a matter of principle, not of expediency. We ought to appoint a committee. It was duty. It should be a committee representing the various sentiments of the Assembly. It should be a representative committee in whose hands the question would be safe.

Dr. Eugene Daniel said the question involved the very existence of the Presbyterian church. The principal argument for the ap-

Second Quarter.—Lesson XI.

June 10.— Passage of the Red Sea.

Exodus xiv. 19–29. Commit vss. 27–29.

Golden Text.—By faith they passed through the Red Sea. Heb. xi. 29.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Get a clear idea of the events since the last lesson, as follows: 1. While the Israelites were eating the feast of the Passover the first-born of Egypt were slain. This was at midnight of the 15th day of the month, which according to Hebrew counting began at six o'clock the previous evening (Ex. xii. 29). 2. The cry raised and the news spread abroad (xii. 30). 3. The imperative order to depart (vss. 31, 32). 4. The urgency of the Egyptians, the asking and giving of gifts (not borrowing" and "lending" as in the A. V.) and the hurried departure vss. 33–36). 5. From all parts of the land of "Rameses" (which was the same as Goshen, the new name being derived from the store-city they had built for Rameses II) towards the appointed rendezvouz which was the region of Succoth (vs. 37). M. Naville has demonstrated that this is identical with Pithom, the other store-city, which he discovered (See notes on Lesson VII). This is at a point a little west of Lake Timsah, about where the Oxford maps place Pi-hahiroth. The location of Rameses and Succoth on those maps is much too far to the southwest. The head of the column probably reached Succoth during the day of the 15th. Here they remained, probably provisioning themselves at Pithom, until the whole host had collected there, together with the mixed multitude spoken of in vs. 38. 6. The host being assembled and provisioned a start is made toward Canaan. They naturally took the short route which followed the coast and had proceeded until they reached the Great Wall, extending from the head of the Red Sea to the Mediterranean, called in Hebrew Shur, in Egyptian Khetam or Etham. They would have had no difficulty in passing this wall as they were not fugitives, but emigrants by permission of the king. But God was not willing for them to take the coast route which would have brought them into immediate conflict with the war-like Philistines, and commanded them to turn southward and encamp on the border of the Red Sea. (Read carefully xiii. 17-20; xiv. 2). To guide the movements of so great a host God who had appeared to Moses in the burning bush at Horeb, now appears in a pillar of cloud that shone like fire at night. The ancients often guided the movements of large masses by smoke in the day time and fire at night.

The location of the places named in xiv. 2 has not at present been settled. Supposing the sea to have the same bounds as formerly they would be not far from Suez, but many scholars contend that the sea then extended northward over the region now covered by the Bitter Lakes, which would locate these places further to the North. 7. Apparently this return is a capital blunder. The Egyptians have had time to recover from the first shock of their great disaster. The dead have been embalmed and the seven days mourning is over. They can look about them and see if there is nothing they can do to retrieve their losses and to alleviate their humiliation. The return southward on the Egyptian side of the wall gives the opportunity that wounded pride and cupidity could take advantage of. As God had forewarned Moses, Pharaoh thinks they are entrapped, and he orders a pursuit (vss. 3–9). 8. The situation is a critical and apparently a desperate one. The people murmur. Moses commands them to fall in marching order (the true rendering of "stand still" in vs. 13), and God commands Moses to stretch his rod towards the sea, that it may divide and make a path for the people, and tells him that the Egyptians will follow to their own destruction(vss. 9–18). Here the lesson begins.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson: the changed position of the cloudy pillar (vss. 19, 20); the act of Moses, the act of God, and the natural means used to divide the sea (vs. 21); the way opened (vs. 22); the infatuated pursuit (vs. 23); the troubling look, the clogged wheels, the revelation and panic (vss. 24, 25); the returning waters and the final overthrow (vss. 26–28); concluding statement (vs. 29, read also 30, 31).

Third Step Study any points of difficulty with your helps:

Vs. 19. The Angel of God, called in xiii. 21, and xiv. 24 the LORD, i. e., Jehovah. It is the Angel of the Covenant, the Second Person of the Trinity as we saw in Gen. xviii. 2, and xxxii. 24.

Vs. 21. Moses stretched, etc., that the result might be seen to be God's work and that honor might be put upon Moses as His representative.

By a strong east wind. A wind from the northeast with favorable conditions of tide occasionally lays bare shoals in the Gulf of Suez so that Dr. Niebuhr crossed here on a dromedary in 1762, and Napoleon attempted to cross in 1799. De Lesseps mentions that during the digging of the Suez Canal he had seen the Northern end of the sea blown almost dry, and again he had seen the water go far northward toward the Bitter Lakes. If the sea formerly extended further north no doubt similar conditions prevailed at points which are now dry land.

Vs. 22. Dry ground—i. e., as distinguished from water, not as distinguished from wet ground.

Waters a wall. The idea of perpendicular walls of water between which the Israelites passed is based upon wrong translations of Exodus xv. 8 and Ps. lxxviii. 13. Both passages, too, are highly poetic. The plain prose statement is that the deliverance took place by the Providential concurrence between an extraordinary north-east storm and Israel's need. Above the shoals would be a pocket of deep water; below, the sea would stretch away indefinitely; these two bodies of water were a protecting wall to Israel's flank on either side. God could, of course, have cleared a path for Israel between solid walls of water, but the Scriptures say that He did send the sea back by a strong east wind, and modern discoveries show the accuracy of the Scripture statement.

Vs. 23. The Egyptians pursued. It is not probable that the Egyptians knew that they were going into the sea. They were groping in the dark (vs. 20) and followed blindly the sound of the retreating Israelites. From Ps. lxxvii. 16–20 it appears that a blinding storm was raging. Whatever was strange in their surroundings the Egyptians attributed to this.

All Pharaoh's horses, i. e., all of this army, not necessarily or probably all in the Empire. But it was the flower of his host. The infantry, however, was apparently not in the pursuit.

Vs. 24. The morning watch. Probably at 2 a. m, as the watches were divided by the Hebrews. The darkness of the cloud will not avail to protect the Israelites when the dawn begins, so at the darkest hour of the night the Lord begins to use other means.

Looked forth. Not to see; it is a look of anger and judgment that is described. It probably indicates a flashing forth of supernatural light that revealed to the Egyptians their situation.

Vs. 25. Took off their chariot wheels. Better bound or clogged them as the Septuagint reads; to "move sideways" is the original meaning of the Hebrew, which well describes the motion of a disabled wheel. If they had been "taken off" instead of driving "heavily" they would not have driven at all. The bottom of the sea which gave safe passage to the Israelites would not support the heavy chariots of the Egyptians.

Vs. 25. Let us flee. The difficulty of driving increased until they were almost desperate, and then came the sudden light revealing to them their situation and then the panic seized them and they did the very worst thing they could have done. Had they kept on, the head of the column might have escaped, but attempting to turn, the whole host was thrown into confusion. They only met the returning waters as they wheeled (vs. 27).

Vs. 28. All the host of Pharaoh. Pharaoh himself is nowhere said to have been with them. It is said that God would be honoured upon Pharaoh, and even that "Pharaoh pursued;" but the first expression is equally true in either case, and the second is used in the familiar military sense. In the explicit enumeration of the force in vss. 9, 23, 26, 28, and xv. 4, etc, Pharaoh is not included.

If Menephtah was upon the throne he lived long enough after this disaster to erect a monument to his first-born Seti-Menephtah who had been associated with him in the government. The monuments nowhere record this disaster, as is natural. They were erected to perpetuate the pride and not the humiliation of the Egyptian kings. But their silence is more eloquent than their speech. The last days of Menephtah end in obscurity. His mummy has never been found, the time and circumstances of his death are unknown. The kingdom that had been so mighty in his father's days relapses into anarchy. Two unknown usurpers follow Menephtah in quick succession Before and after them is an interregnum, and the XIX Dynasty that rose in such splendor goes out in darkness. It was forty years before Egypt recovered.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson as usual. We omit ours because the fuller notes necessary to the understanding of the story take up the space.

Fifth Step. With a reference Bible and concordance look out the allusions to the crossing of the Red Sea in the Old and New Testaments

Sixth Step. The great practical lesson is the safety of God's people when they are in the way God has commanded, and the duty of following God anywhere in faith that He will bring them through. It is a good illustration of the beginning of the Christian life, leaving everything behind and staking everything upon God's promises.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Take a map of Egypt and the Sinaitic Peninsula (No.4 in the Oxford Bibles) and show the isthmus connecting Egypt and Arabia and separating the western arm of the Red Sea from the Mediterranean. Tell your scholars that the Red Sea may have extended further north in the days of Moses, over the region now covered by the Bitter Lakes, and that from the north end of the Red Sea (wherever it was) a Wall to protect the Egyptian frontier extended to the Mediterranean. Tell them that the land of Rameses was the same as Goshen, that Succoth was about where Pi-hahiroth is on the map. Mark a North and South line for the wall, and from Succoth trace a northeasterly path till you come to the wall (Etham); then turn the path abruptly southward on the western (or Egyptian side of the wall; extend this down to the northern end of the Red Sea. The Egyptians followed from the North (Zoan), and to the South you will point out the mountains. Thus they were hemmed in, or "entangled in the land." Draw out the story from the class and disabuse their minds of the idea that the crossing of the Red Sea was the same night as the Pass over. Make a brief Bible Reading on this event and use it in the class, impressing the lessons of faith, obedience, and separation from the world.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

pointment of the committee was that courtesy demanded it. Courtesy proscribes undue insistence in the matter of extending an invitation. He argued that the Northern Assembly had been unduly insistent and the responsibility rested with them. Ever since the close of the war they had been insistent. The whole proceedings of fraternal greetings was due to a spirit of Organic Union. At Vicksburg, Miss., in 1884 delegates from the Northern Assembly departed from their mission so far as to suggest Organic Union and attempted to sow the seed in our own body. Every step taken had been with a view to Organic Union. The Southern Presbyterian Church was not responsible. She had declared her position. She preferred to be let alone about this question. If there was to be any courtesy shown it should be shown to the Southern Church in respecting her wishes.

The correspondence of large bodies by telegraph was undignified. It was insisted here that without giving the Church at home a chance to act that this Assembly rush into this matter. It would be sufficient to reply with affectionate greeting and say that we don't see our way clear to accept the proposition. The rights of the great Southern Presbyterian Church were involved and the whole Church should be consulted. When this Assembly turns its face northward and turns its back upon the great constituency whose interests were involved it does wrong. The principles involved were clearly set forth in the committee's paper. The distinctive principle of the political deliverances of the Northern Church was an insurmountable barrier. If the differences between the churches on the question of negro evangelization were so great that the Birmingham conference report was rejected, how would the other great questions be disposed of? One negro man could sit on the platform with fifteen or twenty Northern preachers, but if we broke down the barrier and let it be understood that we would welcome them, not only ecclesiastical anarchy but social ruin would result. For the safety of our institutions and of our homes let us not run this risk.

Concerning the privileges allowed women, we would stand where we were until they changed.

Lastly, the question involved the laying away of the dearest thing to his heart—the laying away of the distinctive Southern Presbyterian Church in its white clothes of the grave. It meant the blotting out of the title of the Southern Presbyterian Church. It meant no more Southern Presbyterian Assemblies, no more conferences in committee-rooms as we have had the past few days. He would never vote for any committee to even talk about the death of this noble branch of the church of God. He opposed Organic Union. He did not believe in it. A wail would go up that would be heard all over the land when a vote was taken to lay the Southern Presbyterian Church in her grave.

Other speeches were made pro and con, for which we have not space; that of Dr. McPheeters was particularly able. The substitute was voted down and the report of the committee was then adopted by a vote of 91 to 67.

The following dissent [given in this place for the better understanding of the whole matter] was offered and accepted next day;

1. The plainest dictates of Christian courtesy seem to us to demand the appointment of such a committee in reply to the fraternal spirit manifested by the Northern Assembly.

2. The issues which once ran the cleavage line between the two communions, in the opinion of your protestants, either do not now exist at all, or are not as potent as they were more than a generation ago. We are convinced that a mutual fraternal conference will disclose a closer relationship in customs, aims, principles and doctrine than is now suspected by either party.

3. The interest of our own beloved Church, especially in our border territory, will be best conserved by such a course.

4. The higher interests of the Redeemer's Kingdom, irrespective of denominational lines, jeopardized by the invidious inroads of worldliness, rationalism and infidelity, demand a closer fellowship of God's people for mutual helpfulness and more effective testimony and work.

5. We are seriously concerned that nothing short of the surrender of principle should be left undone to heal the breach now dividing the two churches lest the sin of schism be justly laid at our door.

Signed by twenty members as follows: Wm. W. Elwang, W. P. Waite, J. P. Morrow, A. F. Hass, J. W. Smock, G. E. Campbell, John Thomas Porter, H. S. Yerger, C. E. Graham, J. M. P. Otts, John G. Barkley, W. S. McClintic, John W. Wallace, J. A. Dickson, Charles C. Carson, C. J. Ralston, R. A. Robinson, J. W. Mosely, George D. White, J. M. Plowden.

A committee was appointed to answer the protest. This committee afterwards reported that as reasons were given in the report adopted by the Assembly there was no need to answer.

SEVENTH DAY.

Thursday, May 24th.

The report of the committee on Theological Seminaries was docketed. The committee on Narratives was adopted. It is generally favorable, reporting steady growth, some improvement in Sabbath Observance, but sad neglect of Family Worship.

The protest of Mr. Elwang and others we anticipated and published above. In the afternoon the discussion of licensure was resumed,

The majority report which was adopted recommended the adoption of the report of the ad interim committee. This report (which we will hereafter publish in full) transferred to the examination for ordination many of the present features of the examination for licensure, including the critical exercises, and retained at the examination for licensure, besides the literary examinations, only the following: "on the system of doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith and the Shorter Catechism; and on his knowledge of the English Bible." He was also to give a lecture and a sermon, and must have studied divinity one year. The licensure was valid for three years removable at the will of Presbytery.

The minority report favored the sending down of the Mecklenburg overture.

Dr. Rosebro's proposition was to combine the two. This was ruled out on a point of order but after the adoption of the majority report the Mecklenburg overture was referred to a committee to put into shape consistent with the other overture for sending down to the Presbyteries.

The famous appeal by Charleston Presbytery from the Synod of South Carolina to the General Assembly—known as the Means case was taken up. By request of the Moderator, Dr. Graham, Judge Lapsley occupied the moderator's chair. After discussion for "getting the bearings," as the American calls it, the Assembly adjourned.

EIGHTH DAY.

Friday, May 25th.

The whole of the forenoon and afternoon were spent on the Means case,

On the next morning (Saturday) the following report was made:

The committee appointed to formulate the judgment of the court in the cause of the appeal of the Charleston Presbytery against the judgment of the Synod of South Carolina, in the complaint of Ainsley H. Monteith and Emma M. Montieth vs. the session of the Second Presbyterian church of Columbia, S. C., and subsequently vs. Charleston Presbytery, would submit the following as the judment of the Assembly:

This appeal having been heard according to our process of law, the Assembly finds:

1. That the record of the cause does not clearly show that the aforesaid Sadie Means came before the session of the Second Presbyterian church in Columbia, S. C., to make known to the court, as provided in paragraph 234, that she was guilty of violating the Sabbath by working in a telephone office on the Lord's day, and, therefore, the judgment lacks the statements which authorize a judgment without process.

2. The decision of the session was reached without trial, as provided in paragraph 174, and these two paragraphs, 234 and 174, limit the session's power.

3. The decision was made in undue haste and at the first and only session of the court, so far as the record shows.

4. The sentence of the suspension from the communion was of excessive severity.

Premises considered, it is the judgment of this Assembly that the appeal be not sustained and that the decision of the Synod of South Carolina be affirmed. In connection with this judgment the Assembly deems it wise to reaffirm its immutable conviction as to the universal and perpetual obligation to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

On May 3rd, 1894, at her residence near Clio, Iredell county, N. C., Mrs. AGNES M. CLARK, widow of late James Clark, in the 72d year of her age. Mrs. C. was a consistent follower of the blessed Master, having identified herself with God's people in early life. She was meek and quiet, submitting cheerfully to her lot. In her latter days, she was a great sufferer, but she was resigned and willing to depart and be with Christ. Truly a mother in Israel has passed away, having three daughters and many kind friends to deplore their loss.

At her home near Pioneer Mills, N. C., on May 14th, Mrs. MARY E. PORTER, in the seventy-third year of her age.

Mrs. Porter had been a member of Rocky River church for fifty-six years and ten days, and through years of intense suffering had witnessed a good confession. Her husband and four children survive, and thank God for the precious word: "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

FOR THE FAMILY.

GROWING OLD.

Old—we are growing old;
Going on through a beautiful road,
Finding earth a more blessed abode;
Nobler work by our hands to be wrought,
Freer paths for our hope and our thought,
Because of the beauty the years unfold,
We are cheerfully growing old!

Old—we are growing old:
Going up where the sunshine is clear;
Watching grander horizons appear
Out of clouds that enveloped our youth;
Standing firm on the mountains of truth;
Because of the glory the years unfold,
We are joyfully growing old.

Old—we are growing old:
Going into the gardens of rest
That glow through the gold of the West,
Where the rose and the amaranth blend,
And each path is the way to a friend;
Because of the peace that the years unfold,
We are thankfully growing old.

Old—are we growing old?
Life blooms as we travel on
Up the hills, into fresh, lovely dawn;
We are children who do but begin
The sweetness of life to win.
Because heaven is in us, to bud and unfold,
We are younger for growing old!

SOME OLD-FASHIONED USEFUL PLANTS.

Down in French town the other day, an old Creole lady—a dear, white-haired grandmother, who has been long noted for making the most fragrant tisanes in the old faubourg—was discussing the new methods of gardening, and deplored the utter absence of the old-time herbs which every good mother kept growing in special beds for use in sickness in the family. She missed now the old-fashioned sweet basil, once such a favorite perfume with royalty and accredited with so many virtues. In Queen Elizabeth's time she said sweet sprigs of basil were offered guests at the palace, and an old book says, "the fragrant leaves when bruised and smelled is good for the head and the heart. Its seeds cureth infirmities of the brain, taketh away melancholy and maketh one merrie and glad. The touch of a faire ladye's hand caused it to thrive." And there is rosemary—once so popular and used in profusion at weddings and funerals. Wild thyme, with its pungent ordor, makes up nicely in a bouquet where fragrance is desired. Pennyroyal, though homely and fiery, is much disliked by the mosquito, which will not trouble the face when well rubbed with pennyroyal. In cases of violent colds the strong teas made of herbs are very beneficial. Tansy an "old man" possesses a peculiar odor and are valued for beauty and antiquity, and the belles of a century ago washed their faces in buttermilk in which tansy had been steeped, to drive away freckles. Chamomile and life everlasting, and the elder flowers are prized by the Creoles of today for their medicinal effects. Chamomile tea will relieve the hardest kind of cramps and pains in the bones, the elder leaf tea will induce perspiration in fever when almost everything else fails. The different mints are very valuable medicinally and are relished by the majority of people as flavoring in piquant suaces for meats, fish and fowl. Sage is also valuable medicinally and who will think of eating roast pig, turkey or goose without its savory addition. Parsley is a beautiful garnish for salads, meats, and many vegetables. And then it makes a beautiful ornament growing in hanging baskets in the windows. Really, in the cultivation of some of these old-time garden favorites, some enterprising woman might make the labor and time expended pay, for there is always a demand in the French market and in the drug stores for clean, well-dried herbs, and besides it offers a fascinating employment to any woman to rescue these herbs from exile and give them a place as in the days gone by in the home garden in places where they will thrive.—*N. Things Useful.

Try brightening silverware by rubbing it with oatmeal.

Washing out refrigerators with soda water.

Warm dishes for the table by immersing them in hot water, not by standing them on a hot stove.

A good liquid manure for house plants is made by dissolving one pound of nitrate of soda, two pounds of good superphosphate of lime, and two pounds of fresh wood ashes in a barrel of water.

Caper Sauce.—Two tablespoonfuls of flour and a half-cupful of butter beaten to a cream, then add a pint of boiling water. Set the mixture on the fire and stir it continuously until heated to the boiling point; then add salt and pepper to taste, three tablespoonfuls of capers and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. This is the best sauce to serve with lamb.

Southern Strawberry Shortcake.—Make dough as if for beaten biscuit, roll the whole of it in a round cake an inch thick. Stick holes about in it, and bake like biscuit. Prepare the strawberries two or three hours before they are needed, that a quantity of juice may be extracted. Make the berries very sweet. When the cake is done, split it open, and while it is hot, pour the juice slowly upon the crumb side until they are saturated, then put the berries evenly on them. Put one piece on the top of the other, like jelly cake. Cut in pie-shaped pieces and serve with plenty of cream.

Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

WHO LIKES THE RAIN?

"I," said the duck, "I call it fun,
For I have my little red rubbers on;
They make a cunning three-toed track,
In the soft, cool mud. Quack! Quack!"

"I," cried the dandelion, "I,
My roots are thirsty, my buds are dry;"
And she lifted her little yellow head
Out of her green and grassy bed.

"I hope 'twill pour! I hope 'twill pour!"
Croaked the tree toad at his gray bark door;
"For with a broad leaf for a roof
I am perfectly weather proof."

Sang the brook. "I laugh at every drop,
And wish they never need to stop
Till a big river I grow to be,
And could find my way to the sea."

Building a Nest.

It was almost milking-time. Freckles sat on a bank near the gray house under the great willow, waiting for the cows to come home. John and Rover had just gone up one of the big green hills which stood on every side about the house, to call them down.

"So ho! so ho!" he called, with a voice like a trumpet. Freckles was tired, and for once did not care to go. By-and-by they came down from the hill and along by the brook, then slowly up to the barn. Brownie, the red cow, was decorated with a long wreath of clematis which had caught on her horns and hung down her neck.

They rushed eagerly into the barn, where Rover threw himself down by the door. Spot, the yellow cat, was so glad it was milking-time that she sat down by Rover's head, and, putting her cheek up close to his, rubbed it back and forth hard.

Four young barn-swallows were sitting in a row in the square hole in the peak of the barn.

"There are those young "swallers," said Freckles, reflectively. "They've just come out of that nest up under the rafters, I s'pose. Wonder what makes swallers build in such funny places anyhow? There are the chimney-swallers now, gluing sticks into the chimney, where it's all dark and smoky. And these barn-swallers paste their mud and sticks right up under the rafters. I should think the young uns would break their necks, sure. Why can't they build on a good big beam same's the phœbe bird does?"

Just then, old Teak, the father swallow, lighted on the fence close by.

"Those children up there," he remarked, "are old enough to fly; but they'll never do it as long as I feed them. So I may as well stop and talk to you awhile."

"All right," said Freckles, who was somewhat surprised. "What are you going to tell me?"

"About nests," said Teak, "You wondered why I built up there. Well, I'll tell you. It's safer."

"Why is it?" said Freckles.

"Of course it is. If you built on a beam, the cats could get you, and boys could steal your eggs."

"But don't you fall and break your necks?"

"Oh, yes; sometimes the babies do, but not often."

"Well, I know I'd rather build in a tree," said Freckles. "It's a great deal nicer."

"Do you think so?" said Teak. But the hawks can get you, and blue jays, and everything,"

"But it is easier," persisted Freckles. "You just lay sticks in a crotch and put in some grass, and it's all done."

"All right; let's see you do it," laughed Teak, as he flew away.

So Freckles found a fine place on the low bough of an apple tree, collected a lot of sticks, and began; but do what he would he could not make the twigs stay in the crotch.

"Mean old thing!" he said at last, sitting down and whacking the ground with a stick.

"Why don't you try mud?" said Robin, who was passing through the tree.

So Freckles brought some mud from the brook; but it was a long time before he could make that stay.

"Fasten it together with hairs," suggested a chippy.

"I'm sure I don't see how you find hairs so easy," grumbled Freckles, after he had hunted all over the barnyard, and at last had to pull one out of the old mare's tail. When he got it he couldn't make it go at all, and he threw it down in disgust.

He fetched more mud from the brook and plastered a great mass of it on the top of a big horizontal limb. Then he succeeded in putting a few sticks on top.

"You put on too much mud," said Robin, who looked in again. "You want just enough, that's all. Now you must get in and turn around and around to make it hollow."

"Look at that," screamed the oriole: "he calls that thing a nest. The best way to build a nest is to weave a bag, as I do, out of grass and string and all sorts of soft things. Then it swings and swings on the top of the bough, and is, oh, so cool and nice!"

"Yes, but you have a bill," said Freckles, who was not at all proud of his nest; "of course you can make a good nest."

"Two hands and a mouth, too, you've got to work with," sniffed the oriole, as he flew away.

"Don't care," said Freckles; "birds are made to build nests and boys are not;" and he whacked his nest till it fell to the ground.

"Don't you like it?" said Teak, who had just flown down again. "I thought you said it was easy."

"'Tis," said Freckles, stoutly; "but I'd rather build on the ground, after all."

"But the boys will find you," cheeped Teak, in great excitement; "and the cats will get you, and the farmers will mow over you, and the cows will step on you, and everything dreadful will happen."

"I don't care, said Freckles. "I don't believe all you say. I've noticed that there are just as many ground birds as any other."

Just then John and his father came in with the full milk-pails, and Freckles trotted behind them, along with old Spot, for he was almost as hungry as she was.

How Maggie Helped.

BY SIDNEY DAYRE.

"I'm going to pick berries all summer, and sell them down at the hotel. All I can't sell I'm going to dry, and its queer if I can't get enough money to buy some shoes and clothes for winter. Then I'll go to school."

So Maggie laid out her summer's work. A part of the day she was busy in her home, but there were many hours in which she could do as she pleased with her time. Her mother was dead.

"If it wasn't for that, I'd have gone to school every winter," she would sometimes assure herself, with a pitiful shake of her head. "She would have managed it for me somehow."

Her father was a man of bad habits, and spent little of his time at home. Maggie was pretty sure of having enough to eat, but beyond that she had to look out for herself.

"Can't you go berrying with me to-day, Nan? I'll help carry Billy," Maggie asked, one day, of a friend of hers who came along with slow steps, leading a sturdy baby boy.

"No," said Nan, sorrowfully. "It ain't no use for me to go. I can't see to pick the berries when they're right before me. And I don't care to carry Billy any more, because I stumble so, and I might fall and hurt him."

"Oh, Nan! your eyes are not that bad, are they?"

"Yes, they are," said Nan. "They get worse all the time."

Maggie went on with her pail, and after a few hours of patient work carried it, full of the ripe, red fruit, to the summer hotel, where she was always sure of good sales.

Nan's mother caught up with her as she turned to go home.

"What is the matter, Mrs. Mott?" asked Maggie, as she saw her wiping the tears from her eyes.

"It's Nan—the child. Her eyes are so bad, and are getting worse."

"Couldn't a doctor make them well?" Maggie ventured to suggest.

"Perhaps so. But how is the likes of me to pay for doctors? Perhaps she'll be blind some day."

Maggie walked on to her lonely home, full of dismayed thought of Nan's eyes. What an awful thing. Never again to see the sunshine and birds and flowers Never to see any one's face. Maggie shut her eyes to try how the darkness seemed, then opened them quickly, half in fright.

But God is so good. How could he let Nan be blind? She would pray to him. Had not her Sunday-school teacher said time and again that God hears the prayers of his little ones?

Maggie prayed so earnestly and in such faith that when she next met Nan she more than half expected to hear her say:

"I can see better."

But Nan did not. The lids drooped over the pretty blue eyes, unable to bear the sweet sunshine.

Two or three days later Maggie again walked home with Mrs. Mott, and this time Nan's mother talked excitedly.

"Some of the ladies at the hotel has been talking to me about Nan's eyes," she said. "They say it takes a great doctor in the city, that does nothing but attend to folks' eyes. And one of the ladies says she can get Nan into a hospital where he will make her eyes well."

Maggie gave a little cry of delight.

"Let's go and tell her of it," she said.

Nan listened, her grave little face lighting up as she heard the great news.

"But it'll cost some money to get me there, mother," she said.

"Yes, darling. But I'll manage it somehow, for the sake of your sweet eyes."

"But—there's Billy! Who would take care of Bill?"

There was a short silence.

"Why—Sarah would, or Jane."

"No; Sarah couldn't. She has all the work to do, and Jane's too little. She would let him fall into the water, or stray away and get lost. I guess I can't go."

"We'd see after him somehow," said Sarah.

But Nan hugged Billy to her and shook her head.

"He'd be scolded and cuffed 'round" she thought to herself, although she did not say it. "I couldn't bear it.

Maggie walked home with a heavy weight at her heart.

That night there came a new thought.

"I might take care of Billy. I might bring him home here every day."

But it was not a welcome thought.

"I don't want to. I'd have to give up my berry picking. Then I couldn't go to school. No—I couldn't do it. Billy's none of mine any way."

She tried to put it out of her head and go to sleep. And she did, for sleep comes kindly to bless weary workers. But the thought came with the earliest morning; this time with a flash of light into her very heart.

"Perhaps God wants me to help him. Perhaps that the way he's going to do it. Oh, I will, I will!"

There was a little fuss made about it, but the end of it was that Nan went to the city.

The weeks were long before she came back with eyes beaming brightly. Billy was rather a troublesome little fellow, requiring all Maggie's time and forbearance.

But do you think she ever regretted what she had undertaken? What would you give to be able to feel that a lifetime of the glad sight of this beautiful world had been won for some one partly though your help?

I do not know whether Maggie went to school that next winter or not. But should you not say that the loving Father who looked after Nan's eyes would also have tender care for his little one who did what she could to help him?

A Popular Commentary on the Old and New Testament: Critical, Practical and Explanatory. 4 vols. in box, 8vo., cloth, $8. Half mor. $10.

A New Edition, containing the complete unabridged notes in clear type on good paper. With copious index, numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent D. D.

FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Our General Assembly has settled the question who is to be Secretary and who are the members of our Executive Committee for the year before us. Our churches have responded promptly and so generously as to meet all our obligations. But a few things require present thought. The first is that a large number of new missionaries were sent out last year and a larger amount than in past years will be necessary to support them. The second follows that there is great need to send forth more missionaries to meet increasing demands from our own stations and to establish new stations fairly within our reach and obligation. In order to do this there must be still larger contributions to this work. Last year in sending forth some of the new missionaries the committee acted somewhat upon its own faith and GOD greatly honored that faith in the offerings for the cause. But the committee cannot feel justified in acting upon their own faith merely as they are only representatives of the Church. If the committee could be assured that the Church or any sufficient portion of the Church, or a praying portion of its ministers even, had faith that GOD would provide the means they ought to act upon that faith. They are shut up to the evidences of this in the May contributions to this cause and can send forth more missionaries only as these warrant. A third is that many of the churches and individuals who responded to the urgent calls of last year did so in the idea that the stringency of the times made this necessary. In this they were partly right. The danger is that they will not realize that these gifts have raised our standard higher and put upon our whole Church the necessity of coming up to that and show that we can do that much and more if we will.

There are many encouragements to the churches to do their duty in this matter. The chief of these is always GOD'S blessing upon the workers and the work which is shown in the results in the field and the blessing on the churches which are giving. This will be apparent to any who read the Missionary, as all our people ought to do, and by comparing the statistics and history of the churches which contribute to this cause with those which do not. It ought to be said, for it is richly deserved, that the Prayer Calendar prepared by the editor of the Missionary, Rev. D. C. RANKIN, is an excellent help and should be the calendar for all our homes. The next encouragement is in the number of churches and individuals that are supporting missionaries. The Central Church of Kansas City undertook the support of our late Secretary Rev. Dr. M. H. HOUSTON and enabled him to go forth promptly to his former field. We understand that an elder in our Asheville church undertakes the support of Rev. W. H. SHEPPARD our missionary pioneer to Africa. The church of Fayetteville, N. C., is bestirring itself to the privilege and honor of supporting Rev. R. B. GRINNAN on his return to Japan. These are mere examples of what is being done and what many more churches and groups of churches may do. It should be noted here that our missionaries are practicing self-denial to enter and do the work. Our next copy of the Missionary we learn privately will give a touching illustration of this self-denial in the case of one of the women who sold her all, and gave it all that she might go to Africa. We know how our missionaries in China have given largely of their already small salaries that the work might not be diminished. The report of this past Assembly shows marked economy and reduction in the office expenses at Nashville and the plans laid out by the Assembly are for a continuance of this to the last possible degree. Thus our churches may rest assured that all contributions to this cause will be to a growing work and enlarging field, to workers practicing self-denial in all things, and through agents charged and laboring to administer their responsibilities with the utmost prudence, vigor and economy. We may challenge comparison with any sister Church, Committee or Board of Directors, in work, workers and management.

Still many of our churches have given nothing to this cause. Either elders or ministers have failed to give the people an opportunity to partake of this privilege of giving to send the gospel to the ends of the earth. One chief reason is that we have despised the day of small things. We have too often thought there was no need to take a collection because it would be so small. That is a mistake. If every one of our weak churches would give a little, the total would make hundreds of dollars and would send the gospel of salvation and of healing and help to thousands of perishing souls and suffering bodies. Families or individuals might get from our Committee or use a small box in some convenient place to put a penny or more as a thank-offering for every mercy from GOD to be put in the annual collection or send to our committee in Nashville. In our Sabbath-schools every teacher, where some other system is not practiced, might have a box for the class and if two pennies are brought by each member of the class, let one be put in the box, and the other be given to school expenses or some other good cause. These boxes might be opened and reported in the collection as part of the Children's Day exercises. This will give some reason for all our Sabbath-schools and churches to observe this Children's Day. The Ladies Bible class in one school known to us has adopted the rule of giving one penny each for this cause on each Sabbath. This year they reported eleven dollars. It is the gathering of littles and taking collections even if small and sending these little sums to our treasurer that must be more encouraged and practiced. We may lay up treasures in Heaven as ministers by seeing that all our churches, however feeble, have an opportunity to contribute to this cause, as elders by seeing to this in our vacant churches, and individual members by giving something however little. We can give something and what we can give it is our duty to give. If any of our churches have not taken the annual collection for Foreign Missions in May we beg you for the obedience of CHRIST to do so at once. Preachers and people alike will be held accountable for neglect in this solemn obligation.

Readers of our columns have had this cause presented weekly by our field secretary for the Synod, Rev. T. R. SAMPSON, and our Synod has been a leader in organizing and giving for this cause. Still we feel bound to make this special and urgent appeal to all readers to be sharers of the honor and joy of giving something to send the Gospel to the whole world.

AS WE EXPECTED THE NORTHERN papers are rejoicing at the 67 votes in the Southern Assembly for appointing a committee of conference on the subject of Organic Union; they count them all as expressing a desire for reunion. They are totally out, of course, but if it makes them happy why should we interfere?

OUR READERS WILL BE DISAPPOINTED at not having before them the conclusion of our Assembly correspondence. Copy did not reach us in time for this issue, but they will enjoy it in the next.

A CORRECT VERSION.

The reports of the General Assembly made by the Nashville papers, as we have heretofore stated, were unusually satisfactory. It could not be expected however, that they would be verbally accurate. We have it in our power, now, to give a full outline of Dr. DANIEL'S argument on Organic Union and here present it:

Dr. DANIEL began his speech by giving the exact state of the question. The proposition before the Assembly was, to appoint the Committee of Conference. The argument in favor of this proposition was, in three words, "Courtesy demands it." This argument the speaker proposed to overthrow by a series of consecutive propositions:

1. Courtesy in matters of invitation proscribes undue insistence on the part of the one inviting. Every hostess knows that it is in bad form to urge a guest to partake of an article of food whether he desires it or not. Now, from first to last, the Northern Church has pressed this matter of Organic Union upon the Southern Church beyond all bounds of propriety. The South has always manifested a disinclination against it, and politely and patiently declined it, but still it is urged upon her until the insistency amounts almost to a positive demand. "Fraternal Relations" appear to have been desired merely as a stepping-stone to Organic Union, and representatives of the Northern Church commissioned to extend fraternal greetings to us have misused their position by injecting into their salutations discussions of Organic Union, as at Vicksburg in 1884, when on the very floor of the Assembly, they attempted to sow the seed of union in our own body. The South has been patient under this insistency. With politeness and tact she has repeatedly shown her preference to be let alone about this matter. And now, if against all propriety, the issue is forced upon her again, the responsibility of positive declination is not with her, but with those who will not respect her wishes.

2. In matters of invitation, courtesy demands that writing shall be respectfully answered in writing, and a telegram by a courteously worded telegram: this, and nothing more.

3. Courtesy in matters of invitation demands due regard for the rights of all parties whom the acceptance or rejection of that invitation may affect. Now the Northern Church is not the only party interested in this matter. Our conduct to-day is to have a bearing upon the sacred rights of the whole Southern Presbyterian Church. Courtesy demands that these rights shall be respected. It is proposed here that suddenly and by undignified telegram we rush into a measure that may affect our Church for years, if not forever. Is no courtesy due to our grand old men who so long have counselled us, and to the vast constituency that lies behind us? Shall we not hear from them before we take a step that must bind them as well as ourselves? Shall we turn our faces toward the North and, in order to be courteous to them, discourteously turn our backs upon our own people whose sacred rights we are bound by every obligation to regard?

4. Courtesy forbids me to ask a man to do anything against his known convictions, and requires that not one step should be taken towards accepting an invitation that requires the sacrifice of principle. Now it is impossible to deny that the Northern and Southern Churches are separated by a deep difference of principles. (1). There is the difference as to the right of the Church to make political deliverances. This right, the Northern Church claims and exercises. This right, she expressly and specifically stipulated for herself when, in establishing fraternal relations with us, she practically reaffirmed her deliverances on "loyalty and rebellion." On this issue we originally separated, and the issue is to-day just as it was thirty years ago. (2) The difference as to the obligation to unite negro churches and white churches; they affirm it, we deny it. In our views, their position on this subject is unscriptural and must lead in the South to ecclesiastical anarchy and social ruin. (3) The difference as to the teaching of the Bible with reference to woman's sphere and work. They hold that she may address popular audiences of men and women in the churches. They practice this thing. The difference between us here is deep and involves the meaning of God's holy Word. We feel that we cannot be loyal to the Bible and do as they do about this matter. Now, if on all these things these deep principles separate us, must not courtesy require them to respect our convictions and not ask us to do that which our views of GOD'S word forbid us to do? If it be said, as is said by some sanguine brethren, that they will change as to these things, is it not plain that the change should come first, and the step toward Organic Union afterward?

Finally, the speaker was opposed to appointing the committee because the object of conference was to be the death of the Southern Presbyterian Church. This, the speaker was unwilling to think of, much less to confer about. Apart from all other considerations, the Southern Church had a right to a distinct, independent life of her own. She had made a glorious history. This conference meant that her very name might be blotted out; that there should be no more meetings of her General Assemblies; that all her executive committees must be abolished and all her missionary enterprises must be abandoned as belonging distinctly to herself; in one word, the startling proposition was that the Southern Presbyterian Church must die. The speaker assured the brethren that on that day when the bell sounded out the knell of our beloved Church, there would be a wail as of a mighty heart-breaking all over the land.

HERE AND THERE.

THE GIFTS OF THE HOLY GHOST. We rejoice that our Committee of Publication has issued the work before us by this title. We rejoice first because it is a second recent work from our presses honoring the HOLY GHOST, secondly, because the able author has wrought well this series of studies, and thirdly, because the writer sustains the directors in their selection of him as qualified to fill the chair of Theology in Union Seminary Virginia. This book is happily dedicated to his predecessor and friend in that chair our honored and distinguished Dr. R. L. DABNEY.

The subject gives wider range than any would expect without such study as evidently appears here. We enter here our earnest hope that the professor will give his classes the benefit of these studies which show spiritual strength and vision as truly as intellectual force and clearness.

From much study of this subject we cannot give as wide range to the title of this book as the author does. To us, the gifts are more definite and particular and are rather a class of the manifold ministries of the HOLY GHOST, than the workings presented here. But that is a question of definition and classification which would be better suited to a review in some magazine than this newspaper notice. We have definite ideas about it, but maintain them only as a caveat but not a criticism here and now.

This work is philosophical and practical, theological and ethical. Its style is lucid and alluring. We hope the Rev. Prof. C. R. VAUGHAN, D. D., who has taken us helpfully into fields not as familiar as they ought to be will stop and make another nearer and distinct study for us of the Gifts of the SPIRIT as a distinct class of (what we would wish him to name these studies) the work or operations of the HOLY GHOST. In doing so we feel sure that every reader of this book will wish to be a reader of that.

ANOTHER GOOD BOOK: WE HAVE lately received from the publishers the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society of Boston and Chicago—a copy of Letters on Baptism by a minister who was in good standing in the Baptist Church for twenty-five years. His learning and ability caused their publication society to request him to prepare a statement of Baptist belief. In a careful restudy without reading a single Pedobaptist book this Dr. FAIRFIELD came to the conclusion that the Greek word Baptizo does not mean immerse in the New Testament. His letters were written to a brother to show his reasons for change of belief. They are clear and convincing that the mode of baptism is not taught in the word. The conclusion is inevitable and true. We wish to commend this work which can be had of the publishers for seventy-five cents and has 250 scholarly and fraternal pages, to any of our readers who are unsettled as to the mode of baptism. This book is really something new and fresh on this subject. It is readable and convincing throughout. It is all the stronger for presenting reasons for conclusions reached from the study of a scholar who was studying with the avowed purpose of controverting those views.

IT CERTAINLY WAS A GRATIFYING announcement that the Stated Clerk of the Northern Assembly made that 72,000 members had been received into the Church during the past year on Confession of Faith. This is 13,000 more than in any previous year in the history of the Church. The financial showing while not discouraging, when the pressure of the times is considered is not all that could be desired—there has been a falling off in contributions to some of the causes.

THERE WILL NOT BE ANOTHER Brooklyn Tabernacle. Dr. TALMAGE after the fire promptly gave out that he would not preach in a tabernacle not built on solid cash—$250,000 in hand before the first lick was struck.

SURELY OUR NORTHERN BRETHREN do enjoy in large measure the favor of PROVIDENCE. Again they have emerged safely and solidly from the contest that at one time threatened to cause them so much trouble in the future. They declined to sustain the appeal of Dr. SMITH by an overwhelming majority.

THIS DOES NOT NECESSARILY QUIET contention, but it greatly strengthens the orthodox party in the Chuich. We note that Dr. THOMAS C. HALL declares that many ministers holds views as pronounced, or even more pronounced than Dr. SMITH and Dr. BRIGGS and that these acknowledge the authority of the Assembly only over each individual case as it may come up for judicial process. This can mean nothing more nor less than that the Church is to be continued to be agitated on this subject. Just what good is ultimately to be accomplished by this does not appear.

MOST IMPORTANT ACTION IS THAT concerning the theological seminaries, which we take to mean simply if the seminaries are to receive the endorsement of the Church the control of their property—some $9,000,000 or $10,000,000—and the government of the institution must be placed absolutely with the Church. It is a very drastic remedy, yet desperate diseases require desperate remedies. We are not sure that our people would care to turn over our seminaries to the absolute control of the Northern Assembly.

THAT IS NOT A QUESTION FOR US, happily. The decision reverses former deliverances and it is by no means certain it will secure acquiescence. The seminaries may decline, but if any consent their increased patronage will doubtless eventually draw the others in.

FAITH'S PRAYER.

O blessed life that lives to serve,
In service gave itself for me,
In service triumphed over death,
Now live in me the life of faith;
That by its love-lit ministry,
Thy children dying in the night,
May find in thee the life, the light.
The peace of God, the overthrow
Of pain, and sin, and death, and woe,
And all the powers of wrong and ill,
And live to do their Father's will.

PSALM XXXII.

BY REV. R. W. ALEXANDER.

Here we have the expression of the soul before and after pardon.

There is in this beautiful little Psalm a sweet, and, at the same time, a grand blending of scrrow and joy—the stinging blistering agony of a soul overwhelmed in the meshes of sin, and then the rapture and bliss of that soul when the "everlasting arms" have reached down and lifted it from the filthy slough and have restored to it the "joys of salvation." It is the general opinion that this Psalm was written by the youngest of Jessie's boys, the little shepherd lad, the "sweet singer" and king of Israel—the good and the noble, the "man after God's heart." And who was more fitted than he to compose just such a Psalm? Of tender conscience, acute sensibilities; noble, true to every impulse and principle of lofty manhood; scorning anything and everything that was low and mean.

But withal he was human, subject to the weaknesses and infirmities of the flesh. "He was tempted in all points as we are," and, like us, often fell before his temptation into grievous sin. But never did he succumb to temptation more foul and wicked than when he placed Uriah "in the forefront of the battle;" and it was, perhaps, when he felt that this black, unblushing, hideous crime had been blotted out—that this "sin had been covered" that he gave expression to this inimitably grand and beautiful Psalm.

That was indeed the mistake of his life; feasting his eyes upon temptation so tempting, so alluring, so enticing. What a fierce struggle, what a death-like conflict must have been waged in his bosom between conscience and passion! each warring for the mastery.

At length the noble man falls!—a dispatch is sent across to Ammon, to Joab, commander-in-chief, to "set Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, and retire from him that he may be smitten and die." And faithful Uriah is made the bearer of his own death warrant! O, the danger of dallying with temptation. Our constant prayer should be, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."

What a vivid picture we have here of the degrading and debasing power of sin! Lust and passion have triumphed, and now, see their poor, helpless victim as he is ruthlessly hurled into base degradation and inglorious shame, and made to drink, to the very drugs, the bitter cup of remorse, humiliation and self-loathing! What brush can paint—what pen can depict—or what tongue can describe the bitterness of that agony which tore and gnawed the tender, quivering chords of his noble being! This is no imaginary, or fanciful picture of the sad consequences of sin. David felt that it was real. Yea, to him the stingings of an outraged conscience were so terrible and severe; its blistering lashes were so keen and penetrating, that he was "of all men most miserable." The very "pains of hell" had taken hold of him, and from the smoking depths of woe, he cried "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy loving kindness; according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity and cleanse me from my sin."

For a long while David would not confess his sin; though he had sinned wilfully and grievously he refused to acknowledge it, and of the bitterness it cost him we get but a faint conception from his words, "When I kept silence my bones waxed old through my rearing all the day long For day and night Thy hand was heavy upon me." These judgments were truly great, but from the lash of God's eternal whip David receives another stroke, and he says, "My moisture is turned into the drought of summer." What a figure! and yet, how eminently expressive it is of the withering effect of sin. None of us have any proper conception of what a drought is. God, in the plenitude of His goodness, has given to us both the "early and the latter rains." But during the summer months we have sometimes seen corn, cotton and grass wither, and even die beneath the burning blaze of the sun. And now, this is just what the Psalmist declares to have been the effect of sin upon him. It sapped from his body its life giving juices and made his "bones to wax old." Like the summer's burning sun, it dried up the vigor and freshness of youth and made him to fade and wither as a leaf. Deep furrows of grief were ploughed across his brow, his cheeks were lined with wrinkles of care and sorrow, his frame was bent and drooped because of much trouble. Yes, misfortune after misfortune, affliction after affliction, reverses after reverses, sorrow upon sorrow were his portion continually.

What a picture of the once jovial, light-hearted, ruddy-cheeked shepherd lad that used to tend his father's flocks, leading them into fresh, green pastures and by shady brooks! He comes before us now prematurely broken—almost a wreck; sad, dejected and forlorn. And such will be the effect of sin upon every soul of disobedience to the end of time. "There is no rest to the wicked," but like the "angry sea" they are ever tossed and discomforted, saith the Lord Almighty. Whipped and lashed by conscience, joy and peace gone from the heart; dissipation wrecking and ruining the mind, sorrow and anguish overwhelming the soul—the poor, miserable, desolate shadow of what was once a man, now longs for death or annihilation as a precious boon. And such pictures are not infrequent! Would to God they were. But the road from Egypt to Canaan—from time to eternity is strewed with wrecked and ruined lives.

We have also in this Psalm the expression of a soul conscious of pardon. David had sinned and he was not ignorant of it. Yet, he would not confess it. He endeavored to conceal his sin, and we have seen that, so long as he "kept silence" the hand of God rested heavily upon him. But, now, let us see the words of the prophet gloriously fulfilled, in the case of David: "Let him return unto the Lord and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God for He will abundantly pardon," for with the confession he received instant forgiveness. "I acknowledged my sin, thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."

So long as David "kept silence" his "bones waxed old;" but when he made a clean, open confession of the whole matter, just then his Father's own hand of love brushed away the clouds of gloom and despair that had gathered around him—the "everlasting arms," with more tenderness than maternal affection can suggest, lifted him from the "horrible pit"—just then, "peace, like a river," flowed through his soul, and he declared "Blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."

Notice, he confessed—instantly he was forgiven—and immediately peace and joy fill his heart. The frowns of incensed Majesty were converted into smiles of a gracious and affectionate Father; the hand of chastisement, which had rested so heavily upon him, was removed; the returning prodigal was received with his father's outstretched arms of affection, and amid rejoicing angels, the "iniquity of his sin" was kissed away!

What a blessed change! In the place of estrangement, communion! Instead of the "far off" country of strangers, home! Instead of nakedness, the "best robe!" Instead of hunger, "bread and to spare!" Instead of thirst, "milk and wine!" Instead of death, life! God now becomes his "hiding place." In troublous times, he hides in his pavilion, in the covert of His tent he seeks protection, in the shadow of His wing he rejoices. With his feet thus planted upon the "Rock of Ages"—the Lord his shield and high tower, he feared nothing, but viewed the machinations of infuriated enemies and sneaking foes with calm, unruffled spirit. With God on his side, he says: "I will not be afraid of ten thousand of people, that have set themselves against me round about." Yea, when sorrows overwhelm me, when troubles and disasters sweep over my soul—when the days are black with clouds, when storm and tempest rage, when mine enemies have hedged me in, and the roar of their hatred is exceeding loud and fierce, I shall not be dismayed, says he, for "Thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance."

O, the matchless splendor—the peerless grandeur—the majestic sweetness of this song! "Thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance." As Mr. Adkins has so beautifully said: "He is surrounded with mercy and protection—as one is surrounded with the air or the sunlight. He shall find mercy and favor everywhere—at home, abroad; by day, by night; in society, in solitude; in sickness, in health; in life, in death; in time, in eternity. He shall walk amid mercies, sleep amid mercies; he shall live amid mercies, he shall die amid mercies; he shall live in a better world amid eternal mercies."

Oh! is it any wonder that we hear the man whose "bones waxed old," whose "moisture was turned into the drought of summer" now breaking forth in strains of sweetest song: "Jehovah is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Jehovah is the protector of my life; before whom shall I be afraid? For He hides me in His pavilion in the time of trouble; He protects me in the covert of His tent; He lifts me upon a rock."

Contrast David, now since his confession, with David when he "kept silence" and see the words of the 'wise man' verified: "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper: But whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy."

Let us imitate David (1) In confessing our sins, for we are assured by Him who cannot lie that, "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (2) By turning away from them, for "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." The Lord does despise a hypocrite, and there is no confession—in the true sense—where it is not followed by a turning away from "sin unto God, with full purpose of and endeavor after new obedience."

Other Worldliness.

I suppose no question presents itself more constantly to the mind of a conscientious Christian woman than one which may be formulated after this manner: "How far may I venture into worldly amusements and recreations and yet retain my influence on the side of religion? Is it right for me to do this or that thing which my husband and sons plead for me to do, to go here or there with my young daughters? Where shall I draw the line between fidelity to the highest duty and weak compliance with the persuasions of my friends?"

It would help those of us who are sometimes hard beset on such points as this to remember that there is never for the Christian any real conflict between duty and inclination. Right is eternally right and wrong is everlastingly wrong. But we, poor, finite creatures—easily biased, easily prejudiced, freighted by traditions of the past, swayed more than we imagine by the opinions of those around us—may well be perplexed and troubled when we endeavor to govern our conduct from the outside by a set of arbitrary rules. The letter killeth. It is the spirit that giveth life.

Our Lord said in that marvelous prayer of his for his disciples. "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." The world is our present home, our sphere of action, our battle ground, our school-room, our vineyard given us to till. To one life appeals with certain interest and brings certain responsibilities. To another life also comes, full-handed and stern-browed, but with entirely different tasks and obligations. Each to his own Master standeth or falleth. No individual has a right to dictate in definite and particular things as to what another may or may not do.

The main and most important element in Christian conduct is the motive which animates it. No gauge except that which tips Ithuriel's spear can estimate the unconscious impressiveness of a noble Christian life. Not long ago, on a brilliant social occasion I saw in the midst of a notable group a lovely woman, a woman whose days are spent in rare self-sacrifice, whose smile is always ready, on whose lips is always the law of kindness. So soon as she entered the room the atmosphere seemed to soften and brighten, and when somebody said to her neighbor, "There is dear Miss H.," I was not surprised to hear the reply, "I am so glad. She keeps us all at high water mark."

Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor, in a little book entitled "The Christian in Society," says: "In settling such questions we should have reference not to the fashion of our circle or the gratification of our own curiosity but to the glory of God." A shrewd old Scotch capitalist gave this advice to a youg man entering business: "Aye give yourself the benefit of the doubt."

If conscience troubles us, if our spiritual grade is lowered, by a certain course, ought we not to make it a matter of earnest prayer? Ought not other-worldliness to be a distinctive sign in or of the Christian in this world? I heard a young man say not long ago, in reference to a girl friend: "A fellow is better for knowing her. She never lowers her standard."—Mrs. M. E. Sangster in the Congregationalist.

The Light and the Sun.

Beautiful as are some of the descriptions of the dawn in Homer and superb as are the lines in which Virgil pictures the rise of Aurora from her saffron couch, no literature makes so much of the light and the sun as the literature of the inspired writers. From the hour when the fiat of the Almighty speaks effulgence into being, to the completed and unclouded radiance of the new heaven and the new earth, the light and the sun are favorite similes and metaphors by which to express the divine beneficence and glory. All the phenomena of the heavenly bodies, from the rise of the morning star to the dying dawn of the day and the shining out of Orion and "the sweet influences of the Pleiades," were familiar to a people living simple lives, and lives beneath the open sky.

And to the writers of the Bible light in all of its manifestations was divine. Whether seen in the golden brightness of the noon, or the silvery radiance of the night, or in the yet more beautiful and mysterious movements of the electric waves across the northern horizon, light always impresses a spiritual nature with a sense of the divine nearness. A single drop of dew, or the innumerable jewels that compose the rainbow, alike reveal something of him from beneath whose throne crystal streams flow out, and over whose mercy-seat the bow of promise shines. Light in its nature, diffusion and adjustment forms one of the most fascinating studies of the scientist; and no one uncorrupted by a false philosophy could fail to see in so glorious an exhibition of nature the product of a power, intelligence and wisdom, far exceeding that of man.

We were reading lately a letter written by a man long blind to one just appalled and stunned by the sudden loss of sight. It humbled and shamed us, for there was running all through it a strain of love and trust which seemed, as indeed it was, a spiritual miracle. Of all the losses to which life is subject nothing seems comparable to loss of sight. What can we conceive more dreadful than for the mind to be shut in upon itself? Light is synonymous with life because light reveals to life that world of beauty about it in which it finds its joys. More dreadful than to be an eyeless fish in a Mammoth Cave must it be to be a sightless man in a universe of light and radiance.

"Thou hast prepared the light and the sun," says tne Psalmist; and "We are not of the darkness" but "children of the light," says Paul.

In this glad season of the year when we have passed the equinox and are newly rejoicing in the return of longer days and brighter noons, nature ought to be the handmaid of our faith. Upon us has arisen "The Sun of Righteousness with healing in his wings." The resources of the Almighty are inexhaustible and he has made a thousand tapers, the glimmer of the fire-fly and the flash of the meteor, but the source of our joy and life is after all the sun itself.

So it is true that God has in sundry times and places spoken to us by the mouths of holy prophets since the world began. There has been one not unworthy to be called The Light of Asia, but only one who could be fitly termed The Light of the World. Only Jesus Christ surpasses the natural sun in universality, constancy and beneficence. In our heaven of heavens, bright above the soul, burns with undiminished fervor the source of the soul's light and heat. If men stumble spiritually now, it is, as Job says, a "stumbling at noonday as though it were night." God has not called us to the existence of troglodites in a gloomy cave of doubt. We are not made to be dwellers in some cavern of despir, far from the cheerful rays that refresh and animate the soul. A man may close his eyes, but the day still shines.

We recall, while writing, a morning of the years gone by, in which for the first time and for one brief hour we dwelt in a world that was all light—light without a shadow. We had reached the snow line of the Bel Alp the night before, after the last ray of day had long since gone out. We knew little or nothing of our place or our surroundings. But a light tap upon the door in the early hour waked us to see the sun rise. It is years ago, but the very remembrance of it makes the breast swell with emotion. It was, so far as the eye could see, a new world in which we waked. Below us a curtain of clouds shut out all the cities that were homes of men and the clouds themselves were pure silver without one spot of dross. But above them rose a scene that could be compared to nothing except that which John saw, when he saw the city whose inhabitants "walk in white, and in whose center stands the great white throne." A dozen peaks against the effulgent blue; Leone, Rosa, the Aeggischorn and Simplon and their titanic peers; each glittering as an icicle and majestic as the battlements of heaven; glacier, snow-field, mount and sky; one unspotted world of light without a shadow; a creation fresh from the touch of God, and before sin had put a stain upon its purity. Was it to be wondered at that, silent, we stood while from the eyes dropped happy tears; and like Coleridge in the Valley of Chamounix the world

"still present to the bodily sense
Didst vanish from our thought: entranced in prayer
We worshiped the invisible alone."

Interior.

Temperance.

A correspondent writes The Observer: "North Dakota is a Prohibition State. By my friends in the East and South I am sometimes asked if prohibition does prohibit. My reply is both yes and no. The answer to that question all depends on what it meant by the word 'prohibit.' If one intends the question to signify, Does prohibition entirely stop all tippling and drunkenness, all fuddling and booziness? my answer to this would be No! emphatically No! But if the questions means only this, Does prohibition prevent open drinking and public treating, etc.? I would with equal emphasis say Yes, most assuredly Yes. It makes treating and dram drinking illegal and disreputable. The ghastly remains of the defunct saloon and bar-room buisness has been driven off the open field, and is forced to betaken itself to dirty lanes, dark wynds and back alleys, or hide itself away in cheap "shacks," dug outs or abandoned outhouses, instead of flaunting itself, as of yore, in palatial hotels, saloons and sample rooms on the best business sites of all our cities, towns and villages."

Losing Temper.

Losing the temper takes all the sweet, pure feeling out of life. You may get up in the morning with a clean heart, full of song, and start out as happy as a bird, and the moment you are crossed and you give way to your temper, the clean feeling vanishes and a load as heavy as lead is rolled upon the heart, and you go through the rest of the day feeling like a culprit. And any one who has experienced this feeling knows that it cannot be shaken off, but must be prayed off.

FATHER TIME.

Above the world I sit and sail,
Moving on, moving on;
The things I pass no more avail,
They bide their years, decay and fail,
While I keep moving on.

Down on the world I look and smile,
Moving on, moving on;
The scythe I bear smites all the while,
Cuts as it may for good or guile,
While I keep moving on.

Over the world I glance my eye,
Moving on, moving on;
Good deeds mature, the hopeful try,
The just alone shall never die,
While I keep moving on

Around the world I sit and roll,
Moving on, moving on;
Ripening fruits for sacred goal,
Perfecting hopes of the dying soul,
While I keep moving on.

Beside the world I sit and hear,
Moving on, moving on;
Sounds of joy or sadness drear,
Filling the space around the sphere,
While I keep moving on.

Above, around all worlds I ride,
Moving on, moving on;
Watching in all the swelling tide,
Of human love and human pride,
While I keep moving on.

When stars go out and worlds stand still,
Alone I'm moving on;
Obeying God's eternal will,
I cease not when all else is still,
But yet keep moving on.

Thus Time rolls on,
Ever on and on,
Above the earth and o'er the sea,
'Mid lightning's flash,
And thunder's crash,
Moving toward eternity.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

We conclude our report beginning with the TENTH DAY.

Monday, May 28th.

The overture on what is popularly call the "Woodrow Case," from Augusta Presbytery is as follows:

The Rev. James Woodrow, D.D., being a member of this Presbytery, but residing in the bounds of Charleston Presbytery, obtained a letter of dismission from the former to the latter; he presented this letter of dismission to Charleston Presbytery, and his application for membership was rejected, and remains, of course, after Charleston Presbytery rejected his application for membership, under the jurisdiction of Augusta Presbytery; but, until he has formally returned the letter of dismission to this Presbytery, is he entitled to all the rights and privileges of membership? If it is necessary that he should return his letter of dismission to Augusta Presbytery, in order to be entitled to all the rights and privileges of active membership, is he prevented from doing so by the law of our Church, par. 277, requiring that a minister shall be a member of the Presbytery in the bounds of which he resides?—adopted by Augusta Presbytery, March 31, 1894.

The committee on Bills and Overtures on Monday reported the following answer:

The committee on Bills and Overtures, in response to above overture, beg leave to report that inasmuch as a minister who has a letter of dismission from his own Presbytery to another Presbytery remains under the jurisdiction of the Presbytery from which he was dismissed until he has been formally received by the Presbytery to which he was dismissed (Book of Church Order. Rules of Discipline, Chap XV., Sec. V., Par. 280), he is entitled to all the rights and privileges of membership in the Presbytery from which he was dismissed. And it is the judgment of your Committee that par. 277 does not forbid him to return his letter. Adopted.

The Assembly resolved (in opposition to a report of the committee) to remain in the Evangelical Alliance. Dr. Raymond chairman of the committee before the vote was taken explained that there was no money in the treasury to pay expenses incident to this matter and the recommendation report was simply for financial reasons. The question of appointing delegates was left to the next Assembly.

In connection with the report of the Committee on Home Missions, that committee was instructed to furnish information as to vacant churches and ministers unemployed.

The above committee will investigate the question of transferring the invalid work from the Home Missions Committee to the Fredericksburg Home and School.

Also that Christian schools be established in missionary districts.

It was decided that the Home Missionary should be discontinued. A proposition to appoint an ad interim committee to consider the advisability of consolidating the Home Missionary and the Missionary was agreed to.

In response to an overture from the Presbytery of Memphis it was recommended that an interim committee be appointed to consider means of assisting infirm ministers and dependent families.

The following committee was appointed to consider the proposed Union of the Missionary and Home Missionary and to consider the Invalid Fund—Drs. Eugene Daniel, R. A. Robinson, J. W. Rosebro and Elders J. L. Marye and W. D. Reynolds.

A committee to endeavor to secure co-operation between the Northern and Southern Churches in Home Mission work was appointed: Drs. J. N. Craig, W. H. Woods and Elder J. M. Coulter.

The Executive Committee for the coming year consists of: Revs. G B. Stricker, E. H. Barnett, F. H. Gaines, T. P. Cleveland and Elders. M. A. Chandler, L. A. Beatty, W. A. Powell, J. C. Kirkpatrick and A. R. Holderly

After considerable discussion on the report on Young People's Societies the report of the Special Committee was substituted for that of the Ad Interim Committee.

The report of the standing committee on Education was adopted except the manual which was referred to a committee. The following Executive Committee was appointed: Revs. N. M. Woods, J. H. Lumpkin, W. Alexander, E. A. Ramsey, C. P. Harvin, and Elders G. W. McCrea, T. B. Reed, Thomas Wilford, T. H. Rice and John Johnson. Rev. E. M. Richardson already having been chosen secretary. G. W. Macrae was made the Assembly's treasurer for the committee.

The recommendation made in reply to an overture from the Presbyterp of Tuscaloosa, that young men being educated shall report the amount of outside aid furnished them, was adopted.

Rev. A. McFadyen from the special committee appointed to consider a memorial on the lotteries presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

Your committee to whom was referred the communication relative to the suppression of lotteries by law do submit for adoption the following:

WHEREAS, We recognize and deeply deplore the existence and the blighting consequence of the sin of gambling, especially as the evil and its results are manifested in the lottery hazard, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Assembly renews the deliverances of former Assemblies against this evil, and exhorts and warns our people against the insidious and destructive influences of this sin.

A Standing Committee on the Sabbath was appointed as follows:

James Stacey, E. H. Barnett, G. B. Strickler, S. M. Inman and M. A. Barry compose the Standing Committee on the Sabbath.

It was recommended that a committee of seven be appointed to prepare a report to the next General Assembly concerning Sabbath observance, stating exactly what work is necessary on the Sabbath and may be engaged in.

The Assembly adjourned after a closing address from the moderator and thanks to those who had contributed to the comfort and business facilities of the Assembly.

Time's Test.

The test of character is the ability to accept finalities; "to make each goal, when reached, a starting point for further quests. When a man has changed the current of his life because he cannot adjust his conscience to the accepted standards of the great majority, and then finds that his decision is not viewed by the world as the decision of a hero, but as that of a weakling, it requires absolute faith in the law of right to enabled him to live up to the high-water mark he has set for his life; it is difficult, but surely within the compass of such a mind to accept the finalities of its decision though the world does not applaud, and even though it disapproves. Having made a decision based on one's highest perceptions of what is right, to view its effect in the light of a failure is to defeat one's life. The finality of a high moral purpose must be a success unless the decision was the result of impulse instead of principle. The decisions of impulse never can be final; they must of necessity change, for they are not the result of trained perception. There is no character in the world so much to be pitied as the one that is swayed continually by impulse; there is no stability—no growth. Having no definite goal, it cannot reach after that which marks, success; it has no yesterdays, and its to-morrows are vague periods of time to which the to-days point, but with which they never connect.

It is not what the world thinks of our decisions that is most valuable, but what we think of them viewed in after life. If we view our decision of a question involving morals as a failure, it is a failure. Nothing makes our decisions moral but the use we make of them. If we regret them, no matter how high the moral courage of the moment of decision, we have defeated our own purpose our banner with its "Excelsior" trails in the dust, and we have no followers, because we are not leaders; we are leaves on life's roadway, subject to the passing breeze.

Cast All Burdens on Him.

Do not trouble yourself unduly; for if you do so you can not remove sickness thereby, but you may even increase it. If I could do any good by worrying, I would worry away to my heart's content, but as it is useless I find it best to let it alone. They tell me if a man were to fall into the sea, he would float if he would remain quiet, but because he struggles he sinks. I am sure it is so when we are afflicted. Fretfulness results in weakening us, in hiding from us wise methods of relief, and, in general, in doubling our pains. It is folly to kick against the pricks; it is wisdom to kiss the rod. Trust more and fear less. If you have trusted your soul with Christ can you not trust him with your sick child or your sick husband, with your wealth, with your business, with your life?" "O, says one, "I hardly like to do that. It is almost presumption to take our minor cares to the great Lord." But in so doing you will prove the truthfulness of your faith. I heard of a man who was walking along the high road with a pack on his back; he was growing weary, and was therefore glad when a gentleman came along in a chaise and asked him to take a seat with him. The gentleman noticed that he kept his pack strapped to his shoulders, and so he said, "Why do you not put your pack down?" "Why, sir," said the traveler, "I did not venture to intrude. It was very kind of you to take me up, and I could not expect you to carry my pack as well." "Why," said fhe friend, "do you not see that whether your pack is on your back or off your baak I have to carry it?" It is so with your trouble: whether you care or do not care, it is the Lord who must care for you. First trust your Lord with your soul, and then trust him with everything else. First surrender yourself to his love, to be saved by his infinite compassion, and then bring all your burdens and cares and troubles, and lay them down at His dear feet, and go live a happy, joyful life, saying, as I will say, and close:

"All that remains for me
Is but to live and sing,
And wait until the angels come
To bear me to my king."

The Gospel Suited to Every Soul.

Look upon nature at this spring-time. See how that little vine climbing about the portal of our earthly home holds within each tender branch an inward demand for sunshine and rain; see how each seed planted beneath the surface carries the invisible germ, whose secret asking is for light, heat, and the distilling dews of heaven. If God provided, as we see he is doing everywhere, for these hidden forces in nature in the sweet sunlight, in the gentle falling dews and timely shower, will the wisdom of his provision for man's moral nature be less manifest? If his love prompt him to seek a way by which diseased souls shall find full restoration, by which harassing guilt shall be cleansed away, will that plan be likely to show less adaptation than what we see revealed in the external world?

No! no! stricken though we are by sin, debased and rebellious though our vile natures may be Jesus dying for us upon the cross is the one grand announcement that is fitted to answer the soul's deepest yearnings. He who made the soul devised the plan of mercy. All the sad condition of our estate, the debility of our moral nature, the sinful allegiance to Satan, were all known to him. Just as the sweet light and kindly dews of heaven start the hidden germ into life, and provide just what that life requires, so the sunshine beaming forth from the blessed Gospel quickens and renews the soul. Herein the God of grace is the same as the God in nature.

O let us go forth bearing precious seed! Let us never lose confidence in the atoning scheme, as God's merciful provision for men. What though we may never explain the secret philosophy of redemption? It matters not. The fact remains that Jesus was "wounded for our transgressions," and "by his stripes we are healed," and also that the whole world is waiting to hear from our lips this glorious message.

"It Is Mean and Cruel."

The Arabians have a quaint old story that has a noble lesson in it.

A haughty favorite of an Oriental monarch, who was passing along the highway—so runs the story—threw a stone at a poor dervish or priest. The dervish did not dare to throw it back at the man who had assaulted him, for he knew the favorite was very powerful. So he picked up the stone and put it carefully in his pocket, saying to himself: "The time for revenge will come by and by, and then I will repay him for it." Not long afterward this same dervish, in walking through the city, saw a great crowd coming toward him. He hastened to see what was the matter, and found, to his astonishment, that his enemy, the favorite, who had fallen into disgrace with the king, was being paraded through the principal streets on a camel, exposed to the jests and insults of the populace. The dervish, seeing all this, hastily grasped at the stone which he carried in his pocket, saying to himself: "The time for my revenge has now come, and I will pay him for his insulting conduct." But, after considering a moment, he threw the stone away, saying: "The time for revenge never comes; for if our enemy is powerful, revenge is dangerous as well as foolish; and if he is weak and wretched, the revenge is worse than foolish, it is mean and cruel. And in all cases it is forbidden and wicked."

To Think About.

It may afford a charitable cover for the weakness of a drunkard to ascribe his failing to "heredity," and screen himself by shaming his father, but what shall we say for the dwellers by the Congo and among the glaciers of Greenland whose forefathers never knew the taste of drink, but who will sell body and soul for a pint of rum? By the way, we note that the Arctic explorer, Nansen, who first crossed Greenland from shore to shore, abolished alcoholic drinks from his food supplies, and now declares that upon any future expedition to the Arctic regions he would banish it from the medicine chest. That is something for people to ponder who fortify themselves with a glass of brandy "to keep out the cold."

Hiding Behind the Cross.

2 Cor. iv: 5. One of my elders said in prayer-meeting: "As I came along Argyle Street (one of our business streets in Glasgow), I saw a crowd at a shop-door, and had the curiosity to look in. There I saw an auctioneer holding up a grand picture so that all could see it; and when he got in position, he stayed behind it and said to the crowd, 'Now look at this side of the picture and now at that side,' and so on, describing each part of it. Now" said this good man,' "the whole time I never saw the speaker it was just the picture he was showing," and turning to us he said, "that is the way to work for Christ."—Bonar.

He was at one time engaged on the "People's Press" of Salem one of the oldest papers of the State. Afterwards he had charge of the Salem Academy, for boys. He went as a missionary to Jamaica and upon his return after serving churches in Ohio and in Salem, he became assistant principal of the famous Moravian Seminary at Bethlehem, Pa. It is said the Roman Catholics have a school for colored persons in Pine Bluff, Ark., which is well attended and that they intend building a Roman Catholic church.

It is hard to stop when one start downward. A Chicago Unitarian pastor has announced that he will leave his denomination and organize a church of free thought, without creed or doctrine. The members of his church have signified their intention to go with the pastor, and stock will be issued for a new church building. The church will cost $200,000, will be eight stories high, and contain bathrooms, gymnasium and reading-rooms.

This from the Independent: On the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of the King of Siam to the throne, the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions sent him a memorial of acknowledgment for the many courtesies shown by him to the missionary work. The memorial, written in English, takes the form of a letter, beautifully engrossed in script, and is inclosed in a cover of brown velvet plush with a center of red and white, the royal colors of the House of Siam, and bears the beautiful gold seal of the Board.

Before closing its sessions the Northern Assembly adopted the following resolution in regard to appropriations for sectarian schools:

"The General Assembly enters an earnest protest against the bestowal of appropriations from the treasury of the United States for the uses of religious denominations, of whatever name or under whatsoever pretext they may be sought."

LICENSURE AND ORDINATION.

That our readers may the better understand the action taken by the General Assembly in a proposed change of our Form of Government in regard to the Licensure and Ordination of Ministers, we give below in parallel columns the present form along with the form proposed for adoption by the Presbyteries:

In subsequent issues our readers will have a discussion of this subject pro and con by some of the brethren who have given the subject special attention. Some of the articles doubtless will appear next week.

CHAPTER VI.

SECTION V.—Of the Ordination of Ministers, etc.

PRESENT FORM.	PROPOSED FORM.
ARTICLE I,	Add to ART. SECTION VI.—Of the Licensure of Probationers for the Gospel Ministry.

PRESENT FORM.	PROPOSED FORM.
ARTICLE 1. Presbyteries shall license probationers to preach the gospel, in order that, after sufficiently trying their gifts, and receiving from the church a good report, that they may, in due time, ordain them to the sacred office.	ARTICLE I. Every man who feels called of God to undertake the work of preaching the gospel shall go before the Presbytery within whose bounds he resides, and obtain license before he begins to preach. Presbyteries shall license candidates as probationers to preach the gospel, ordinarily only after they have completed their collegiate course and after they shall have studied divinity at least one year at some approved seminary or under some approved teacher, in order that, after sufficiently trying their gifts, and receiving from the church a good report, they may, in due time, ordain them to the sacred office.
ART. IV. The Presbytery shall try each candidate as to his knowledge of the Latin language, and the original languages of the Holy Scriptures. It shall also examine him on mental philosophy, logic and rhetoric; on ethics; on the natural and exact sciences; on theology, natural and revealed; and on ecclesiastical history, the sacraments, and Church government. Morever, the Presbytery shall require of him— 1. A discussion in Latin of a thesis on some common head in divinity. 2. ART. VI. No candidate, except in extraordinary cases, shall be licensed, unless he shall have completed the usual course of academical studies, and shall also have studied divinity at least two years under some approved teacher of theology; and whenever any Presbytery shall see reason to depart from this rule, it shall always make a record of the fact upon its minutes, with the reasons therefor.	ART. VI. Such a license shall be valid only for a term of three years, but the Presbytery may at the expiration of that time renew it for a similar term. Whenever any Presbytery shall see reason to depart from these rules, it shall always make a record of the fact upon its minutes, with the reasons therefor.
ART. VII. If the Presbytery be satisfied with his trials, it shall then proceed to license him in the following manner: The moderator shall propose to him the following questions, viz: 1. Do you believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice? 2. Do you sincerely receive and adopt the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms of this Church, as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures? 3. Do you promise to study the peace, unity, and purity of the Church? 4. Do you promise to submit yourself, in the Lord, to the government of this Presbytery, or any other into the bounds of which you may be called?	ART. VII. If the Presbytery be satisfied with his examinations, it shall then proceed to license him in the following manner: The moderator shall propose to him the following questions, viz.: 1. Do you believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice? 2. ART. VIII. The candidate having answered these questions in the affirmative, and the moderator having offered up a prayer suitable to the occasion, he shall address the candidate to the following purpose: "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by that authority which he has given to the Church for its edification, we do license you to preach the gospel as a probationer for the holy ministry, wherever God in his providence may call you; and for this purpose may the blessing of God rest upon you, and the Spirit of Christ fill your heart. Amen." And record shall be made of the licensure in the following or like form, viz:	ART. VIII. The candidate having answered these questions in the affirmative, and the moderator, having offered up a prayer suitable to the occasion, he shall address the candidate to the following purpose: "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by that authority which he has given to the Church for its edification, we do license you as a probationer for the holy ministry, to preach the gospel, under the direction of Presbytery wherever God in his providence may call you; and for this purpose may the blessing of God rest upon you, and the Spirit of Christ fill your heart. Amen." And record shall be made of the licensure in the following or like form, viz.:
At——, the ——day of ——, the Presbytery of ——having received testimonials in favor of——, of his having gone through a regular course of literature, of his good moral character, and of his being in the communion of the Church, proceeded to take the usual parts of trial for his licensure. And he having given satisfaction as to his accomplishments in literature, as to his experimental acquaintance with religion, and as to his proficiency in divinity and other studies, the Presbytery did, and hereby does, express its approbation of all these parts of trial. And he having adopted the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms of this Church, and satisfactorily answered the questions appointed to be put to candidates to be licensed, the Presbytery did, and hereby does, license him, the said ——, to preach the gospel of Christ, as a probationer for the holy ministry, within the bounds of this Presbytery, or wherever else he shall be orderly called. ART. IX. When any candidate for licensure shall have occasion, while his trials are going on, to remove from the bounds of his own Presbytery into those of another, it shall be considered regular for the latter Presbytery, on his producing proper testimonials from the former, to take up his trials at the point at which they were left, and conduct them to a conclusion in the same manner as if they had been commenced by itself.	ART. IX. When any candidate for licensure shall have occasion, before his examinations have been completed and sustained, to remove from the bounds of his own Presbytery into those of another, it shall be considered regular for the latter Presbytery on his producing proper testimonials from the former, to take up his examinations at the point at which they were left, and conduct them to a conclusion in the same manner as if they had been commenced by itself.
ART. XI. Presbyterians should require probationers to devote themselves diligently to the trial of their gifts; and no one should be ordained to the work of the gospel ministry until he has given evidence of his ability to edify the Church.	ART. XI. Except in extraordinary cases, Presbyteries should require probationers to continue their regular course of study at some approved seminary, or under some approved teacher of theology, and while engaged in the same to exercise their gifts in preaching, under such restrictions as may, in the judgment of their respective Presbyteries, be necessary to preclude interference with their studies. No one should be ordained to the work of the gospel ministry until he has given evidence of his ability to edify the Church.

THE CHILDREN AND THE CONGO BOAT.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DEAR CHILDREN:—You have all heard by this time that the $10,000 for the Congo Boat, which you have been working for has been raised, and that General Assembly has instructed us to proceed as soon as the way is clear to build the boat.

You know that from the first the exact amount that would be needed was more or less of a guess. We thought, from the best information we could get, that it would not be less than $10,000, and feared it might be more.

But things have changed very much on the Congo since we first thought about the boat, and now Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Rowbotham and other missionaries tell us that they think a smaller boat than we first had in mind will answer their purpose better; one that they can use themselves with one or two helpers, going from place to place, searching out the country and carrying the gospel to new tribes.

This boat we hope will not cost more than $5,000, placed on the river, and then we would have $5,000 left of the money you have given. If we should have this much left, the General Assembly advises us, with your consent which we know you will gladly give, to take it and establish another mission on the Congo, to be called the "Lapsley Memorial Mission," in honor of the same Samuel N. Lapsley after whom the boat will be named.

Building the boat will be very slow work. Being so far away we will have to write to a great many people and find out all we can so as to be sure of not making mistakes. But we will begin right away to make inquiries, and will let you hear from time to time as to how the work goes on.

Now for the five medical missionaries. Let us all work hard and see how soon we can send them out.

Truly your friend,
S. H. CHESTER,
Secretary.

COMMENCEMENT AT PEACE INSTITUTE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"Peace" has had a charming commencement, this year. It began on Friday evening, May 25th, with "Class Night." During the evening the President, Miss Eudora Le Vick, of Selma, gave us a most pleasant address; and Miss Bessie Belvin, of Raleigh, read an original class poem which was excellent. The classes in Elocution and Physical Culture filled out the balance of the program with greatest credit to themselves and to their teacher, Mrs. A. W. Hughes, of Tarboro, N. C. There was choice music after each piece on the program, and every number of this music was well executed.

On Saturday evening, the Alumnae had a reunion in which a very large number of the alumnae participated. Some fine talks were made over their tea; and afterwards they all enjoyed elegant refreshments in the library.

On Sunday, May 27th, the Baccalaureate Sermon was preached at the Presbyterian church by Rev. R. E. Caldwell. of Winston, N. C., from Psalm 139: 17, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them."

It was a noble sermon and worthy of such a text. The sermon made a deep and powerful impression not only upon the pupils of the school, but upon the public generally. Mr. Caldwell's sermon at night on the angels, 1 Peter 1: 12, was no less profound and impressive. The people of Raleigh will long remember his noble words, and will always be ready to welcome him again.

On Monday evening, commencing at 8.30 p. m., the regular commencement exercises were held. The distinctions announced the certificates of proficiency awarded and the prizes presented gave evidence ot diligence and successful work during the school year.

There were four graduates in Literature and Science, Misses Charlotte Brown, Zula Elmore, Mary McNair, and Eunice Worth; and two full graduates, Miss Bessie Belvin and Eudora Vick. Rev. Mr. Caldwell presented the diplomas to the graduates in a very graceful manner, and made a most excellent and timely address before the graduating class.

There were quite a number of beautiful prizes and medals given for painting, drawing, penmanship, French, English Essay, Deportment and Scholarship, Latin, and Mathematics, &c.

The Art Exhibit after the exercises Monday evening and during the forenoon of Tuesday was one of the most beautiful ever made by the Institute. There was a fine display of finished work in every department of fine art. Some of the china painting, especially, was unusually good, exhibiting fine taste and most skilful execution.

The commencement came to a close on Tuesday evening after one of the finest concerts which has ever been enjoyed by the people of Raleigh.

Indeed, notwithstanding the hard times, this has been a most successful year at Peace, both financially and otherwise. The outlook, too, for the coming year is better than usual. The courses in Art and Music have been enlarged and a new degree added in the Literary Department. The Institute proposes to establish here next year a regular Conservatory of Music with two finished Professors, one a graduate of Leipzig and the other from Boston, with four assistants, all specialists. The Institute proposes to make this department equal to any demand which can be made upon in.

New catalogues are out giving full particulars.

A Card to the Presbytery of Mecklenburg.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am instructed to call your attention—and that of the vacant churches, especially those unrepresented at our spring session—to a change of plan, adopted by the Lincolnton Presbytery, in our collections for Home Missions.

That change was embodied in the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter all our collections for this purpose be taken for the one general cause of Home Missions; that the distinctions between Presbyterial, Assembly's and Synodical collections be discontinued; and that the five months, January, February, June, August and September shall continue to be assigned to the general work of missions; and that ten per cent of the total receipts shall be given to the Assembly's and ten per cent to the Synod's work.

Brethren, we are still in debt and unless all our churches shall put forth unusual efforts during this month of June we shall not be able to meet our July payments nor assist in the work outside our bounds.

Brethren, we must press upon our people —and realize ourselves—our Master's demands upon us.

T. A. WHARTON,
Chairman.

The subscribers to the Columbia Seminary Missionary Fund, will take notice that the scheme was abandoned several months ago. The fund was inadequate at the start; many who subscribed never paid anything or paid only the first or second instalments; several reduced their subscriptions. So that it was absurd to pretend to do a thing we were doing only in name, professing to a support a missionary. and paying in fact but one fourth of his salary. In consequence the treasurer resigned and the society abandoned the cause.

D. J. BRIMM,
Ex-Treasurer.

The presidency of the French Chamber of Deputies having become vacant on M. Dupuy assuming the premiership M. Cassimir-Perier was elected President.

Second Quarter.—Lesson XIII.

June 24—Review.

Gen. xxxii.—Ex. xiv.

Golden Text.—The Lord's portion is His people. Dent. xxxii. 9.

[We omit the Missionary Lesson as sufficiently provided for in the ordinary helps and as being outside the real plan of these lessons. We publish the Review a week earlier to gain space for a preparatory article on the Lessons in the Life of Christ with which the new Quarter will begin.]

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Fix in your mind the chronology of the period studied. We began the quarter with Jacob at the ford of Jabbok, about to enter the land of promise. We close it with Israel having just crossed the Red Sea. The first and last lessons have therefore a close similarity—one marking the birth into a higher spiritual life of Israel the man the other marking a similar birth of Israel the nation. This whole period is then comprised in what we call the Patriarchal Period, that began with Abraham and ended with the Exodus. We began the quarter near the middle of the period and have reached its close. We had two great eras before Abraham divided by the Deluge. There are two great eras between Abraham and Christ divided by David. The era between Abraham and David is divided into two periods by the Exodus. The common date for the Exodus is 1491 B. C., which children can be made to remember by comparing with the date of the discovery of America. The exact time covered by the lessons of this quarter is 247 or 248 years. Jacob was 97 or 98 years old when he came into Canaan and 130 when he came down into Egypt. Israel we found was 215 years in Egypt.

Second Step. Take a map of Canaan in the Patriarchal Ages (Oxford No. 3) and locate Peniel, Shechem, Bethel and Hebron, trying to associate with each place the events you studied in connection with it. Trace the coast route to Egypt (through the land of the Philistines) along which the caravan probably carried Joseph, and which Jacob doubtless travelled from Hebron when Joseph sent for him. On Map No. 4, locate On (or Heliopolis), the land of Goshen, Mt. Horeb, Zoan, Pithom and Rameses, and recall the events associated with each. Locate the Wall (Shur) and trace the probable route of the Israelites in the Exodus.

Third Step Take the life of Joseph as the thread and call to mind the relations held to him by other persons: Joseph, Reuben, Judah, the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, Potiphar, Potiphar's wife, the jailor, the butler and baker of Pharaoh, Pharaoh. Consider Joseph in his subsequent relations to his brethren, to Egypt, to the world, and as a type of Christ. Take Moses as a thread and consider his relations to the new Pharaoh (who?), to Pharaoh's daughter, to his oppressed people, to Jethro and his daughters; to God. His struggle with the power of Egypt and his victory through the power of God.

Fourth Step. Study the religious ideas of the period.

GOD. (1) Revealing Himself: in human or angelic form, Gen. xxxii. 24-28; by name, Gen. xxxv. 11; Ex. iii. 13-15; in dreams, Gen. xli. 15, 16, 25; in Providence, Gen. xlv. 5-8; 1. 20; in the burning bush, Ex. iii. 2,4,6; by signs and wonders, Ex. iv. 1-9; by great judgments, Ex. vii. 5; in the pillar of cloud and fire. Ex. xiii. 21.

(2) Nature and Character: prayer-answering and promise-keeping, Gen. xxxv. 3; requiring holiness, xxxix. 9; blessing the righteous, xxxix. 5, 21, 23; revealing secrets, xl. 8; ordering the affairs of nations, xli. 28; convincing of sin, xlii. 21, 18; strengthening and helping, xlix. 24, 25; compassionate and faithful, Ex. ii. 23, 24; self-existent, iii. 14; calling to service, iii. 10; qualifying for service, iii. 12; redeeming His people, vi. 6; fighting against and overwhelming His enemies, xiv. 24, 25, 28; leading and protecting His people, xiii.21; xiv. 19.

CHARACTER (1) Requirements of. Self-surrender, Gen. xxxii. 25; undivided allegiance, xxxv. 2; fulfilment of vows, xxxv. 3; fidelity to trust, xxxix. 6: purity, xxxix. 9; confession of sin, xlii. 21; separation, xliv. 33; forgiveness of injuries, xlv. 4, 5; faith, xlix. 13; 1. 25; Ex. iv. 31; reverence, iii. 5; willing service, iv. 14-17; trusting obedience, xii. 7. 10; xiv. 15.

(2) Development of. By love, Gen. xxxvii. 3; by aspiration, vss. 7, 9; by temptation, vs. 2; by responsibility, xxxix. 4; by affliction, vs. 20; by trial of faith, xl. 14, 15, 23; xlii. 36; by conviction of sin, xliv. 16, etc.

WORSHIP. To sacrifice and prayer, we now have added the first appointed annual feast, xii. 14.

PROGRESS OF REDEMPTION. Joseph as a type of Christ, the "Saviour of the World"—see note on Gen. xli. 45; Moses the Deliverer of his people, Ex. iii. 10. Redemption typified in the blood of the Paschal Lamb, xii. 13. The nation redeemed at the passage of the Red Sea, xiv. 30.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

The Review of the first quarter gives our general idea of how the review should be conducted. The blackboard would be a great help in the chronological review, and a map indispensable if the geographical review is attempted. The review by persons should be by rapid questioning, and the review of religious ideas should be a summary by the conductor who must thoroughly have mastered it and determined which of the points he will bring out. The reading of the texts will be impracticable in the school, but in giving the summary questions here and there will keep attention. Thorough preparation is the secret of a successful review.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAY 17.

64.a. That held by Joshua on their arrival in the land, Josh. v. 10.
b. That held by Hezekiah, 2. Chron. xxx. 1.
c. That held by Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 21-23; 2 Chron. xxxv. 1.
To which we should add
d. That held by Ezra on the return from the captivity, Ezra. vi. 19.

[In our question we overlooked this last. Of course any three of these four are accepted as correct.]

65. Passovers are alluded to as having been kept.
a. In the days of the Judges, 2 Kings xxiii. 22.
b. In the time of Solomon, 2 Chron. xxx. 26.

[We did not contemplate the Passover kept at Sinai in this question, nor any Passover that was specifically recorded, but certain times to which subsequent historians refer during which the Passover was observed. The question, however, was not sufficiently definite, so this answer is accepted as correct. Any one who having three correct answers to Q. 64 gives the fourth to this question is also credited with a correct answer. There are five historic Passovers recorded after its first institution, of which one was before they reached the land, and the other was after the return from captivity. There are two other periods mentioned during which the regular observance of the Passover is referred to by subsequent historians.]

66. Four Passovers are mentioned by by name in connection with our Lord's life.
a. When He was twelve years old, Luke ii. 42.
b. The first year of his ministry, John ii. 13.
c. Another Passover not attended by Jesus on account of persecution, John vi. 4 (Compare vii. 1).
d. The Last Passover, Matt. xxvi. 17, and parallels.

[Most scholars hold that the feast mentioned in John v. 1 was a Passover, making four during our Lord's ministry, which would make the ministry a little over three years long. A few held that the words "the passover" in John vi. 4, were not originally in the gospel, and that there were only two during his ministry, making the ministry a little over one year.]

Correct answers have been received as follows:

Beatrice T. McEachern, Millprong, 64,65,66d.
Bettie Overcash, Statesville, 64, 65,* 66bcd.
Willie Arrowood, Laurinburg, 64, 65, 66bd.
Chas. E. McMillan, Wilmington, 64, 65b, 66d.
Olive Wilson, Hopewell, 64, 65, 66bd.
D. R. Johnson, Wilmington, 64, 65, 66.
Lila Lane, Mt. Vernon Springs, 64bc, 65, 66d.
Flora C. McNeill, Fontcol, 64, 65, 66abd.
Isabelle Robeson, Westbrook, 64, 65, 66abd.
Mary McIntyre, Wilmington, 64, 65, 66bd.
Robbie McIntyre, Wilmington, 64, 65,66bd.
Estelle McIver, Gulf, 64, 65, 66.
Miriam McFadyen, Clarkton, 64, 65, 66abd.
Chas. P. Russell, Rockingham 64, 65, 66abd.
Katie Monroe, White Hall, 64, 65, 66, b c d.
N. E. Monroe, White Hall, 64, 65, 66, b c d.

*This was the only answer to 65 that was in accord with what we intended, after giving the four answers that properly belonged under 64. While on account of the ambiguity we could not count other answers as wrong, we are obliged to allow some extra value to this one for seizing the exact point of the question.

NEW QUESTIONS.

[☞A week longer than usual will be allowed on this and there will be no new questions next week.]

70. Divide the number of men who went out of Egypt in the Exodus* ( ) by Moses age at that time ( ). From this subtract the number of years of the Hebrew's sojourning in a strange land ( ); divide by the years of famine in Egypt ( ); add the age of Jacob when he came down into Egypt ( ); add the number of chapters in Genesis ( ); divide by the number of heads of families that came into Egypt ( ); add the age of Joseph when he was presented ( ); multiply by the number of plagues ( ); subtract the age of Joseph when he died ( ); add the day of the month on which the Paschal land was selected ( ); subtract the age of Joseph when he became ruler ( ); add the number of months Moses was hid ( ); multiply by the number of years of plenty. What important date is the result?

*The round number and not the larger and more precise number.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Thanks for an invitation to attend the second commencement of the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, on 17th. Dr. W. S. Creasy is to preach the Baccalaureate Sermon. The annual address will be delivered by Hon. W. H. Hatch, of Missouri. The college is prospering.

Watauga Democrat: The Grandfather Mining Company is now running a tunnel in the big mountain to develope a gold and silver mine. The prospects are flattering.

Chatham Record: Serious damage has been done to the wheat crop in some parts of this county by the Hessian fly, and a good deal of wheat is injured by rust.

We learn that it is expected that Dr. Shearer and Prof. James Dinwiddie of Peace Institute will attend the session of the Christian Teacher's Assembly and Summer School to be held at Littleton Female College July 2d, and which we refer to elsewhere

Whiteville News: The hail storm last Wednesday played havoc with some of our farmers. It was the worst hail storm that has visited this section in many years. It damaged the corn crop to a great extent and some farmars have plowed up their cotton and planted it over.

The catalogue of Peace Institute is before us. We have examined it with more than usual interest and find in it the most salutary rules and on every hand evidence that daughters of patrons will be in best of charge under Mr. James Dinwiddie, the principal. The catalogue itself is gotten up in superior style—the illustrations are excellent.

Wadesboro Messenger-Intelligencer; A very destructive hail storm visited the plantation of Messrs. R. E. and L. L. Little, just across the river in Richmond county (the Stanback place) last Monday afternoon. Sixty acres of very fine cotton was so badly damaged that replanting was necessary.

Monroe Enquirer: During the recent cool weather the bud worms have been doing great damage to corn. ——Harvest has begun in some sections of the county. The earliest it has been in a number of years. The cereal story told by the farmers of this section is a very sad one.

Greensboro Record: Sheriff Cook laid a nice bunch of locust eggs on our table this morning—or at least a branch from an oak tree that was chuck full of them. The wood appeared as though some one had taken an awl and punctured it all over By cutting it with a knife, the eggs were found buried in the hard wood. They are said to hatch out, fall to the earth, and start on another long journey.

Raleigh Press: During the prevalence of the big storm, the latter part of the past week, lightning struck a two-story residence about nine miles northwest of the city. All the family were in the building, but none were injured. Strange to say, the bolt descended into the basement where four dogs had taken shelter and killed three of them. The building was only slightly damaged.

Charlotte News: During the thunder storm Monday afternoon Mr. Cephus Fife, of Mt. Holly, received a stroke of lightning which paralyzed him for some time. He was near his house when the peal of thunder and the flash of fire all came at one time and shocked the whole town. He was knocked down and remained speechless until yesterday afternoon. Mr. Fife says he did not hear the thunder at all, but the last thing he remembers of the storm was a flame of fire and a noise something like meat frying in a pan.

The United States Court of Appeals decided last week that the suitary for damages against the city of New Orleans for the massacre of Italians by a mob on March 14th, 1891, cannot be sustained. This reverses the finding of the first courts which awarded damages.

The flood at Pueblo, Col., has partly subsided and a few streets are passable for teams. A man was drowned in fifteen feet water in front of the Board of Trade building. The whole number of persons missing is thirty-two, of whom seventeen are known to be drowned.

Corn is being mixed with coal as fuel on some of the trains in Iowa. The Illinois Central has had to suspend several of its trains for want of coal. The striking miners still hold out.

A singular suit in regard to its incidents, is that brought in New Orleans last week by H. Bloiver Thompson, well known as assistant State engineer, against the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad Company for the sum of $45,250 for the loss of an eye, caused by being struck by the bell rope, which was running through the car loosely and irregularly, and was suddenly drawn by an employe of the railroad company, who was standing on the platform.

A special to the Times-Democrat from San Antonio, Tex., says: "The Mexican Coffee-Cotton Colonization Company, of this city, has closed a deal with ex-Gov. Gonzales, of the State of Chihuahua, Mexico, for the purchase of 2,500,000 acres of land situatcd in the States of Coahuila and Chihuahua. The cash consideration is over $1,000,000. This immense tract of land borders 125 miles of the Rio Grande river contains some of the richest valley land in the republic of Mexico. It also contains an extensive deposit of anthracite coal and undeveloped mineral properties. The nearest point of the tract to a railroad is forty miles. W. H. In God's purposes of grace this His child was led for nearly eighteen years in the narrow and thorny way of suffering and helplessness. But his heavenly Father's love was ever proven to him in the gift of life's best blessings and its truest comforts, and though he was afflicted he did not murmur nor charge God foolishly. And those who loved him most may well rejoice that the Spirit, purified, sanctified, and made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, is at last freed from the burden of the frail body, and has entered into the fullness of joy that is promised to those who love the Lord.

At her residence in Faison, May 22nd, Mrs. A. R. HICKS, relict of the late A. R. Hicks, of Duplin. Mrs. Hicks who was in her seventy-fifth year—had been in delicate health for some months previous to her death. She was the mother of one daughter and eight sons—all living—seven of her sons carried the remains to the Presbyterian church, where the funeral services were conducted by Rev. Colin Shaw and the pastor of the church. In early life, Mrs. Hicks connected herself with the church, and, during her long and useful life, was an active, consistent member thereof. He advice and her purse were alike, open to all the church work and her quiet, Christian walk was an example to all who knew her. Living she was a mother in Israel, and dying she left us a rich legacy of love, service, consecration and character.

The Christian Teachers' Assembly and Summer School will begin its first session at Littleton Female College July 2d, and continue four weeks. There will be four Departments of Instruction, and a variety of subjects will be taught. Good Character Important.

Besides the happy satisfaction that a clear conscience and good character bring to every heart, it has a commercial value that it is well to take into consideration. For instance, B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., are advertising in this paper, and offer specially good business opportunities to men of character and standing in their respective communities. They want parties to work all or part of their time, as may suit their convenience.

FOR THE FAMILY.

MY TRUNDLE-BED.

As I rummaged through the attic, listening to the falling rain,
As it pattered on the shingles and against the window-pane,
Creeping o'er the chest and boxes, which with dust were thickly spread,
Saw I in the farthest corner what was once
my trundle-bed.
So I drew it from the recess, where it had remained so long:
Hearing all the while the music of my mother's voice in song,
As she sang in sweetest accents what I since have often read,
"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber, holy angels guard thy bed."

As I listen, recollections that I thought had been forgot,
Came with all the gush of memory rushing
thronging to the spot:
And I wandered back to childhood, to those merry days of yore,
When I knelt beside my mother, by this bed
upon the floor,
Then, it was, with hands so gently placed upon my infant head,
That she taught my lips to utter carefully the words she said;
Never have they been forgotten, deep are they in mem'ry graven,
"Hallowed be Thy name, O Father, thou who art in heaven."

This she taught me, then she told me of its import great and deep,
After which I learned to utter, "Now I lay me down to sleep;"
Then it was with hands uplifted, and in accents soft and mild,
That my mother asked our Father, "Father,
do thou bless my child."
Years have passed, and that dear mother long has mouldered 'neath the sod,
And I trust she sleeps in Jesus in the love and peace of God.
But that scene at summer twilight never has from mem'ry fled,
And it comes in all its freshness, when I see
my trundle-bed.

"LET YOUR LIGHT SO SHINE."

A True Narrative.

"Mother, what can I do now," said little Ethel in a most dejected tone. "I've played with my dolls, looked at my picture books, and cut out pictures until I am tired, I wish I could go out of doors, but it is raining so that little sister and I can't even go out on the porch to play. Can't you tell me something to do?" "Yes," said her mother, "bring your missionary wash-rag" that you were making and come sit by me and finish it while I tell you a story, how will that do?" "Oh! that will be splendid, and please mother tell me a true story, about Jesus or Joseph, or something that is sure enough true." "Well, I will tell you something that is all true, not about Jesus, but about how the life of Jesus shone out in another life, making it noble and bright. You know you were learning the verse about 'Letting your light shine,' and mother was telling you of different ways in which you could let your shine for Jesus?" "Yes ma'am I know, how I could 'shine in my corner' like the little hymn says." "That is it exactly," said mother, glad to see all discontent so quickly dispelled. "Now the one I am going to tell you about let his light shine with a 'clear, pure light' and then glorified his Father which is in heaven." "Is he living now mother?" "Yes, he is still living, but when he was a little boy five or six years old, just about your age, he began to suffer with rheumatism. He gradually grew worse, until he was eighteen years old, when his poor limbs became so swollen and drawn that he could not walk at all. "Oh mother!" said Ethel, her sympathy thoroughly aroused, "could he never walk about, and go out of doors when it was pretty and bright?" "No, he not only could not run and play out in the sunshine, but he suffered the greatest pain all the time, and for three whole years he had to lie in bed and suffer!" "That was dreadful mother, didn't he fuss a heap?" "No, he let his light shine out most brightly not only by not complaining of having to stay in the house, and even in bed, but by patiently bearing the dreadful pain." "Well mother, Jesus surely helped him bear it all so patiently didn't He?" said little Ethel, her eyes full of tears. "Yes, that is exactly how he bore it as he did. You know the verse that says, that others "took knowledge of the apostles that they had been with Jesus?' It is just so with Mr. H., no one can be with him without seeing that he loves Jesus, it always does me good to visit him and talk with him. One of his neighbors who sees him often, told me that he had never heard him complain, but that he preaches most earnest sermons by his patience and cheerfulness. He does not weary people with accounts of his pains and aches, as so many people do, but instead, he loves to tell to others 'round, what a Saviour he has found. He often says, "The more I know of myself, and think of God's goodness to me, the more deeply I feel my own unworthiness, and God's amazing condescension, love and mercy in sparing my life, and giving me the assurance of eternal life through Jesus Christ." Mr. H. is very fond of reading, and during the years of sickness it has been a great comfort to him to read good papers and books. But even that pleasure has at times been withheld from him. Several times during the last few years the disease has attacked his eyes, and he said that was the most agonizing of all he had suffered. Then his eyes would have to be bandaged, and every ray of sunshine shut out of his room." "O mother! and did he have to stay in the pitch dark?" "Yes, for weeks at a time I think he said, suffering so dreadfully that he gave up all hope of ever seeing again! And yet, notwithstanding all that he never complained, but would say, "I can trust Jesus, I can not doubt that he loves me and keeps me, and by His grace sustains me and enables me to endure. If I know myself, I am prepared for anything he is pleased to lay upon me, to be anything, or nothing, to lie passive in His hands and be used as he chooses. I would not change places with any one living who is not a child of God. With his smile I am happy, come what will." "And mother did his eyes get better?" "Yes, and he was so thankful to see his friends again and be able to read." "But can he never walk any more until he gets to heaven?" "No, but when he gets to heaven I think few there will enjoy walking the 'golden streets' more than he." "I'm so sorry for Mr. H., said little Ethel, nestling close to her mother and putting her arms around her, and I wish I could be good like him." "Give, then your heart to Jesus my darling, and pray earnestly to Him for grace and patience, and he will enable you to 'shine in your corner, as Mr. H. does in his."

Things Useful.

A small teaspoonful of powdered borax added to a bowl of cold starch will give stiffness to the linen.

Mix stove blacking with spirits of turpentine. It will take off the rust, polish easier and stay glossy longer than when water is used.

Strawberry Sherbet.—Mash to a smooth paste a quart of fresh berries, to which add the juice of one lemon and three pints of water. Let it stand for three hours, when strain it into three quarters of pound of white sugar. Stir until the sugar is thoroughly dissolved, when strain a second time, and keep in ice for a few hours before using.

Beef Juice for Invalids.—Score and broil one minute pieces of beef about the size of the palm of the hand. Express the juice in a lemon or meat squeezer. Add a pinch of salt, make it hot, and serve. One pound of beef makes three tablespoonfuls of juice.

Remedy for Earache—There is scarcely any ache to which children are subject so hard to bear and difficult to cure as earache. But there is a remedy never known to fail. Take a bit of cotton batting, put upon it a pinch of black pepper, gather it up and tie it, dip in sweet oil and insert into the ear. Put a flannel bandage over the head to keep it warm. It will give immediate relief.

Lemon Float.—Boil one quart of fresh milk and three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Mix one tablespoontul of corn starch, stirred smoothly, and the grated rind of one lemon. When the whole has boiled ten minutes, add the yelks of three eggs, well beaten, and stir constantly for five minutes. Put the saucepan in which it was cooked into a pail of ice cold water, and stir sometime: then strain into a pudding dish. Thoroughly beat the whites of the eggs, add the juice of the lemon and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Pour over the pudding and serve ice cold. Grated cocoanut can be added to the whites with advantage.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO.

A young and earnest pilgrim,
Travelling the King's highway,
Conning over the lessons
From the guide-book, every day,
Said, as each hindrance met him,
With purpose firm and true,
"If on earth He walked to-day.
What would Jesus do?"

It grew to be his watchword
In service or in fight;
Helped to keep his pilgrim garb
Unsullied, pure, and white,
For when temptation lured him
It nerved him through and through
To ask this simple question:
"What would Jesus do?"

Now, if it be our purpose
To walk where Christ has led,
To follow in His footsteps
With ever careful tread;
O let this be our watchword,
A watchword pure and true,
To ask in each temptation;
"What would Jesus do?"

Two Little Backs and Two Little Burdens.

"Isn't it nice to get home, Munnie?" Little Kittie had slipped out of her "Sunday dress" and into her brown gingham in a twinkling, and was sitting on the door step of her country home, enjoying the sweet spring air.

"It is nice to have you think so," answered mother, pleased and surprised. "Do you know, little Kit, I was rather afraid you would be pining for all the fine city ways we have just left."

"City ways, indeed?" cried Kitty, sniffing the white hyacinths in her right hand. "Why mother, they didn't have a single growing thing, except some dusty palms that didn't grow any. Think of never seeing the little leaves come up out of the ground, and do such wonders as to make stalks, and buds and things. My, but I would think that was a stupid sort of a home! Only to have white and gold jardiniers for a flower bed!"

"They have other pretty things instead," said the mother. "I would dearly love to have such a beautiful home as your Aunt Agnes, and such accomplished servants, and such libraries to go to and such good schools, and all that."

"Yes, I suppose so," answered Kitty, doubtfully; "but it seemed a mighty stuffy sort of life, all in rooms. I would get so tired of rooms, wouldn't you, Munnie? They never saw their best friends except in rooms. Why I wouldn't love Rose Langley half as well if I couldn't sit on the old ice house with her or climb up the hay loft."

"There comes Rose now," said her mother, and Kittie flew down the gravel walk to meet her comrade and carry her off to the shingled-roof of the ice house.

"I thought the child would find her home dull and plain," said Kitty's mother to herself, "after the ease and luxury we have seen. Thank God for fitting little backs to their own little burdens, as well as our old shoulders to the heavier packs."

The other part of this "house to house" plan took effect presently, when the hyacinths had give place to roses, and the pretty apple blossoms had twined into little green globes. Mrs. Agnes Moore shut up her elegant house on Fayette avenue and went with her husband and children to visit Sister Kate in the little village of Pimlico.

How cool and sweet the shady yard seemed after the glare of hot bricks; how good strawberries tasted, fresh from the vines, with cream that had so few stages between the clover stops and the saucer!

It was a happy time for both families, and the city kin found it delightful to lay aside the conventionalities of dress and manner and be free and easy all day long.

But visiting time cannot last forever, not even for a very long piece of forever, and the first days of September found the Moores unpacking their trunks in the Fayette-avenue house, and taking the mosquito bars off the pictures.

"It is nice to get back, isn't it Mother?" said little Agnes, while perhaps some ministering spirit remembered Kitty's speech and smiled a moonbeam smile; "Home seems so pretty and comfortable."

"Does it?" said Mrs. Agnes, "I was afraid you would miss the freedom, my dear."

"O, that was very nice for a while, but it would be very dull for all the time, mother. Flowers, and chickens, and bird's-nests can't take the place of people you know. I was longing to be in a crowd again, to see things going on and being done. And then, mother, don't laugh at me, but arn't you delighted to get back to a sure enough bathtub and hot and cold water spigots? I do think the proof of being civilized is having a bath-tub to get into, instead of bathing one elbow at a time!"

"I will remind you of that some cold morning," laughed her mother; but she was pleased that the child should find home so much more the best place, and without knowing that the ministering spirit was smiling again, she said to herself: "The heavenly Father fits our backs to our burdens, even slim little backs, I suppose."—Elizabeth P. Allen.

An Interesting Exercise.

"How many things come on the table that begin with A?"

The children thought a minute, and one responded, "Apples;" another, "Almonds;" another "Asparagus."

"Is there nothing else we eat that begins with A?"

No answer.

"Well, look it up after dinner."

"What do we eat that begins with B?" A simultaneous shout, "Beef;" "Beans," "Bread," followed in quick succession.

"Now I want you to make up lists of all the articles of food used by us, or any human beings but cannibals. You may hunt through the cook-books, through the dictionary, through the botany, through the encyclopedias and books of travel. Put each list under its appropriate letter, and at the bottom of each list the number it aggregates. Then the aggregate of the whole. We shall then easily see on what the human race subsists. The one that gets the longest list is to have a prize."

Right after dinner the children made little blank books, leaving a page for each letter of the alphabet, and set to work on their quest. It couldn't be concluded in half a day or half a year, but it was decided that in three-months they should compare notes, and see which one had made the largest aggregate.

The books were a curious study when they came in. In going over the lists a great many items were struck out, Meat, being one, though beef, mutton, and pork were allowed to remain. Cake was struck from the list, and its components, wheat, eggs, sugar, butter, &c., allowed to remain. What was left when the revision was made represented the original staples used as food.

Of course, some of the pages, as K and Q were not very well filled.

"I think C is a mean letter," said one of the boys; "it robs poor K of all nearly that belongs to him, and not content with that, filches from S what rightly belongs to him. Indeed, if C gave up all he has taken away from his neighbors, I don't know what he'd have left if H didn't come to help him out."

The children talked over their pursuit in the line of foods with their playmates, and several of them started books and lists, to which, as they read, they were continually adding.

If anyone thinks this exercise is not interesting, let him engage in it and see. —Belfast Witness.

For an attack of billousness, drink half a cupful of cold boneset tea before breakfast for two weeks. The tea should be made strong. Gather the blossoms of the boneset before the frost touches them, as they are better than the leaves.

Throw dish water around fruit trees, currants, gooseberries, etc. Coffee grounds are said to be valuable when put around shrubbery and flowering plants.

"Grin Like a Cheshire Cat."

"Well, well! Didn't ever hear of a 'grin like a Cheshire cat?' Why, you see, a man down in Cheshire had a cat which grinned and grinned until there was nothing left of the cat but the grin, just as some scrofulous people, who don't know of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, get a cough, and then cough and cough until there is nothing left of them to erect a monument to but the cough."

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the most effective, anti-bilious, anti-dyspeptic, strength-giving remedy extant. For weak lungs, lingering coughs, spitting of blood, scrofula, sores, pimples and ulcers, it is a wonderful and efficacious remedy.

Its manufacturers guarantee it to do all that they claim, or money is returned.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure constipation, piles, sick headache, and indigestion, or dyspepsia.

The man who thinks life is a joke sometimes wonders where the laugh comes in.

If rich, it is easy enough to conceal our wealth; but if poor, it is not quite so easy to conceal poverty. We shall find that it is less difficult to hide a thousand dollars than one hole in our coat.

Wadeville church having been called to consider the resignation of Rev. K. A. McLeod, who has labored so faithfuly among us for nearly five years, the following was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, Rev. K. A. McLeod, the beloved pastor of Wadeville church, is called to labor in a new field to which the Lord has called him and whereas he feels it his duty to accept this call, and has asked for a severance of the tie that binds him to this church, therefore Resolved 1st. That we as a church do humbly bow in submission to the will of an All-wise Providence, though in so doing we are conscious of our great loss and our hearts are deeply pained at the thought of separation.

2nd. That during the time he has labored among us, that our intercourse with him in public and private life has been exceedingly pleasant; that we have always had reason to rely upon him with the fullest confidence, and it is with the greatest reluctance that we now release him. And further, we commend him to those among whom he goes to labor, as a most faithful, considerate pastor, and untiring worker, and a Christian that will dare to do right.

3rd. We pray God's richest blessings on him and his family in his new field of labor and desire to be remembered in his prayers when he is no longer in our midst as our beloved pastor and faithful friend.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be presented to him

THE WOMAN'S CONVENTION.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Committee (not union) of the Presbytery of Wilmington held its annual convention at Kenansville in Grove church, Duplin county, N. C., Thursday and Friday, June 7th and 8th, last week. The chairman of the committee, Mrs. B. F. HALL, as President of the convention, was in place from first to last, and Mrs. Dr. FEARINGTON as treasurer and ad interim secretary, had her business well in hand. The convention opened with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Mr. McINTYRE as pastor of the church, and Mr. McCLURE as Presbyterial agent of Foreign Missions. There were found to be a goodly number of delegates present from our city churches and the churches on the W. & W. railroad, but few from the churches east or west of that.

From the first meeting to the last there was a tender spiritual feeling pervading the counsels and deliberations. The hymns "Jesus Lover of my Soul," and "More Love to Thee, O CHRIST," were made the first expressions of prayerful praise and of the devout longings of the worshippers. The afternoon session was quite informal, but happy in some reports of the addresses of Rev. W. H. SHEPPARD and others. The address of welcome by Mrs. HENRY FARRIOR and the response by Mrs. W. T. BANNERMAN, were hearty and helpful. The changed relations of the missionaries formerly supported by the societies gave rise to earnest discussion of the best use to make of the contributions. An appeal was made for more thorough personal consecration and a strong desire was felt that laborers might go forth from the churches of our Presbytery and especially from these societies to the work abroad. The importance of having the Missionary more generally taken was discussed and means were devised to increase its circulation as well as to furnish material and programmes for the monthly meetings of the societies.

The aggregate income of all the societies of the Presbytery showed a falling off which was due to the financial depression of the year, but the delegates felt and resolved that the work of the year should be done more aggressively and vigorously than that of the past. To increase interest and furnish additional information it was resolved to hold a meeting in Wilmington in the fall and to have Mrs. RANDOLPH and others attend. If better attendance can be secured it may be arranged to hold the yearly convention in the fall. The question of holding two yearly meetings will be discussed at the fall meeting.

The death of Rev. F. A. COWAN, of our Brazil mission was announced and a letter of sympathy was adopted and ordered to be sent to his wife. This was followed by a promise meeting with which this deeply spiritual convention closed its sessions.

Throughout the sessions the ladies took counsel without the presence of men, so that our record is made of their reports. We learned that sentence prayers were tried with good results and that the members generally took part in the precious promise service. There is no danger that our elect ladies will transgress Scripture in public speaking or counsels. While we rejoice that they are aroused to labor, pray and wait for the cause of CHRIST and His blessing.

Public meetings were held at night and during the day as conducted by Rev. Messrs. GRINNAN and SAMPSON in whose presence, addresses and counsels the community shared with the delegates a feast of fat things. The Island Empire of Japan was brought near and the condition and needs of women there and in other heathen countries was made plain. The morning meeting specially for children was doubly interesting by the use of articles in common use in Japan and by costumes for men and women worn by two of the young people. This people of Kenansville, with their famed hospitality welcomed and entertained the delegates cordially and received these returns gratefully as sufficient compensation.

As this month of June is set apart in our missionary magazines for the study of Africa it was agreed to hold a Palaver, not such as the biography of Mr. LAPSLEY and the reports from the Dark Continent have made familiar but suggested by that. The place and purpose of maps in the Monthly Concerts and missionary addresses was brought out and it was found that through the agency of the student's volunteer movement a good missionary map was soon to be prepared. It was further shown, that all our present needs can be fairly met by using a map of the world with America in the middle as now sold by the A. B. C. F. M. for two dollars and a half. Such a map was shown and studied to show the amount of territory still without the gospel.

By statement of fact it was shown that the place of residence of consular agents and the lives they lead, as well as the characters of tradesmen who combine to criticise the work of missionaries rendered them unfit to form opinions or pass judgment. So that when we read statements about the failure of missionary work or the injuricus effect on the nations we may not be disturbed. It was further shown that "globe trotters" are not competent to make any statement of fact or opinion as to the work of missions when they visit only a few temples and cities, and hear only the opposition of those whose immoral lives are constantly condemned by the preaching and practice of the missionaries.

We lament the absence of delegates from many societies and feel that all who did not attend missed the delightful entertainment of the people, the many points for practical work, the rich additional information on missionary fields and topics and the spiritual joy and strength of the Convention. Let every society make arrangements to send delegates to the meeting this fall to see, and hear Mrs. RANDOLPH and to share the spiritual blessings and gather the information sure to be given them. Look out for it and be sure to attend. May God's rich blessings be ministered to the good women who are engaged in these conventions and in all church work.

DEATH OF REV. DR. HENRY M. SMITH.

DR. HENRY M. SMITH was born at Carlisle, Pa., in June, 1828, and died at Bay St. Louis, Miss., last week. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1851, and completed his theological studies at Columbia Seminary in 1853. His first charge was the Second Presbyterian church, Charleston, S. C. For a few months after his arrival in New Orleans he was connected with the First Presbyterian church of that city, afterwards for twenty-five years he had charge of the Third Presbyterian church. He was a chaplain in the Confederate army and during the last year published the Army and Navy Messenger, a religious paper, for circulation among the soldiers and sailors. He became the editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian in 1869; this he resigned in 1889. He spent the latter years of his life in Kentucky where he resided for the benefit of his health.

HERE AND THERE.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT Natchez, Miss., has called Rev. R. E. CALDWELL, of Winston, to the pastorate. This is the church of which Rev. Dr. STRATTON was the pastor for fifty years, only retiring a very few months ago because of age—being now in his 79th year. It is an important church, the largest in the Synod of Mississippi, having over four hundred members, who contribute liberally; but we wish to remark that it is desirable that our sister Synods look somewhere else when they want the best preachers and pastors. North Carolina has been wont to furnish them liberally in the past, and is not yet exhausted, still there ought to be some moderation exercised in such matters.

MOREOVER THERE IS AN ADAGE THAT lightning never strikes twice in the same place, but Winston it seems is to be made an exception. It has not been two years since one of the most efficient of pastors was taken from this church and now the same thing is attempted again. We trust the church at Winston and the Synod is not to lose Mr. CALDWELL.

A GRINDSTONE IS A SORRY AFFAIR without a crank by which to turn it. And every reform movement, or nearly so, is inaugurated by and mainly owes its success to those who bear the odium, frequently amounting to hatred or contempt, that attaches to innovation. MARTIN LUTHER was a crank of the very first order, hardly superior, however, it may be to JOHN KNOX, in his energizing power; and so through all history. The epithet dies however with success and these men are now rated as the world's benefactors.

ALL THAT PRELIMINARY TO INTRODUCing the Rev. Dr. PARKHURST for whom the public have not been able to find terms of contempt severe enough for adequate denunciation. He has attacked unsparingly the corruption in the municipal and judicial government of New York City and secured thereby the deathless and most envenomed hatred of the officials involved, of course. He has too, had the bitterest opposition of the Tammany Hall crew of politicians to contend with, these aided and abetted even by the governor of the State; and he has had, where not the earnest hostility, certainly not the active co-operation of the secular press; and with it all he has until very recently lacked the hearty sympathy of his friends and Christian brethren—for which last he has had himself largely to blame.

BUT DR. PARKHURST IS EMERGING from the condition in which every one was wont to style him "crank." A Senate Committee was appointed by the Legislature to investigate the municipal affairs of New York city. Dr. PARKHURST is producing evidence before them which proves most conclusively and in fullest detail a state of most abominable venality. Police captains, ward henchmen, politicians and policeman have had their price for winking at the most outrageous, the most infamous, vice and immorality. Supporters are gathering around the man who has now the prospect of succeeding, and we yet may see a greatly improved state of affairs in the national metropolis.

A YOUNG LOUISVILLE PRESBYTERIAN, A member of a large Southern Church, was a visitor at the Saratoga Assembly. He was greatly chagrined by the telegram from Nashville. "It does not represent the sentiment of the young men of the Southern Church to-day," said he to the writer. And he added words to this effect: There can be no Organic Union of the two branches until there are about a dozen or so first-class funerals in the Southern Church.

We clip from the Mid-Continent. The idea that our oldest men are dominating the Church; that they must die and then will come Organic Union is prevalent at the North. But it is a mistake, as is the notion that Organic Union must come sooner or later. The latter idea is inculcated no doubt in order to bring about a willingness to submit to what will come to be considered as inevitable. We started to say, that the notion that opposition to Organic Union is confined to the old men is a figment of the imagination—the wish is father to the thought.

OUR GOOD BROTHER, THE EDITOR OF the Southern Presbyterian who favors Organic Union, says:

There is a band of men in our Church, not old men nor men excited by the passions of the late war, but men in their prime and young men, who are earnestly opposed even to the discussion of this question. They regard it as unwise, as tending to produce agitation, and perhaps as leading to a dissevering of our Southern Church.

NOW THAT CERTAINLY IS TRUE, AND we respect the fairness and the courtesy of our contemporary in stating it just as he has. And why should not those who were born in the Church, and know no other, be unwilling to surrender the seminaries and the churches, and all other property and to blot out even the very name of their ecclesiastical mother?

AN ANECDOTE CREDITED TO HARRISON'S Magazine we find in an exchange. An old man anxious to invest $3,000, but exceedingly timid on the matter, sought out JAY COOKE, the famous banker, and was with some difficulty induced to invest in some bonds Mr. COOKE was putting on the market. The matter so far settled, the banker asked:

"What denomination will you have them in?"

"This was too much for the old gentleman. He had never heard that word used in connection with business. He scratched his head, and said:

"You may give me $500 in Old School Presbyterian, to please the old woman; but I will take the heft of it in Baptist."

WE HAVE OURSELVES THOUGHT THAT that it is sometimes not the wisest thing to appoint ad interim committees, especially committees of Conference—because of their proneness to get away from the subject immediately in hand. Still there is business which the interests of the Church require to be investigated or studied and which with due reference to the interests of the Kingdom cannot be settled off hand.

BUT HERE IS WHAT OUR SOUTHERN neighbor says about it:

"This tendency to multiply ad interim Committees is a sign of the times, and reminds us of the 'Pirke Aboth' of the Talmud. 'To put a hedge around the Law' was the attempt of the old Scribes, and so we have the Torah—the inspired Law; the Mishna, the Rabbinic Commentary; the Gemara, the 'Completion,' or additional explanation of later scribes on the Mishna; and the Tosephtoth or 'additions' of still later jurists."

"THE PRESBYTERIAN LEAGUE OF New York and Vicinity" is the name of an association of which the following is the aim and purpose as set forth by sympathizers with Dr. BRIGGS:

"The League aims to bring about, sooner or later, the reversal of the burdensome and unjust ecclesiastical action recently taken by courts of the Presbyterian Church.

"The league desires to encourage all reverent study of the Bible and all attempts made in humble reliance upon the Spirit of God, so to restate the difficult questions of theology and so to present the truth as it is in Jesus as to remove stumbling-blocks out of the way, enrich the experience of the Church and equip it for its great work of preaching the gospel to every creature."

The Executive Committee is made up of fifteen Presbyterian clergymen and laymen.

IN THE ARENA, HON. WALTER CLARK, a justice of the North Carolina Supreme Court contributes a very able article on the subject of election of postmasters by the people. No provision, Judge CLARK admits, has been made in the constitution for this, but neither has the election of postmasters by the Senators and Representatives been provided for, and to this it has really come. The outcome now is, that the person selected, while certainly not the choice of the party in power, is often simply the person who can best serve the interests of some prominent politician.

LIKE AS TO THE JURY QUESTION, WE all will admit something is seriously wrong, but just what is the remedy does not so clearly appear. However, the remedy for evil must come through discussion, and Judge CLARK has done the public a service in presenting so clearly and intelligently his views on the subject.

THE SCANDAL, FOR IT IS A SAD scandal, caused by the removal of the remains of the late Senator VANCE from the place where they were deposited at his own special, dying, wish, has not yet revealed the power behind the throne. A "fine Italian hand" was there undoubtedly; it ought to be revealed.

IT IS PUBLISHED THAT WHEN SENATOR VANCE was dying a Roman Catholic priest was about to perform the last sacrament but was prevented, Senator VANCE having requested that none of the rites of the Roman Catholic church be allowed near him. If these rites had been permitted he would have been heralded as having died in the Roman communion, as in case of the late General W. T. SHERMAN.

PROTEST.

We published last week the text of the amendment on the subject of Licensure and Ordination sent down by the General Assembly to the Presbyteries for their action. We now, for better understanding of the whole subject, give our readers the protest which the Assembly admitted to record:

The General Assembly having determined to send down to the Presbyteries an overture proposing certain changes in the law touching licensure, we, the undersigned, respectfully request your venerable body that the following protest be admitted to record: We protest against the said action for the following reasons:

I. Our law is ample, if obeyed, and the remedy for disregard of law is not more law.

II. Licensure is not in order to training, but in order to the reception of a call from God's people, and to ordination thereupon.

III. Licensure for a fixed time is contrary to the spirit of Presbyterianism and to the doctrine of our Church with reference to a call to the ministry.

IV. The action proposed and recommended prohibits not only candidates from conducting services under judicious pastors and sessions, but by parity also all other laymen from the same exercise of gifts unless they obtain formal license.

V. The present system is best because if irregularities occur, they are at least not authorized, and do not bind the whole Church.

VI. A certain percentage of candidates prove unworthy, and the earlier the licensure, the larger must be the percentage, and the more direct and notorious the reproach falling upon the Church.

VII. The licensure of candidates at an earlier stage in their course of preparation will lead, as we believe, to a lower standard of ordination.

VII. Licensing an evil [immature preaching] does not remove the evil, but rather aggravates it.

A noted Sunday-school teacher has on her table two contribution boxes. One is the receptacle for ordinary pennies. The other, resplendent with gilt paint, is reserved for the contributions which the children have earned or saved themselves. The lesson is not lost on the little ones, and the honor of placing and offering in in "the gold box" is eagerly sought after.

ABIDING WITH GOD.

Let every one, whate'er his calling be Therein abide with God. So wrote of old
Saint Paul to them at Corinth, and to me
With loving lips to-night that truth was told.
I had grown weary with my strifes and cares,
And murmured at the service of the day,
Wherein I had forgotton, unawares,
That thus I still might honor and obey.

Abide with God! Would I might ne'er forget
That evermore I may with Him abide!
What matters how or when the stamp is set,
Or what the furnace where the gold is tried,
So that the metal has the sterling ring,
So that the likeness of the King is shown—
God's coinage still, that to the soul will bring
Such wealth as merchant princes have not known.

In market-places where the race is swift,
And competition on temptation waits;
In quiet homes where unseen currents drift
A thousand petty cares through open gates—
Let each and all, whate'er the calling be,
Therein abide with God; from break of day
Till set of sun they shall His purpose see,
And serve Him in His own appointed way.

So let me see and serve, and thus abide:
Not simply patient, or at best content:
Not with eye-service, wherein, love denied,
In rounds of duty solemn days are spent.
Give me, O Lord, a joy that is divine,
Touch Thou my lips with constant themes of praise,
Since, having Thee, all things I need are mine,
Whate'er my lot, whate'er my length of days.

"INTO" OR "IN."

A Contribution on the Disputed Question of Whether the Baptismal Formula should be "Into the Name" (or "In the Name" as it has been for ages.)

It is to be remembered that the Greek of the New Testament i. e., the colloquial Greek of the first and second centuries of the Christian era, was not in all respects, and in some very important respects, not, the classic Greek of Thucydides, Xenophon or Plato, who lived and spoke and wrote five hundred years earlier. While it is true, that the sacred writers manifestly possessed a great command of Greek; and in expressing even minute and diversified relations, usually employ prepositions with Hellenic propriety—yet the best scholars and those most familiar with the peculiarities of the New Testament Greek diction—(Dr. Geo. Benedict Wines and others) tell us again and again,—(and illustrate the truth and importance of the caution) that "it is of the utmost importance to keep in view how far later Greek, and in particular the colloquial Hellenic of the apostolic age, had extended the use and import of prepositions, overlooked nice distinctions or even admitted improprieties in employing them." Let this be specially noted with great deference to the splendid Greek scholarship of the English scholars who have given us the recently published Revised Version of the Old and New Testament. I humbly venture the opinion, that they have made mistakes in sometimes considering it more classic Greek than it is, and so have occasionally mistranslated it. And on the main point to which I call attention in this article, I hesitate not to say that perhaps no preposition in the Greek language came to be and was more extended and varied in its import and use than the preposition εἰς (eis).

I am thoroughly convinced εἰς τὸ ὄνομα did not mean in the language and at the time of St. Matthew what our English —"into the name" now means. In the 10th chapter of this gospel (41st and 42d verses) we read "He that receiveth a prophet "in the name" of a prophet, * * * he that receiveth a righteous man "in the name" of a righteous man, whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, "in the name" of a disciple," &c. In the 18th chap. and 20th verse, we read when two or three are gathered together "in my name," there am I in the midst of them." In the 28th chapter and 19th verse we read, "baptizing them "in the name" of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost." These are the only instances in which St. Matthew employs the phrase εἰς τὸ ὄνομα. They have evidently the same meaning. It is noticeable, however, that St. Mark 9 : 37 says, "Whosoever shall receive one of such children "in my name," &c., and instead of εἰς (as St. Matthew) he has επὶ, with the dative case and in the next verse (38th) where we read "casting out devils "in thy name," it is the simple dative without any preposition, and in the 41st verse, "whosoever shall give you a cup of cold water to drink "in my name," the "in" in the English, is not εἰς as St. Matthew, but is ἐν in the Greek, and thus we find that "in the name" is expressed by St. Mark seven times by επὶ and six times by ἐν, and what is noteworthy, two of these are identical with St. Matthew who uses εἰς. So St. Luke uses επὶ and ἐν one or the other six times. St. John uses ἐν always to express "in my name," or in my Father's name—some twelve or thirteen times.

In the Book of Acts, the phrase occurs some thirteen times.

Acts 2 : 38. "Be baptized every one of you in (επὶ) the name of Jesus Christ, for (εἰς) the remission of sins."

Acts 3 : 6." In (ἐν) the name of Jesus, &c., rise up and walk."

Acts 4 : 7 By (ἐν) what name have ye done this?

Acts 4 : 10. By (ἐν) the name of Jesus Christ."

Acts 4 : 17. "Speak henceforth to no man in (επὶ) this name."

Acts 4 : 18. "Nor teach in (επὶ) the name of Jesus."

Indeed, all through the Acts, the preposition is sometimes ἐν and sometimes εἰς.

In Acts 2 : 38. We read "baptized, ἐπὶ the name of Jesus."

In Acts 8 : 16. We read "baptized, εἰς the name of the Lord Jesus."

In Acts 10 : 48. We read "baptized ἐν the name of the Lord."

In Acts 19 : 5. We read "baptized εἰς the name of the Lord Jesus.

It is very plain that εἰς had come to express a great many ideas beside "into." In St. Matthew 17th chap., 27th verse, Christ says to Peter, "Go thou to the sea and cast a hook"—here the Greek for to is εἰς. Surely he was not commanded to "go into the sea." So St. John 20 : 1, 3, and 4, "unto the sepulchre" is "εἰς the sepulchre," yet it is afterwards said, "Yet went he not in." However this only shows the trend of the usage. The truth is the preposition εἰς came in the declining period of the Greek language to be used where the classic writers would never have used it. If any one will take the trouble to look into modern Greek, he will find that in almost every place in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, and Acts, where the New Testament writers have used επὶ or ἐν, the modern Greek New Testament uses εἰς. It seems to me that this is the case without an exception. I have looked at 35 cases of ἐν and επὶ and the modern Greek in every case uses εἰς. This shows I repeat, the trend of the language—and this is evident at the Hellenic or New Testament age, and therefore, it is unsafe and hazardous—and we believe wrong and misleading to substitute "into" for "in" in the baptismal formula. This comprehensive preposition cannot and ought not to be so restricted. "Into" will often answer, but many a time, and in ideal relations especially it would mislead the mind from the truth. It often denotes any aim or end, "toward" indicating the objects to which some feeling, disposition, deportment is directed, (even equal to "ergo," and sometimes "contra") "εἰς the gospel" (i. e., "for the interests of the gospel, to promote the cause of the gospel,) very often it has a still more general sense, and may be better expressed by one phrase, "with regard to"—"in reference to." Some things were said as to the meaning of εἰς in the debate in the Assembly that cannot be sustained by thorough scholarship in the New Testament diction.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Errata in last number. (1) Only one of the North Carolina ministers preached on Monday the fourth day of the Assembly. (2) Dr. Wilson made application to the British Bible Society for books, not for work. (3) The twenty names attached to Mr. Elwang's protest did not form a majority of the minority vote on the Webb substitute. (4) The vote on Organic Union was taken on Wednesday afternoon and Wednesday's proceedings are noted in the last column of the report. This report therefore begins with

THURSDAY MORNING, SEVENTH DAY.

After devotional exercises conducted by Rev. J. G. Law, of South Carolina, reports were heard from the standing committees on Education for the Ministry and Theological Seminaries. The reports were docketed. Rev. J. H. Thornwell, D. D., presented a carefully prepared narrative which was adopted. The report noted regretfully that 1,000 churches within our bounds have not heeded the last command of their ascended Lord. There has been a steady growth in the churches, an average of seven additions to each church. One Presbytery reported 880 additions, and all have confined themselves to the legitimate means of grace as dispensed by authorized ambassadors of Christ. The Sabbath is generally well observed, the churches are almost entirely free from intemperance and questionable amusements and are growing in the grace of giving. The Church has abundant cause for encouragement and thanksgiving and sends cheerful greeting to all its own churches bidding them go forth conquering and to conquer.

Mr. T. S. McPheeters made the report of the auditing committee. All accounts were found to be correct. Mr. D. W. Oates and Mr. A. G. Brenizer were elected and Dr. E. Nye Hutchinson, James P. Irwin and George F. Bason were re-elected trustees of the Assembly. The various auditing committees for the Assembly's executive committees were also appointed.

Drs. Beatty and Hemphill, professors in Louisville Seminary, have been visitors to the Assembly, meeting old friends and making new ones. Dr. Beatty preached this morning a clear and simple exposition of the plan of salvation, from Ephesians 1 : 7. "In whom we have redemption through His blood." Nearly every day a motion has been made to dispense with public worship, and has been defeated by smaller and smaller majorities as the business of the Assembly has become more pressing. This is probably the last sermon of the series.

Before the sermon Dr. T. E. Converse, chairman of the special committee on Licensure, read the report of the majority committee. Rev. G. T. Storey read the minority report which was substantially the Mecklenburg overture. The minority report was considered the substitute, but both papers were before the Assembly for criticism and decision. No more important matter has come before us. The reports came up as unfinished business at the

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The question on the licensure of candidates is one that will not down. It was felt that it did not have a fair hearing before the Birmingham Assembly. If we recollect aright it was in the fall succeeding that Assembly that plucky little Albemarle Presbytery sent up an overture to the next Assembly to consider the matter again. At the last Assembly the committee on Bills and Overtures, "in view of the manifest desire in many parts of the Church to have such change in the matter of licensure as will authorize those seeking the gospel ministry to try their gifts in a regular and orderly manner at an earlier period, * * * " moved the appointment of an ad interim committee to report on the subject to the next Assembly. Rev. E. M. Green, D. D., was chairman of the committee, and an admirable report in advocacy of a change was made to this Assembly. It speaks of a "prevailing sentiment" in our Church, first, that irresponsible preaching should not be permitted; second, that the standard of ministerial education should not be lowered, and third, that a change should be made in the requirements for licensure. But the question was also brought to the Assembly's attention by overtures from Wilmington, Mecklenburg, West Hanover, Louisville, Enoree, Charleston and Bethel. The standing committee appointed by this Assembly to consider the whole subject was a particularly able one. The majority report advocated a paper that had been most carefully prepared by one of our leading theological professors and had already been approved by a majority of all the professors in our seminaries. They are certainly not in favor of a lowering of the regular standard. The changes proposed also came up in the form of some of the overtures mentioned. The overture from Mecklenburg Presbytery was in favor of a minimum of change, and that only with reference to "extraordinary cases," requiring for them a sufficient course in English Bible, fundamental theology, Church history, &c. It was at once seen that this change was not inconsistent with the others advocated. The minority report however, answered all the other overtures in the negative. Dr. Converse spoke mainly to the point of the unlicensed preaching of candidates for the ministry, giving instances that had come under his notice. First seminary students had done this unlicensed preaching, then seniors at college, then juniors, then sophomores. It was intimated that the pulpit might be occupied by freshmen. The Assembly had however countenanced this abuse and there was no way to stop it save by the amendment proposed in the report, granting licensure after a year's study in divinity, and satisfactory examination, and prohibiting unlicensed preaching.

Rev. G. T. Storey, in advocacy of the minority report said that the evils of our present system were overestimated, that the fault was with the Presbyteries in not carrying out the existing law, that the time of the Presbyteries ought not to be wasted in discussing the changes proposed, that the step proposed was toward the practice of the Methodist Church, that we would have a new order of preachers if the plan should be adopted.

Dr. McPheeters said that he was voicing the demands of one of the most conservative of the Presbyteries; that there had been a movement in the direction of these changes as far back as the Assembly at Vicksburg. That the majority report was in the interest of higher education. That a man was licensed now with the idea of making the same examination stricter when it came to ordination, and then was ordained because he had already passed the same examination required then. License the man who had the common sense to preach the gospel and when he comes for ordination stand up for scholarship. Ordination is the "authentication of the divine call." Licensure was a part of the candidate's training and its object was to give additional training. Licentiates should be on probation to enable the church to determine their fitness as pastors and preachers. There was danger in making the fence so high that while it was impossible for the colts to jump over, it was a very easy matter for them to crawl under.

Dr. Daniel spoke in advocacy of the minority report, and defined the doctrine of our Church with regard to the call to the ministry. If a man is called of God to preach the gospel, he himself must be convinced of the call, the Presbytery must be convinced and the people must be convinced. His appearance before Presbytery was the sign of his own conviction, his licensure by Presbytery the sign of its conviction and the opportunity given for the people to arrive at their conclusion in the matter. Hence the close relation existing between licensure and ordination.

Rev. F. H. McCutcheon said briefly and forcibly that conduct should be regulated by law, not law by conduct, that the Presbytery should exercise its power and that our book gave permission for the preaching of unlicensed candidates.

Dr. Rosebro suggested that the majority report be amended by the addition of the Mecklenburg overture. It was dangerously like swapping horses while crossing a stream. The matter was settled by an understanding that should the majority report prevail the overture should also be sent down to the Presbyteries. The majority report was adopted and so the advocates of a minimum of change secured a maximum. The lowering of the old standard of licensure with regard to time of study and qualification, the lifting of the standard of ordination, the three year's term of licensure and the requirement that the licentiate prosecute his studies to a successful completion, are the features of the paper that was adopted and sent down to the Presbyteries.

[As kindly suggested by our correspondent, and is required by the demands of space, we omit a large part of the correspondence, interesting as it all is. This is exceedingly regretted, but under all the circumstances we cannot do otherwise. Just here, in accordance with above explanation, we omit the report, given quite fully by our correspondent, of the Means case. The result was as we have heretofore informed our readers to reverse the action of the Presbytery of Charleston, and of the session of the Second church of Columbia and to restore Miss Means to membership from which she had been suspended. This decision does not mean that the Assembly, or any other church courts authorize or approve of Sunday work merely because such work is the means of livelihood of those engaged therein—an interpretation which has been put upon the action of the Assembly by some secular newspapers.

We resume our correspondent's report with his comments on the Means case:]

We may note these things as the lessons of the trial. The Assembly has not veered from the historical position of the Presbyterian Church with regard to the Sabbath.

Our highest court will protect the rights of the humblest member of our Church.

Our newspapers should not take too strong a position on a judicial case until all the facts are in.

FRIDAY—EIGHTH DAY.

The case of appeal by Charleston Presbytery from the Synod of South Carolina was concluded on Friday afternoon. On the night of that day it was refreshing after the long controversy to take up the consideration of the Sabbath-school's report made by Rev. F. H. Gaines, chairman of the standing committee. Sixty-nine of the Presbyteries reported: 1,674 schools, 14,917 teachers and 123,349 scholars. Of these 5,107 have been admitted to the communion. Comparison with previous year was made, but the defective reports made such comparison of little value. Surely the figures given convey much of encouragement and hope. What an army it is! May the blessing of the God of the Covenant be upon these children of our mother Church! The elders showed their absorbing interest in this practical subject of Sunday-schools, and gave much of their valuable experience on the subject. Elder J. G. Barkley, of Kentucky, made a capital speech. One of the interesting results of the discussion was the appointment of an ad interim committee consisting of Drs. Gaines, Rosebro and Daniel, and Elders J. W. Wallace and G. W. Barkley to consider the question of an Assembly's agent of Sunday-schools—and, in answer to the overture from Albemarle Presbytery to consider a graded course of Sunday-school Lessons for the use of the children of our own Church, that will take the place of the International Lessons.

Dr. Daniel offered a protest against the action of the Assembly with regard to Licensure.

Dr. Summey offered a resolution to the effect that the secretaries of the Executive Committees be elected at a session of the Assembly with closed doors. It was subsequently adopted. It ought to be made a standing rule of the Assembly.

The report from the committee on Colored Evangelization was heard. In the absence of the efficient chairman who prepared the report Dr. L. E. Blanton, your correspondent was asked to act in his place. The report was signed by every member of the committee. The committee carefully examined the overture from Tuscaloosa Presbytery and Central Texas, asking for the abolition of the office of Secretary and the transference of the work to the Home Mission Committee. The persons representing these Presbyteries were also heard. It was discovered that the were not two independent motions arising in different parts of the Church, but were one and the same. The committee declined to make the change proposed, but recommended the election of the former executive committee and of Rev. A. L. Phillips as secretary. It also approved the administration of the work during the past year and cordially commended the cause to the loyal and hearty support of our Church. It asks for $15,000 for the coming year.

Dr. Otts offered a substitute to this report in the line of the overtures from the Presbyteries mentioned above. Indifference at once changed to interest. There was a manifestation of electricity in the air. Dr. Otts complained that too many were helping him make his speech. One statement of his was corrected however, that $3,000 were spent in administering $10,000. Out of that amount the salaries of the two teachers at Tuscaloosa Institute (now named "Stillman Institute") were paid, and the expense of the work amounts to about $350 more than before the election of a secretary. So the expense of the argument was quietly eliminated. Dr. Otts was interrupted by the adjournment of the Assembly and claimed the floor when the subject came up as unfinished business next morning.

GOLD DUST.

Kind words produce their own image in men's souls, and a beautiful image it is. They soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.—Pascal.

A Sunday-School Thermometer.

The Sunday-school of a Baptist Church in Chicago has a novel and interesting way of announcing and registering the attendance. It is by means of the "Sunday-School Thermometer." A long glass tube is mounted upon a wooden frame, the whole resembling a large thermometer. The scale is graduated by tens and hundreds, the degrees in this case ranging from 400 to 1,000. A string or tape, part of which is colored a bright red to represent the mercusy, runs through the centre of the tube, and and may be moved up or down by means of a small crank at the head. 400 is designated as "very cold," 500 "cold," 600 "temperate," 700, "warm," 800, "very warm," 900, "hot," 1,000, "very hot." The idea is an excellent one, and deserves imitation.—Youth's Journal.

WARD SEMINARY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Ward Seminary has just closed one of the most successful years in its history. There have been enrolled more than three hundred pupils, one hundred of whom have been boarders. The commencement exercises from first to last were characterized by originality and unusual excellence. Concerts were give by the pupils of the different music teachers to large and appreciative audiences. On May 24th, the pupils of the Kindergarten and Primary departments gave a most novel entertainment. The little folks, gowned after the manner of their elders, appeared in the "Tea Party." Unlimited applause greeted them and the evening was a perfect success. "Portraits from English History" were presented by the pupils.

The baccalaureate sermon, preached by the Rev. J. W. Walden, D. D., of New Orleans, was a masterly effort. Wise and earnest counsel was given the young ladies just entering upon the sterner duties of life, &c. The attention of the vast congregation attested the interest awakened by the scholarly divine. Monday and Tuesday were devoted to the Art reception. The display of crayon and charcoal work, oil, water color and china painting was entirely unlike that of the ordinary school exhibition. The work was from the life model, still life and casts. The china painting designs were largely original, as all true art should be; in fact the whole exhibition was one of a genuine art school and did not partake of a character of work usually done in a young ladies' seminary. The universal opinion was that this exhibition was the best ever seen in Nashville. The commencement exercises proper occupied Wednesday evening and were quite unlike the exercises of the olden time. The ten fair graduates, in their snowy robes, were of course the center of attraction, and the many rare flowers showered upon them testified to their popularity. Senior essays are no longer read in public in this institution but are submitted to the criticism of the faculty. The time usually devoted to these was occupied by Mr. Leon H. Vincent, of Philadelphia in a finished and eloquent address on "Heroic Reading." U. S. Circuit Judge, Geo. R. Sage, after a short and spicy address to the graduates presented them their well earned diplomas.

Ward Seminary, situated in the heart of Nashville, has been in operation thirty years and is probably the best known school for girls in the South. Three years ago it was purchased by the Presbyterians of Nashville and under the new management much has been done by way of improvement of the property, and increase in thoroughness and general efficiency of the school. Twenty-six teachers are employed and the best advantages are offered in every department. Ward Seminary deserves the hearty support of Presbyterians.

Compliments.

Luther never spake a truer word than when he said: "In truth I see and feel that those who mention me to my disadvantage do me most good." Happy are the uses of an enemy to a man seeking to perfect himself in virtue or religion. An enemy never flatters, and that is a great and good thing.

Compliment is the synonym of adulation and flattery, but being the popular and active member of the firm it has absorbed to a great degree the capital, character, and uses of the others. Less offensive to taste, with a fairer reputation than either flattery or adulation, compliment gives currency and value to the worst features of both. Not so sordid nor cringingly false as adulation, yet it keeps its eye open to the interests of number one, and is always complaisant and obsequious if it never speaks; not so gross as flattery, it smoothes its tongue, and improves its taste, and flatters in a wiser way, and with a more delicate taste, than flattery could do. Compliment was born and christened in hardy times, and started on an honest and manly career, but it went to school to policy, and fell in company with insincerity, guile, and fashion, and lost its original simplicity and character, and became the servant of selfishness and servility, and not the friend of duty and high esteem.

The fear of being dull or uninteresting often leads to compliments. But the weak, unamiable, selfish desire to please is the fruitful source of this bad thing. Badinage, or the lack of heart, or the lack of head, may be profuse in compliments. But complimenting is not always playful, or heartless, or headless. It is often very deliberate and serious business, having method, head, and heart in it. The set purpose is to gain influence, to be popular, and complimenting is the route to that influence or popularity. Compliment is the ready slave of ambition. It is the demagogue's right hand. It does not "wade through slaughter to a throne," but it does that which in its measure is as criminal, it creates and inflames vanity. It destroys simplicity and purity. Of compliment Mr. Wesley said: "A vile word, the very sound of which I abhor. I advise men of sincerity and simplicity never to take that silly word into their mouths; but labor to keep at the utmost distance both from the name and the thing."

Vanity is the strong point of weak men, and the weak point of strong men. Compliment comes in at the point of vanity. It is always a welcome visitor at that door. The exposure of women to attacks on the side of vanity is proverbial, but the proverb has been made by the vanity of man. Vanity may be hereditary with woman, with man it is epidemic and natural. Vanity is universal in the race, and to gratify it is the readiest road to favor, and complimenting is the readiest way to gratify vanity. That all men have a streak of vanity is true, and that it makes one feel good to tickle this vanity is also true; but that duty or piety demand us to minister to this piety is not true It cannot be innocently ministered to. Our duty is to cure it, for it and piety cannot co-exist. Roughness, sourness, severity, are not the antonyms or cure for complimenting. But honesty, fidelity, plain, sober speaking are the remedies for its insincerity, falsehood, and its thousand other evils.

In God's language, to the stern old Hebrew flattery means smooth. The false prophets brought not God's message, but prophesied smooth things, because this pleased the people, and made them popular and influential. Many a modern pulpit seeks to bring not the message that God would have them bring, but the message that pleases. With them that blasphemous maxim prevails, "The voice of the people is the voice of God." In these pulpits smooth doctrine, oily sentences, pleasing compliments have been the staple commodity so long that the people will not tolerate candor, sincerity, nor sound doctrine. The preacher who expects to do good by flattery goes to the devil's mill for God's grist, has put on the devil's armor to fight God's battles, claims Christ's property with the devil's signature and seal. Paul declared that he flattered no man; that if he songht to please men he would not be the servant of Christ.—Christian Advocate.

Building Too Late.

I saw an old man building a house. He made it very beautiful. He furnished it very richly. But it was built too late. After all his toil and pains, he was buried from the old, tottering house where he had spent all his years.

I saw an old man planting a tree before his door. He said he thought it would be pleasant to sit in its shade. Poor man! he forgot that long before that tree would cast a grateful shade with wide-spreding branches he would be in his grave. He ought to have planted the tree in the days of his youth, and then he could have enjoyed its shade in his old age.

To have the blessedness of God's love pouring into your soul when you get old, you must remember your Creator in youth. The old days are "evil days" in which to begin to follow the Lord. The heart is cold. The brain is dull. The machinery of life is almost worn out. Love clings feebly then. It is hard to make the change.

An old man said to the preacher, who came to speak to him about salvation, "Do not waste your time on me. Go and speak to the young. Their hearts are tender. Their characters are unformed. But there is no use to talk to me. It is too late!"—Dr. J. R. Miller.

The Measurement of Men.

"Electricity cannot follow a broken wire, nor success a lying life," is most profoundly true. The man or woman who attains success has laid a foundation of truth. Pretence to goodness, knowledge, unselfishness, may for a time succeed, but there is no surer thing in life than that pretence is always revealed. The truth is eventually the measurement of every man in the eyes of his fellows; he must suffer if he cannot stand in its light. Many succeed for a time, concealing the weakness, the lack, the sin; but time, that merciless recorder, brings the day of reckoning, and the real strength, knowledge, motive, method, of each man are the knowledge of all who come within his circle of influence. It may be that death has hastened the revelation, but the name and the personality remain the guide, or the warning, for those who come after.

To be an influence in the life of the household, the community, the church, there must be harmony between the life of the man and his uttered speech. His principles are revealed in his life; his sympathies must be expressed in his actions; his character must equal his beliefs, his sympathies. There must be a steadiness of aim from within if a man's life is to sway those about him, to influence character.

Even the man who has a power that makes him an influence for evil must possess steadiness of aim; he must be consistent in the walk he has chosen. The pretender of evil fails of success.

It is this conception of life that makes each man struggle toward the place which the community has accorded him. To believe that men trust him, believe in him, accept him, is, even to the strongest, an incentive to higher living, or a constant menace that makes the pretender quake with fear when he sees his own soul, lest men should discover him. —The Outlook.

Which will You Choose Boys?

I read of a boy who had a remarkable dream. He thought that the richest man in town came to him, and said—"I am tired of my house and grounds; come and take care of them, and I will give them to you." Then came an honored judge, and said—"I want you take my place; I am weary of being in court day after day; I will give you my seat on the bench if you will do my work." Then the doctor proposed that he take his extensive practice and let him rest, and so on. At last up shambled old Tommy, and said—"I'm wanted to fill a drunkard's grave; I have come to see if you will take my place in these saloons and on these streets." This is a dream that is not all a dream. For every boy in this land to-day who lives to grow up, some position is waiting as surely as if rich man, judge, doctor, or drunkard stood ready to hand over his place at once. Which will you choose, boys? There are pulpits to be filled by God-fearing ministers, and thousands of other honorable places; but there are also prison cells and drunkard's graves. Which will you choose?

Truths Tersely Told.

A certain kind of ants keep slaves to get a living for them. So do saloon keepers.

The drink habit is contagious as small-pox, and harder to cure. Don't expose yourself.

Men who are drinkers at twenty on an average will only live fifteen years.

One boy in every fifth family is sacrificed to the rum demon.

A moderate drinker may soon be an immoderate drunkard.

The moderate drinker is Satan's decoy to the young.

The corner-stone of the almshouse is the beer barrel.

The saloon is the grave of health, home, and happiness.

It is the respectable saloon that makes the drinker, and the drinker that makes the drunkard.

Signing the pledge has been for many a man the signing of his own emancipation proclamation.

When the natives of the South Sea Islands join the Church, they give up drink and tobacco.

The United States gives her teachers $148,173,487 yearly to train her children. Then she gives the saloon kepers $1,200,000,000 to ruin them.

If gin mills decorated their windows like other establishments with samples of their finished work, how different they would look from what they do now.

The saloon is the devil's great drag net.

Saloon-keepers are the devil's blood-hounds.

The white slaves of the saloon outnumber the black slaves of slavery.

The moderate drinker is in one respect worse than the drunkard. For the boys think they will follow the moderate drinker, but shun the drunkard.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in the Mission Rooms on Monday, June 5th. Three new members were welcomed to our counsels, Rev. George W. Patterson, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; Rev. W. C. Clark, of Shelbyville, Tenn.; and Rev. F. B. Webb, of Columbia, Tenn.

Universal regret was expressed at the absence of Dr. E. A. Ramsey, of Memphis, Tenn., who having been appointed a member of the Committee on Education, was omitted from the Foreign Mission Committee upon which he had rendered such valuable and highly appreciated service, from the time of the Committee's removal to Nashville. A letter was read from him expressing his continued kindly interest in our work.

A brief visit from one of our former colaborers, Rev. Dr. Witherspoon, now of Baltimore, Md., was greatly enjoyed by the Committee.

The whole office force of last year was reappointed by the Committee,

Mr. Erskine Reed was elected Treasurer to whom it is requested that all remittances, for all purposes whatsoever, connected with our office, shall be sent.

Rev. D. C. Rankin was continued as Editor of The Missionary, in which position he had rendered such valuable and satisfactory work for the past year.

A committee consisting of the Chairman, the Secretary and Dr. Bryson, was appointed to take the report of the Ad Interim Committee, and after full correspondence with all the Missions, from whom we expect to receive valuable suggestions, prepare a complete new Manual of Missions, to be presented to next General Assembly for its approval.

On information received from Korea as to the present need of reinforcements there, the former action of the Committee assigning Rev. Eugene Bell to Hangchow was reconsidered, and he was appointed to Korea according to his original desire and intention.

A letter was read from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, D. D., giving account of his work at Nova Friburgo, where he is teaching the Synod's Theological class; and reporting the addition of another member to his household.

Letters were read from Rev. and Mrs. S. R. Hope, of Japan, and also from Rev. C. K. Cumming, all of them giving encouraging reports of the condition of the work in their fields.

Announcement was made of the death of Rev. F. A. Cowan, at Lavras, Brazil, on May the 2nd. Brother Cowan had been at Lavras for some months, quietly awaiting his end.

Miss E. V. Lee, who at our last meeting was reported as ill with typhoid fever, was reported to be convalescent; and is now on her way home under the care of Rev. A. T. Graybill, who was also ordered by his physician to return to this country for a rest of three months.

A committee was appointed to proceed at once to prepare the necessary papers for the Executive Committee's incorporation. It is hoped that in a few days we will have become an incorporated body as authorized by the General Assembly; and will be ready to receive directly, any gifts or bequests of money or property for the benefit of Foreign Missions.

The Treasurer's report showed the receipts for the month of May to be $12,794.00. This is an increase on the receipts for May, 1893, of $354. The receipts for June up to date promise well. We sincerely hope that they will be sufficient to make up for the shortage of $2,000 in our April receipts as compared with the receipts of April 1893.

Secretary.

Dover:—A union meeting of ten days has just been closed. Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff (of the Presbyterian church) and Rev. Mr. Kelley (of the Methodist church) were assisted by Rev. C. G. Vardell, of New Bern. The Lord's faithful few prayed earnestly for an outpouring of the Spirit and labored diligently to lead souls to the Saviour, and their efforts were "not in vain." The Spirit was evidently present through the whole meeting. Twenty-one professions were the visible results, and others interested and asking for the prayers of all Christians. There have been four accessions to the Presbyterian church, and three to the Methodist church. Others are ready to be received, some into the Methodist church and some into the Presbyterian church. There are a few who have not decided with what church they wish to unite.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Lattimore Church:—Was organized on the fifth Sunday in April by a committee of Mecklenburg Presbytery, consisting of Rev. R. Z. Johnson, Rev. W. P. McCorkle and Ruling Elders J. F. Tiddy and J. M Flack. Eleven members of the Presbyterian churches of Shelby and Gaffney's S. C., presented letters of dismission and entered into a mutual church covenant. A congregational meeting was held Friday, May 18th, and Messrs. J. C. H. Duff and W. J. Colton were elected ruling elders. They were duly ordained and installed at the night service of the same date. This little band is hopeful, and there is a prospect of growth. P.

Mocksville Church:—In addition to the eight persons received a week or two ago, I ought to add five more. One of these joined the church on the first Sunday that Bro. Black was with us, and had her three children baptized. One other is the result of our late meeting. And three were received by letter from other churches. These all make thirteen received in the last month.

Murray and the Mebane and Bethlehem churches was dissolved and Mr. Murray was dismissed to the Presbytery of Enoree. Rev. D. I. Craig was elected stated clerk of Presbytery. Dr. Smith was appointed a member of the Committee on Manual, and the committee was ordered to report a revised manual next fall.

The High School of Orange Presbytery Closing Exercises:—On Wednesday evening, June 6th, Rev. E. Daniel, D. D., of Raleigh delivered before the pupils of the High School and of the Mebane Female Academy a masterly address on "Memory as the Conserving and Reproductive Faculty." The subject was treated not only learnedly and eloquently, but in a very simple and practical manner.

On Thursday evening, the closing exercises of the two schools were held. The girls gave a charming concert. Rev. L. B. Turnbull, President of the Trustees of the High School, in a very graceful and happy manner, delivered the certificates and prizes. Certificates of graduation were conferred upon Messrs. Chas. H. Johnston and S. Floyd Hughes. Prizes were awarded as follows: For general scholarship, 1st, Henry R. Southerland, 2nd, Walter S. Crawford; for best maps of Palestine, H. Ernest Wilkinson, Walter E. Walker, and Henry R Southerland; for Biblical theses, S. Floyd Hughes, Walter E. Walker, and Wm. L. McPheeters. The prospects of the High School for the next session are very bright.

Henderson Church:—This church has been placed in a better state of organization by the addition to its official force of three ruling elders and four deacons. The congregational meeting by order of the session was held on May 20th The congregation elected Messrs. Bryan Whitfield, J. A. Gilmer and Edward Hines elders, and Messrs. J. B. Owen, C. A. Lewis, J. B. Gary and W. A. Hunt, as deacons—after a sermon upon the ruling elder's office by the pastor the ruling elders were on the following Sabbath ordained and installed in their offices, and on the Sabbath after this, after an appropriate sermon the deacons were set apart and installed in their proper offices. These are all superior men and the congregation recognizes their influence and worth.

Rev. T. R. Sampson:—Rev. R. W. Culbertson writes: On Saturday and Sunday 2nd and 3rd, Rev. T. R. Sampson visited the churches Hawfield and Cross Roads in behalf of Foreign Missions. He found at the first a full house, (though on a week day), and at the latter an overflowing. Bro. Sampson entertains: this may be the first thought, but the second will be that he instructs, awakens, stimulates, convinces; that entertainment is not an end but a means, designed to fix attention and open the door that truth may enter—and remain. It is impossible to listen to his addresses without feeling a more intelligent interest in the work, and a deeper sympathy for humanity suffering in darkness and without hope. He deals in the main not in doctrines but in facts; and approaches the duty of Foreign Missions, not from the side of divine command but of human need. He proceeds to tell what he himself has seen of the world's great needs, leaving it for the pastor to insist upon Scriptural considerations. His work is supplementary to that of the settled ministers—in no sense a substitute for it—and depends largely for its efficiency on being improved and followed up. For the working pastor it is a most invaluable help. Bro. S. paid us a flying visit once befor. This time he staid a little longer, and we should be glad to see him again with still more time at his disposal.

Memphis:—Rev. J. W. Roseborough recently assisted Rev. C. L. Hogue, of Memphis, Mo., in a three week's meeting. Fifty-six persons were added to our church, mostly on profession, and there were eight other professions of faith. The assistant found a very excellent people there and a working church. They made a thank offering of $75 to Synod's Evangelistic Work. The church now has considerably over two hundred members. Pastor is loved and people faithfully served.

Death of Dr. W. W. Robertson:—Dr. Robertson, died at his residence in Fulton, Mo., on 27th ult., in the 85th year of his life. He was one of the founders of Westminster College and President of the Board of Trustees for many years. He also founded the Synodical Female College.

Grand Avenue Church, St. Louis:—The St. Louis Presbyterian says: At the bimonthly observance of the Lord's Supper in the Grand Avenue church, last Sunday, the pastor, Dr. Cannon, announced that since the previous communion season, the session had admitted four memberc by letter and seven on confession of Christ.

EDUCATION.

WHEREAS, The Executive Committee of Education for the Ministry, in obedience to the action of previous General Assemblies, has heretofore made its appropriations of aid to candidates positive, i. e., pledges of the amount promised, and this for the alleged reason, that all candidates might know how much aid they could depend upon for the current year; and

WHEREAS, The experience of the last two years has shown the alleged reason to be fallacious, and the policy resulting in debt to the Church, and disappointment to the candidates; and

WHEREAS, The recent General Assembly, which met in Nashville, Tennessee, while recognizing the binding obligation of promises already made, has, in answer to the earnest request of the Executive Committee, reversed its policy in these words! "The payment of the amounts promised candidates shall be conditioned on the ability of the Executive Committee to meet its obligations, and in no sense shall these promises to pay be considered as a debt, to be paid out of the funds of the subsequent year." Therefore,

Resolved 1. That the appropriations for the current year shall be $75 as the maximum for the college and seminary candidates, and $25 for those in the preparatory course.

2. That in order to meet the obligation of the Church to her candidates for two years past, special gifts are hereby solicited from individuals and friends of the candidates, and from churches which gave nothing last year.

3d. That all candidates and Presbyteries are hereby informed that, according to the action of the recent General Assembly, at Nashville, Tennessee: "The payment of the amounts promised candidates shall be conditioned on the ability of the Executive Committee to meet its obligations, and in no sense shall these promises to pay be considered as a debt, to be paid out of the funds of the subsequent year."

Adopted by the Committee, June 4, '94.

Secretary.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., June 6th, 1894.

In view of recent happenings in connection with and on account of the strikes in the coal mines of the country a bill prepared by Representative Kiefer, of Minnesota, is worthy of more than a passing notice. The bill is now being considered by the House Committee on Labor, to which Mr. Kiefer referred it for amendment and suggestions before formally introducing it in the House. The bill provides for a National Board of Arbitration, to which all labor disputes shall be referred, and the decisions of which are made as binding as those of a Federal court. The board is to consist of five members, one of which shall be the U. S. Commissioner of Labor and another the governor of the State in whom the dispute is to be arbitrated. It provides that applications for arbitration may be made—always to the governor of the State in which applicants reside—by either employers or employes. There is only one obstacle to the passing of this or a similar bill by Congress, but that is a serious one, inasmuch as it involves the construction of the Constitution of the United States. It is argued by the opponents of the idea, who admit that it would be a good thing, that Congress has no authority under the Constitution to establish such a board, it having no jurisdiction over the internal affairs of the several States. The idea appeals strongly to the large and growing class which believes arbitration to be the proper method of settling all disputes, whether personal, national or international, and the hope that Congress will adopt it in some shape is frequently heard. A similar bill has been introduced in the House by Mr. Houk, of Tennessee.

Several things have made foreign missionary matters conspicuous in our churches this week. Sunday evening Rev. Hugh W. White, of Virginia, who will start for the interior of China about the last of next month, where he is to be maintained as a missionary by the Central Presbyterian church, of this city and the Loudon Street Presbyterian church, of Winchester, Va., of which his father is pastor, preached a missionary sermon at the former Church and on Monday evening was given a reception by the Laura Pitzer missionary circle of the same church. Sunday the regular choirs at the Church of the Covenant and All Souls church were displaced, the first at the morning and the last at the evening service, by the native African choir, organized by a missionary and now making a tour of the United States under the charge of Rev. James H. Palmer and Miss Clark, returned African missionaries, as a living object lesson showing what the missionaries are doing for the Africans, and at the same time to raise money to build a training and industrial school at St. Philips' Mission, Grahamston, Africa. There are fifteen in this choir, six men, seven women and two children, one a Bushman, the other a Hottentot. They are from seven different tribes and dress in native Kaffir costume. They sing both in English and in their native language, and will remain in Washington for a few days, singing in the churches. They have been away from home since February of last year, and have not yet decided just when they will return. Rev. William P. Chalfant and his wife, who have long been engaged in Chinese missionary work, delivered entertaining addresses at the annual mite-box opening at the Metropolitan Presbyterian church last night, on their Chinese experiences.

T.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Evangelist:

Brethren of the pulpit and press! whatever apology you make for the saloon, do not say that it is "the only place open to the poor!" for it is not. It may be the only place a certain man will enter, but that is quite another thing.

Presbyterian:

A point was well made lately by the Queen of Madagascar, who is at war with the saloons in her kingdom. When the saloonkeepers, whose business she had suppressed, approached her for compensation, she retorted briefly, "Compensate those whom you have wronged and I will pay the balance."

Herald and Presbyter:

"There came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand." It is a way the old serpent has. Just when a man is about to put forth his hand and render assistance to his fellow-men, just as his heart moves him to reach for his purse and give a large sum to missions, the viper fastens on his hand. When this happens, your only safety, my brother, is to shake off the beast into the fire whence it comes. So did Paul. (See Acts xxviii. 3–5.)

Canada Presbyterian:

Presbyterians are sometimes called bigoted; they are often described as narrow and strait-laced. There is no book in the world large enough to contain all the sneers that have been sneered at our iron-clad symbols. There is no politician on the face of the earth that has been slandered as much as the Confession of Faith has been slandered. Strange to say, these narrow, strait-laced people are expected to pay, and generally do pay about two-thirds of all the money that is contributed for charitable and extra-denominational purposes. Your gushing, dear-brother, union-talking man usually takes precious good care of his money. His mouth is more open than his pocket.

National Presbyterian:

Children, like adults, are made unhappy by selfishness. They should be early taught that if they would be happy they must learn do something toward making others happy. They should be made to understand that in this world every person owes service to those by whom he is surrounded, and that happiness comes only of paying what he owes.

Western Christian Advocate:

After all, it is sin that curses the earth. Let us destroy the evil fruits of it in specific forms whenever and however we can. But let us remember that these fruits are borne by sin in human souls, and work away at our proper church business—getting the upper hand of sin in men's souls—salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. On this movement all other reforms depend. An unchristian world never reformed anything, and never will. Christ in men is the hope of glory—of a bright, pure, manly, happy world. Let us push the work of converting the world.

New York Ledger:

It is a pitiable waste of vital force to be always looking on the wrong side of things, and almost a criminal utterance to declare that there is no good thing in modern management. Such vaporings amount in themselves to nothing, and would deserve no notice were it not that people of limited observation, and those who are young, unsophisticated and ignorant of the world and its ways, may, upon reading such foolish stuff, take it for granted that the statements there made are true.

Christian Standard:

There is a disposition on the part of a class of business men to sneer at the college man in business. With them—and they are usually men of not much education themselves—whatever may be thought of the scholar in politics, the scholar in business is a necessary misfit. Now, if this were true, it would be no credit to business, even when "business is business." Whatever is out of keeping with trained intellect, cultivated taste and elevated ambition needs reorganizing. But as college culture becomes more general, and as college graduates multiply in business circles and even among mechanics, this opinion of their unfitness is seen more and more to be based upon prejudice. But college men have themselves been much to blame for this prejudice.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. Charles N. Vance, a son of the late Senator Vance, has published the following card "to the public:"

"My father's request and direction to me were that his body should be laid to rest in the lot in the Asheville cemetery selected and purchased by himself, and his first wife, the mother of his children, should be by his side. In compliance with this expressed wish he was placed there by the Senate committee, with the concurrence of his family and widow. There the body remained for nearly two months, when on last Tuesday late, the remains were secretly and surreptitiously taken up and placed in another lot in the cemetery.

"This was known to be without the knowledge or consent of his sons, his only brother or his sister; even against their desire. Within one-half mile of the cemetery were one brother and three sisters of our father, and had either of these been consulted they would have protested against this high-handed act, most certainly against the manner of removal and especially against the opening of the casket, which later was done, but for what purpose we don't know. The removal might even have been submitted to had not the party making the removal, in writing, as the last and final ultimation on the subject, refused to allow the wife of his early manhood (our mother), to be placed by his side. This violation of a sacred obligation was to me so revolting that I felt that it was my imperative duty to the memory of my dead father to replace the remains in the original place. This has been done and I trust and pray they may there remain in peace.

"Sad as has been this duty, it was rendered necessary by the promise I repeatedly made my father. It is also humiliating and mortifying to me that all this has occurred and this publication made necessary. But I see no escape from it.

"We appeal to the sentiment of the good people of this community and of the State of North Carolina to sustain us in our efforts to secure the permanent and peaceful repose of this good man, our father, in the spot of his own selection and choice, and where he was placed by his colleagues of the United States Senate with the full consent of his family and widow, and where may rest by his side the mother of his children.

Very respectfully,
[Signed] CHARLES N. VANCE."

Greenville Reflector: W. C. Haddock told us Monday that he was riding along the road on last Wednesday when six grown minks came out of the woods and ran whining after his horse. The horse was so badly frightened that he had to get down and tie the animal and get a stick after the minks to drive them off. He killed one of them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Introductory.

The Prophetical and Historical Preparation for the Life of Christ.

For the past six months we have been studying the beginnings of human history, including the Creation and Fall of man, the promise of a Redeemer, and the progress of redemption in the salvation of Noah, the call of Abraham, his moral and spiritual training and that of his descendants, down to the birth of the Israelitish Nation in the Exodus from Egypt. We are now to study that Life for which all that went before was a preparation, and from which all that comes after flows.

That we may better understand it, we should take a running view of the intermediate history.

In Israel we have the Nation taught and trained by the legislation and discipline of the wilderness, and after forty years taking its place in the land of promise. Then for a period of years whose length is disputed, but which may be set down as about 300 years (from the death of Joshua to the reformation under Samuel), Israel was in a low and disorganized state, with no bond of union except the priesthood and tabernacle at Shiloh, and the intermittent rule of a "judge," who was more of a military leader than a civil magistrate. Under Samuel a new start was taken, the laws were more faithfully observed, justice was regularly administered, and companies of "prophets" were trained to expound the law and interpret the will of God. The Nation, however, was still lacking in military strength and continued a frequent prey to its enemies. The people sought a king, and Samuel at God's command grants their request. The first choice, however, is such as to convince them that no form of government insures their safety, but only the power and favor of God. The next choice is a man after God's own heart, and the kingdom is established in his hands. Under David and Solomon Israel reaches its highest point of earthly prosperity. A long series of victories secures its independence, and even supremacy, while wealth pours in from distant lands. The ritual of worship is improved, the religious literature enriched, the Temple is built, and becomes the glory of the land.

Luxury, however, begets corruption, and corruption leads to rebellion, and under Solomon's son the kingdom is divided, only the tribe of Benjamin remains with Judah under the house of David. Most of the Levites, too, flocked to Judah, as their priestly privileges were not recognized in the northern kingdom, and the tribe of Simeon that was geographically cut off from the ten tribes seems to have been ultimately incorporated with the southern kingdom.

The Ten Tribes, of which Ephraim was the head, soon apostatized from the ordained worship, though professing to follow Jehovah until Baal worship was introduced under Ahab. There were frequent attempts at reformation of which those under Elijah and Elisha were the most conspicuous, but at last the kingdom was destroyed by Shalmanesar, king of Assyria, about 721 B. C., the people deported to other lands, while others were brought in to take their places, giving rise to the "Samaritans."

In the kingdom of Judah, in spite of frequent apostasies the worship of Jehovah was in the main observed. The names of Asa, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah and Josiah stand out conspicuous among the rest as faithful to their position as the representatives of Jehovah. Yet the tendency of the people seemed hopelessly towards idolatry until God delivered them into the hands of their enemies, and about 588 B. C., they were carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar.

When the decree of Cyrus authorized their return (536 B. C.) naturally only those most zealous for the worship of Jehovah returned. Israel was thus purged of idolatry; but there followed a period of legalism without true religious feeling—the letter without the spirit. The whole history of the people showed the need of the Life that was to come.

Meanwhile prophecy had been at work. Everything that was good in Israel was turned to account as a type of Him that should come. The faithful priest, the bleeding sacrifice, the cleansing fountain, the sheltering Tabernacle, and the enduring Temple; the prophet revealing God and declaring His will; the conquering King, subduing their enemies and granting them peace and prosperity and blessing; all were made to point to the great Deliverer. Nature, too, was drawn upon with no sparing hand. The flowing stream, the falling showers, the grateful dew, the growing tree, the fruitful vine, the shining light of sun and star; all set forth the graces and virtues of the Messiah. Then the limitations and failures in all that they had experienced lifted the view from a merely temporal and earthly kingdom to one that was spiritual and eternal, from a human King to one who was not only human but Divine. At length Isaiah and Jeremiah tell us the line from which He is to spring (Is. xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5); Micah the place of His birth (v. 2); Daniel fixes the time (ix. 25, 26); and Malachi tells of his forerunner (iii. 1, iv. 5).

At the same time a work of preparation had been going on in the outside world. Great world empires had arisen, foreshadowing a universal kingdom; and had decayed, showing that such a kingdom must have a better foundation than human greed and power. Greek and Roman culture and philosophy had shown the insufficency of human speculations to satisfy the heart or to elevate the moral nature of man. Unrest, dissatisfaction, and despair proclaimed the need of something that the world had not yet known. This need and longing is again and again expressed by classic writers. But a more positive preparation was going on likewise. Alexander's conquests had made all but universal the Greek language—the most perfect vehicle of expression known. The Roman genius for government had brought the civilized world under the sway of one sceptre, making progress peaceful and communication easy between land and land. The dispersion of the Jews had made familiar the religious ideas that were to form the basis of Christ's teaching, while many influential Gentiles had become adherents to a system that taught of one God and unfolded a spiritual religion. All things were now ready. The fullness of times had come, and the very heavens tell to the expectant minds of its devout watchers, that the King of the Jews is born, and from far distant lands they follow His Star, and come to kneel at His cradle and offer their royal gifts.

Preparing to Study and Teach the Life of Christ.

First. If you expect to be absent from home during the summer, do not on that account, give up the study of the Lessons. If you do you will not only lose these lessons, but be at a disadvantage in studying those of the next quarter. The Editor expects to be absent from home, but does not intend that that shall interfere with his regularly furnishing the lessons. Arrange, therefore, to have the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, Earnest Worker, S. S. Times, or other helps sent to you regularly wherever you are.

Second. Inquiries are often made for books that will be of assistance in any particular course. For critical students, we would recommend, "The Life of Our Lord upon the Earth," by Samuel J. Andrews (Chas. Scribner's Sons, $2 50). But for most teachers and advanced scholars we would advise, "The Life of Jesus Christ." by Rev. James Stalker, D. D., (F. H. Revell & Co., 60 cents.) Either of these books can be gotten from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. The Teacher's Manual, containing Profs. Burton and Stevens' Analytical Outline of the Life of Christ will prove of great value. It is especially intended for the Blakeslee Graded Lesson Series, but will be of almost equal use in any study of our Lord's Life. It is published by the Bible Study Publishing Co., Boston, 50 cents a year, beginning at any time.

Third. Fix in your mind before you begin, the chronology of our Lord's Life.

Dionysius Exiguus, (died A. D. 556) fixed the Christian Era. The Roman year began at the Vernal Equinox, so he made the year 1 A. D., begin with the Annunciation to Mary, March 25, 754 A. U. C. (year from the founding of Rome); the Birth taking place the December following. It is now known that this was certainly, a mistake, and that the Birth of Jesus could not have been later than the year 749 A. U. C. Remembering that the years are ordinal (first, second, third, etc.) and not cardinal (one, two, three) we have the following table:

749 A. U. C.	=	5 B. C.
750 "	=	4 B. C.
751 "	=	3 B. C.
752 "	=	2 B. C.
753 "	=	1 B. C.
754 "	=	1 A. D.

This gives the following rule. To reduce any date A. U. C. to our reckoning: If the date is greater than 753 A. U C. substract 753 from it and the result will be the date A. D.; if it is less than 753, subtract the date in question from 754 and the result will be the date B. C.

The most probable date for the Baptism of Jesus is January 780 A. U. C. or 27 A. D., and for the Crucifixion, April 7, 783 A. U. C. or 30 A. D. This involves what is called the Quadri paschal scheme of our Lord's ministry—i. e., that it embraced four Passovers. See note on Qu. 66, last paper.

Fourth. Fix in your mind the salient points of the ministry of our Lord. Part I being the Thirty Years of Private Life, we would have His Ministry divided as follows:

Part II. Opening Events, Baptism, First Disciples, first miracles.

Part III. Early Judean Ministry: John ii. 13–iv. 42.

Part IV. First Period of Galilean Ministry: From the return into Galilee to the choosing of the Twelve, Mark iii. 13.

Part V. Second Period of Galilean Ministry: From the choosing of the Twelve to the withdrawal into Northern Galilee, Mark vii. 24.

Part VI. Third Period of Galilean Ministry: From the Withdrawal, etc., to the Final Departure, Luke ix. 51.

Part VII. The Perean Ministry: Luke ix. 51—xix. 28; John ix—xii. 11.

Part VIII. Passion Week. From the Triumphal Entry to the Burial.

Part IX. The Forty Days. From the Resurrection to the Ascension.

It will be well to cut this out, and in your studies place each event in i s proper period. Thus you will make for yourselves a "Harmony."

(The cherubim and the flaming sword at Eden are not said to be an appearance of God, but God placed them there. The cloudy pillar leading Israel is part of the lesson on which these questions were based. We have constantly insisted that the lesson is always assumed and that the questions are to bring out illustrations or parallels to it in other parts of the Bible. Even had it not been in the lesson it could not be said to be the most extraordinary manifestation. Neither was it permanent except in connection with the mercy-seat and the tabernacle. Allusions to the bright light at Saul's conversion, or to the eyes of the ascended Saviour being like a flame of fire do not meet the conditions of the last question.

NEW QUESTIONS.

There are no new questions this week as announced last week, but there is a serious misprint in Qu. 70. It is "Joseph's age when he was persecuted, not when he was "presented."

Fairview Institute, and Commercial College at Gibsonville, N. C., it situated in a healthy region and among a good people in Guilford county. On its roll are students from several States. To say that during the six years past it has risen in attendance from 68 pupils to 180 expresses all that need be said to attest its genuine merits.

Red Springs Scotch Scion: Mr. R. F. Devane, of this town, has received a large order for cross-ties to be shipped to Cuba, so we learn. The number that leaves North Carolina daily is immense.

Clinton Democrat: We believe Sampson county raises enough corn to supply the home demand. It has met this demand until recently, but just now Western corn is being shipped here and is selling at 70 cents per bushel.

Windsor Ledger: Mr. Carson Fulcher, living near Coleraine, has a beet with one shoot six feet high and five smaller ones five feet high. The beet is three feet in circumference.

Sanford Express: The brownstone and lumber men of Sanford are genuine hustlers. They are doing a tremendous business here and hereabouts, and despite the general depression, everything about them seems to be flourishing. They scatter lots of clean cash in this community.

Greensboro Patriot: In our last issue our Summerfield correspondent made mention of a rather incredible circumstance, that of pure lumps of salt falling during a hail storm. In an interview with the correspondent he affirms the correctness of his statement, and his veracity is unquestioned. A little girl living near Summerfield ran out of the house during the storm and picked up a handful of the hailstones. Childlike she put some of them in her mouth. Remarking that hail was too salty to be good to eat she attracted the attention of other members of the family. Her mother tasted the hail and pronounced it salt. Another child went out on the other side of the house and brought in some of the hail, which was found to be of the same character. Several of the crystals were laid away, and kept several days before evaporating. The only explanation of the phenomena is that the hail, which is formed by the congelation of vapor, must have been carried inland in the clouds from the ocean. One thing is certain, it hailed salt at Summerfield.

FOR THE FAMILY.

WHICH WINS THE DAY?

A gloomy Frown and a merry Word
Went out for a walk one day;
And they spoke to all they chanced to meet—
The sick, the sad and the gay.

The sick man smiled at the merry Word,
And the sad one looked less sad,
And the gay one laughed till his jolly tone
Made all the echoes glad.

To the gloomy Frown scarce a glance they gave,
But hurried to pass him by,
Afraid, if they looked at his face too long,
They'd echo his dismal sigh.

And ever it's so as we journey on,
And meet them along the way;
We turn from one with a shiver and sigh—
The merry Word wins the day.

Items for Lady Readers.

A practical and eminently successful employment has been developed in London for women in the shape of a gardening association. It is under very fashionable patronage. Such philanthropic people as the Countess of Malmesbury, Lady Hamilton and Lady Lubbock are among its officers, and it has a well organized bureau on Lower Sloane street, and does business all over London. There is no reason why similar organizations should not flourish in all large American towns.

The Gardening Association contracts for the care of conservatories, window boxes, balconies and gardens by the year or season or month. Plants are also loaned out on hire.

All orders are entirely executed by women, a man being employed for digging, conveying soil, laying gravel, training high outside climbers, and the like. The association also undertakes the care of graves in the cemeteries of London. It supplies whatever plants may be required. When necessary, it replants the graves twice a year. An excellent point in connection with this particular branch of the work is that the prices are made as reasonable as possible in order to bring the benefit within the reach of persons in all circumstances.

Another department of the work consists in taking temporary care of plants belonging to persons who are leaving town. For this purpose the association uses its own conservatories.

Cut flowers are also supplied to families. Every variety of floral decoration, bouquets, wreaths, crosses, ect., are made up quite equal to any similar work exhibited by first-class florists.

The secretary is always at the bureau, ready to supply estimates and to discuss any particulars relating to orders. The business, in fact, is energetically pushed. It sends out a charming little prospectus, artistically gotten up on rough paper with light green ink.

In reply to some inquiries, the secretary said that, although the work necessitated a good deal of stooping and fatigue, it was generally considered pleasant by the women, even if not particularly light. It entails early and late hours, and much running to and fro. Still, those who have tried it, say they find it a much healthier and brighter occupation than many others open to women.—Savannah News.

How an Axe is Made.

On entering the main workshop the first step in the operation which is seen is the formation of the axe head without the blade. The glowing flat iron bars are withdrawn from the furnace and are taken to a powerful and somewhat complicated machine, which performs upon them four distinct operations, shaping the metal to form the upper and lower part of the axe, then the eye, and finally doubling the piece over so that the whole can be welded together. Next the iron is put in a powerful natural gas furnace and heated to a white heat. Taken out, it goes under a tilt hammer and is welded in a second. This done, one blow from the "drop," and the poll of the axe is completed and firmly welded. Two crews of men are doing this class of work, and each crew can make 1,500 axes per day.

When the axe leaves the drop, there is some superfluous metal still adhering to the edges and forming what is technically known as a "fin." To get rid of the fin the axe is again heated in a furnace and then taken in hand by a sawyer, who trims the ends and edges. The operator has a glass in front of him to protect his eyes from the sparks which fly off by the hundreds as the hot metal is pressed against the rapidly revolving saw. The iron part of the axe is now complete. The steel for the blade, after being heated, is cut by machinery and shaped. It is then ready for the welding department. A groove is cut into the edge of the iron, the steel of the blade inserted, and the whole firmly welded by machine hammers.

Next comes the operation of tempering. The steel portion of the axe is heated by being inserted in pots of molten lead, the blade only being immersed. It is then cooled by dipping in water and goes to the hands of the inspector. An axe is subject to rigid tests before it is pronounced perfect. The steel must be of the required temper, the weight of all axes of the same size must be uniform, all must be ground alike, and in various other ways to conform to an established standard. The inspector who tests the quality of the steel does so by hammering the blade and striking the edge to ascertain whether it be too brittle or not. An axe that breaks during the tests is thrown aside to be made over.

Before the material of the axe is in the proper shape it has been heated five times, including the tempering process, and the axe, when completed, has passed through the hands of about forty workmen, each of whom has done something toward perfecting it. After passing inspection, the axes go to the grinding department, and from that to the polishers, who finish them upon emery wheels. —Philadelphia Record.

Things Useful.

Lemon Fritters.—To one cup of fresh milk and one egg allow the juice and add the pulp of one lemon. These may be served with sauce flavored with the grated peel of the lemon.

How to Make Strawberry Mousse.—Whip a pint of cream to a stiff froth; add a cup of powdered sugar and pint of strawberries pressed through a sieve. Mix well. Put in a mold previously wet with cold water, pack in salt and ice and freeze for three hours. Turn out of the mold and serve.

A nice way to keep wax for the work basket is to fill half shells of English walnuts with melted wax, fastening the two half shell closely together at one end. There will then be a small space at the other end through which the thread will slip when the wax is being used.

To wash a muslin dress:—Make a good lather and wash the muslin in cold water, never putting it into warm water, even to rinse it. If the muslin is green, add a wine glass of vinegar to the water in which it is rinsed; if lilac, the same quantity of ammonia. For black and white muslins, use a small quantity of sugar of lead.

Chocolate Pie With Apricots.—Rasp an ounce of good chocolate into a basin, with the grated rind of a lemon, a very little cinnamon and sugar to taste. Now mix together two dessert teaspoonfuls of biscuit flour and the yolks of three well beaten eggs, with a pint of new milk, pour the whole into a clean stewpan and set over a clear fire until just heated and then lift off the fire. When cold pour it into a pie dish, previously lined with light puff paste, cover the mixture with the whites of three eggs, whipped to a stiff froth and bake for twenty minutes in a slow oven. Strew it over with castor sugar and arrange over it a dozen preserved apricots.

Care of Wet Shoes.—There are few things more disagreeable than to put on a pair of stiff, brittle shoes that have been thrown aside to dry after a rainy day. Here is a formula that claims to eradicate the trouble: First, wipe off gently with a soft cloth all surface water and mud; then, while still wet, rub well with paraffine oil, using flannel for the purpose. Set them aside till partially dry, when a second treatment with oil is advisable. They may then be deposited in a conveniently warm place, where they will dry gradually and thoroughly. Before applying French kid dressing give them a final rubbing with the flannel still slightly dampened with paraffine and the boots will be soft and flexible as new kid and be very little affected by their bath in the rain.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

I SHALL BE LED.

I do not know whether my future lies
Through calm or storm;
Whether the way is strewn with broken ties,
Or friendships warm.

This much I know: Whate'er the pathway trod,
All else unknown,
I shall be guided safely on; for God
Will keep his own.

Clouds may obscure the sky, and drenching rain
Wear channels deep;
And haggard want, with all her bitter train,
Make angels weep.

And those I love the fondest, 'neath the sod,
May rest alone;
But through it all I shall be led, for God
Will keep his own.

Old Bronze.

"It's the strangest thing," said Jessie, with wide-open eyes.

"And my flowers will never grow," said Ruth, shaking her head ruefully.

It was strange. Out in a corner of the garden was a rockery. On the rockery was an iron basket made to hold flowers. Ruth had planted in the middle of it a white lily bulb. All around the edges she had put morning-glory seeds. She wanted the vines to droop over the side of the basket and run down upon the stones.

Every day the children visited it and found that something was doing mischief. It was very plain that the seeds and the bulb were trying to do their duty, for many and many a tiny shoot came peeping above ground. But the earth about them was scratched and the tender green stalks broken down and withered.

And it kept on day after day!

"It must be rats," said Jack.

But nothing else in the garden was ever touched.

"Couldn't be frost, could it?" asked little Nan.

They all laughed, for the geranium and pansies were smiling up in the sunshine.

One day the children came home early from school. Out into the garden they ran, and then there was a shout:—

"If it isn't old Bronze!

Old Bronze was the largest cat they had. Jack had named him long ago, not because he was bronze colored, but because Jack knew that bronze was some kind of a color, and thought it sounded well.

There lay old Bronze on the basket. It was just the time when the afternoon sun shone on it. He probably found the warm earth a very comfortable bed.

They all laughed, and Jack said:—

"I'll fix him!"

He got the watering hose, and aimed at Old Bronze, while Harry ran to turn on the water.

"Oh, don't!" cried Ruth. "Poor old fellow!—he didn't know any better."

"But he must be taught a lesson," said Jack, very firmly. "Now, scoot!"

The cold water came with a dash, and Old Bronze "scooted." With one long, dreadful mi-aw-w-w-w-w! he sprang off the basket, flew over the flower-beds, and did not stop until he was in the top of the tallest tree.

"Poor old Bronze!" The little girls petted and coaxed and fondled him when he came down. He had learned his lesson well, for he never so much as looked at the basket again. And the lily grew, and was soon looking around her like a queen. The morning glories crept down and wandered softly over the stones until, before summer was gone, the rockery looked like a bank of flowers.

The Field-Mice.

BY MARY C. SPAUDLING.

One summer Jack went into the country with his mother and his sister Mabel to spend the long summer months. He was very busy from morning till night helping feed the chickens, or chasing the calves, or hunting for hen's eggs. Sometimes he would be allowed to go with the hired man to drive home the cows, or, when the haymakers had filled the rack with hay, they would put Jack and Mabel on top of the load, and they would ride in glee to the barn.

The days seemed all too short for their merrymaking, and every night the last thing they said was, "Please waken me very early, for I have so many, many things to do to-morrow." But I wish to tell you of some strange pets that Mabel and Jack had that summer.

One morning they received permission to go into the field behind the house and pick strawberries. They worked hard, and had almost filled their small tin cups, when "Peep-peep" sounded right under Jack's feet. It was such a faint little cry that he first thought it was a bird with a broken wing He pushed aside the grass, and saw four pairs of bright black eyes peering at him.

There, huddled close together, lay four little mice.

"Mabel! Mabel! here are some mice," called Jack. "They are the cunningest little things, and are so young they can hardly move. Come here, and tell me if you ever saw brighter eyes; and they are crying as if they are hungry."

"Oh, the dear little things!" exclaimed Mabel, when she saw them. "How did they come here? I thought mice always lived on pantry shelves and places where no one wants them."

"These must be field-mice," replied Jack. "I heard the farmer say the other day that he had found a nest of field-mice. Let us wait until the father and the mother mouse come home." So they sat down and waited for the old ones to come, put they failed to appear.

"Perhaps they are afraid of us, and will not return while we are here. Let us go to dinner, and then we will come back and see them," said Jack.

When they returned after dinner, the little ones were still alone and crying piteously; so the children went back to the house, and begged corn for the little mice.

After feeding them, they brought water, and tried to teach them to drink. After supper they went again to see the field-mice, and still the old mice had not returned.

"I'll tell you what we must do," said Jack. "I am afraid the mother and father mouse have been killed. Perhaps a cat has caught them. So we must adopt these little mice, or they will die."

The first thing every morning the children would go to the field, and carry the mice their breakfast. Very soon the little creatures would eat from their hands, and became as playful and tame as kittens. After a time, as they grew larger, the children carried them nuts, which the mice would crack with their sharp white teeth.

When the time drew near for leaving the country, Jack and Mabel felt very sorry to part with their little friends the field-mice. They begged their mamma to allow them to take the mice to the city with them. But she would not consent.

"But they have no house to live in! What will they do?" said Mabel.

Then their mama told them that field-mice sleep through the entire winter. As soon as the cold weather begins, they curl up like little balls, and, crawling close to one another, dream the whole winter long.

Sometimes, when a very warm sunshiny day melts the snow, the little mice waken, and nibble some corn or nuts which they have stored away for the winter. Then they sleep on until another warm day.

"I will tell you a very kind thing to do," said their mama. "These field mice will soon begin to lay in a supply of corn and nuts for the winter. It means a great deal of work for them to carry so much food to their homes. So you children can help them by placing some food they like near their nests."

The day before Jack and Mabel left the country, they carried a large quantity of grain and nuts (enough for a hundred mice, the farmer said), and laid it beside the field-mice's nest. During the winter, whenever an unusually bright day occurred, the children would say:

"I expect the field-mice wakened today, and ate some nuts and corn."—S. S. Times.

GOOD SPIRITS

follow good health while low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose, or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from pernicious, solitary practices, often indulged in by the young, through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Nervous debility, and loss of manly power, not infrequently result from such unnatural habits.

To reach, reclaim and restore such unfortunates to health and happiness, is the aim of an association of medical gentlemen, who have prepared a treatise, written in plain but chaste language and treating of the nature, symptoms and curability, by home treatment, of such diseases.

Bright's Disease.

Crawfordsville, Ind., March 20, 1894.

ELECTROLIBRATION CO.

Gentlemen:—Inclosed I hand you some correspondence from Elder Sylvester Hassell A. M., a great preacher and author of a valuable "Church History." The contents will doubtless prove gratifying to you.

Yours truly,
D. BARTLEY.

Williamston, N. C., March 12th, 1894.

DR. D. BARTLEY,
Crawfordsville, Ind.

Dear Brother:—I herewith enclose you two testimonials in regard to the Electropoise, the first, after a few months and the second, after nearly three years' use of the instrument. I know nothing equal to it in the Materia Medica.

Yours sincerely,
SYLVESTER HASSELL.

Williamston, N. C., March 9th, 1892.

I have found more relief in Bright's Disease from a few months use of the Electropoise, than from all patent medicines, physicians' prescriptions, mineral waters, "faith healing," and a winter's residence in a warm climate.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

Williamston, N. C., March 12th, 1894.

During my recent tour in Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina, while traveling about five thousand miles and preaching day and night, I was blessed of the Lord to receive wonderful strength and ease and sleep, great relief for my kidneys, heart and nerves from the Electropoise. I have taken no medicine, and I am far better off than when I took 12 doses of doctor's medicine, and a half gallon of Lithia water a day. I weigh one hundred and twenty-five pounds, and my complexion is that of perfect health.

Physicians owe it to the high demand of their noble calling, and to the cause of suffering humanity to test the virtues of the Electropoise with carefulness and impartiality. I wish that every family owned, and would properly use the instrument.

I am not an agent and have no connection with the Electropoise Company, and have no other motive in writing these testimonials than a desire to relieve suffering.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

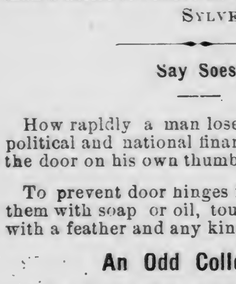
An Odd Collection.



A man in Colorado has a quaint collection of bottles. It is divided into two sections. Section one is large. Section two is not. Section one contains hundreds of bottles, the contents of which his wife swallowed hoping to find relief from her physical sufferings. Section two contains a few bottles that once were filled with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It was this potent remedy that gave the suffering wife her health again. It cures all irregularities, internal inflammation and ulceration, displacements and kindred troubles. It has done more to relieve the sufferings of women than any other medicine known to science.

Pile tumors, rupture and fistulæ, radically cured by improved methods. Book, 10 cents in stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

LAYING UP TREASURES.

The sermon on the Mount is a delineation of the characters of the citizens of the kingdom which our LORD JESUS CHRIST came to establish. It is a promulgation and exposition of the laws of that kingdom. It is a declaration of the principles which should prevail in the lives of its citizens. One of these principles is declared in language of oriental illustration and world-wide application in which our LORD says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. For where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

We have seen the need and the right to accumulate property and increase goods for the shelter and support of families and servants for the wants of the needy and suffering, for the cultiva tion of crops, for the conditions and conduct of business, manufactures commerce and trade and for the maintenance of good government. This text is in harmony with that. It is a warning and an exhortation not to go further and gather and store up even the good things and necessary supports of society for purely selfish ends, whether as misers getting gold for its own sake or as spendthrifts wasting in reckless extravagance and using unrighteous methods and oppressive means to get the gold. It is specifically a warning against the accumulation of private or personal property of any kind merely as treasurers of riches and for selfish gratification without any reference to our fellowmen. It is a rebuke of selfishness and a plea to get worldly treasures not for their own value but as means to lay up treasures in Heaven.

The oriental coloring appears in this that treasures there consisted in large part in costly clothing which could be kept and handed down for generations. This was well enough for what could be used, but if more than was necessary should be laid up, the moth would consume. The word rust means anything that eats to destroy. The material eaten might be grain, such as the rich man of the parable had, and planned to build larger barns to store it. Instead of lasting for many years as it would do by continual sowing and reaping, it would be eaten up of little insects. Instead of being stored in barns thus to be eaten it should have been sold for increase of trade and employment in business, or given in charity, finding barns in the empty hands and homes of the needy. The material might be metal which real rust would corrupt. Instead of increasing the amount of this as a mere possession it should be melted and wrought into useful articles of trade and service, with employment of others in their trades and labor and improvement of means of usefulness. The word thieves means robbers also. Breaking through would be either digging through walls where treasures are stored, or with violence breaking open doors or with fraud breaking contracts or violating trusts to seize these treasures.

The meaning is plain that if we lay up treasures of any kind they may be consumed or destroyed by ordinary agencies or we may be robbed of them by theft or have them taken away by fraud or violence. This brings the truth to our times and gives painful reminder of common experiences. The overstocked larder, the catch-all-garret, the old clothes closet, the unused library, the piled up old gold and jewelry heap, the unused bank accumulation, with endless variety of neglected heaps of farm products and household gatherings and personal unused treasures wasting by decay, rusting by neglect, subject to the fraud or violence or enmity or dishonesty make suggestion of the application.

The rather we should consider the opportunity to use these treasures so as to lay up treasures in heaven. We cannot take them with us, we must send them before we go. There are no pockets in a shroud and the soul will not care to gather up these poor things into the hands of the resurrection body, even if it could, to be taken where the silver is not reckoned and the gold is put into the pavement of the streets and the precious stones are not brought into the many mansions, but made foundations for the outer walls of the city or fixed in its gates. The things we treasure here will be counted common there. Still they can be exchanged here for heavenly currency, or, what is far better, we can use some things, not reckoned at their real value here, to purchase cheques on the heavenly treasury.

We shall need first of all to see if our title is clear to the many mansions, for the treasures laid up there would not be worth anything to us if we never go there to enjoy them. Indeed we cannot lay up treasures there if we do not expect to go ourselves. The bank of heaven does not open an account with a citizen of another country. We must be citizens of that country to have any treasures laid up there. Then every cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple, every act of kindness in the service of the king of the country shall be laid up to our account. This is the application in part of the parable of the unjust steward. The mammon of unrighteousness used here to help the poor and needy, to relieve the oppressed, to minister to the distressed, helping them on to the heavenly home will be made known to them in glory, and what they may not have fully appreciated here, what we do not know the value of to those we help, will make such a part of their happiness that they will welcome us joyfully to everlasting habitations. Meanwhile by good use of earthly things we shall be building character, the true treasure of heaven.

This cannot be done selfishly. The treasures we lay up will be reckoned when we do what we do, making good use of earthly things for the salvation and relief of our fellowmen in the constraining love of CHRIST. It is a blessed fact, nevertheless, that doing for CHRIST will increase our interest in Heaven, and while we may not know it from that point of view, laying up treasures in heaven will more and more fix our heart upon that home.

What we lay up here we lose, what we lose here to lay up treasures in heaven, we never lose. What if the treasures of heaven should be souls saved and cheered, though the agents or instruments furnished or supported by our earthly treasures! A man who, when rich, had given much of his means for the service of CHRIST, when poor and dying, was heard to say: "What I saved I have lost, but what I gave away for CHRIST, I have."

DAVIDSON COMMENCEMENT.

We are disappointed in not receiving a report direct of the commencement. As it may be delayed only, we will not undertake to give a full resume, that our readers may the better enjoy what our correspondent will much more interestingly tell them.

On Wednesday, 13th, Dr. J. B. STRICKLER, of Atlanta, delivered the annual address before the Philanthropic and Eumenean Societies, on The Conditions of success in Life." The Alumni Oration was delivered by Rev. EGBERT W. SMITH. That these addresses were masterly goes without saying.

At night came the contest for the inter-society Orator's medal. The contestants and their subjects were as follows: F. D. JONES, "The Poet as Teacher; ALEX MARTIN, "Vacant Niches in the Temple of Fame;" W. C. UNDERWOOD, "The Mission of the Populist Party;" J.M. MCINTIRE, "From Beech to Book;" E. L. WILSON, "Story of a Life;" J. C. STORY, "Purer Motives in Politics." The medal was awarded next day to Mr. F.D. JONES, of Lowrysville, S. C.

Thursday was the great day of the commencement—at least that which evoked most enthusiasm from the students and their lady friends, who assembled in numbers.

Mr. MARION FARR who delivered the Salutatory was excused on account of ill health from the regular oration. He, however, in happy terms welcomed the visitors to Davidson.

The senior orations were delivered as follows:

Mr. J. D. ARNOLD an address on "Triumphant Democracy;" Mr. CHARLES F. RANKIN, on "Counter Currents;" Mr. J. W. STOKES, on "The Makers of Modern Italy;" Mr. WM. GOODMAN, on "Philosophy and Education."

Rev. Dr. J. B. MACKS delivered the six Society Medals. The Wm. Banks Biblical Medal was delivered to Mr. M. E. SENTELLE, of Tennessee—Mr. C. E. HODGIN contesting closely for the prize. The latter received special mention and was awarded an Oxford Bible.

The list of degrees and what follows we take from the Charlotte Observer from which we have condensed what is given above.

The Board of Trustees at their meeting discussed the question of abolition of the Greek letter fraternities, and referred the matter to an ad interim committee of seven. Rev. Dr. W. J. MCKAY was elected President of the Executive Committee of Trustees in place of Col. J. L. BROWN, deceased.

HERE AND THERE.

WE HAVE MADE AN ARRANGEMENT which will enable us to provide our readers weekly with articles to be entitled "Popular Talks on Law." One of the best informed lawyers of the country, editor of the "Collector and Commercial Lawyer," a business law journal, and of the "Law Students Helper" will discuss a wide range of subjects of great popular interest. We will begin in next issue with "The Right of Petitioning"—a very timely topic—to be followed with talks on "Religious Liberty" and on "Good will" from a legal standpoint.

THESE ARTICLES WILL FURNISH JUST what some of our friends have expressed a desire to see in our columns. While we thus continually add new features of interest to the paper we trust our readers will not fail to appreciate our efforts and that increased circulation may come in as compensation.

OUR CONTEMPORARY, THE BIBLICAL RECORDER, has a way of getting sadly off at times. In an editorial last week on the subject of the capital case tried here recently it says:

"It [John Brock's neck] should have been broken—and every bone in his body besides. The more we contemplate the result of this trial, the more shameful it appears. No evidence—not one jot—was submitted to show that John Brock committed the crime when unaccountable or without premeditation; his defence was an unqualified denial. If he was guilty, he was guilty without palliation; and he was guilty of a most brutal murder. The jury calls his testimony a lie, saying that he did commit murder, and chicken-hearted or chicken-minded, or biased by some unknown influence, protects him with a lie from the condign end—the halter. Shame on New Hanover, that such a jury could be selected from her population, shame on her prosecuting officers! If John Brock can go unhung, capital punishment may as well be abolished. If a jury can be secured that will thus pronounce a murderer's only evidence a lie and in the face of entirely disinterested testimony of loud crying circumstances, which lacked not a link nor a letter, put him in a penitentiary for a few years, murderers may never again fear the gallows. The action in this case is an incentive to lynchings; and we do not hesitate to say that it would have been none the worse for New Hanover's honor, had this man been lynched. As it is, the law has been disregarded; and lynchers are incapable of doing more.

THIS IS A VERY SEVERE ARRAIGNMENT of the solicitor, the jury and, by implication, the judge, in the BROCK case; for the judge placed the question of murder in the first or in the second degree before the jury by his charge; and the denunciation is made by one who, by fair presumption, was over one hundred miles from the place of trial and was not acquainted with the characters of the jurors, or any of them, and probably not with the personal characters of any of the officers of the court. It is in all probability a decision—a desire to hang a man—simply upon newspaper reports.

AND JUST HERE, AS SUGGESTED BY the last line, we introduce an incident that occurred in the selection of the jury. One of those who stood to be tested for his competency to serve was asked the usual question as to having formed or expressed an opinion on the matter before him. He promptly stated his opinion that BROCK ought to be hanged. Judge MEARES asked if solely upon newspaper reports he would hang a man, and was answered, Yes! We do not quote His Honor's words, we could not reproduce his tone, his looks, his manner, when he invoked for that man, at the great assize, that mercy and that justice which he would deny his fellowmen.

DURING THE COURSE OF THE TRIAL we repeatedly heard the opinion expressed that let the issue be what it might the jury was unexceptionable. Though many expected another verdict, yet every fairminded person acquainted with the facts will concede that no fairer trial has ever been held in this county.

BY WAY OF VINDICATION OF THE character of those so unjustly aspersed we state a circumstance to which otherwise we would not give this publicity: The first act of the jurors after choosing a foreman was reverently to kneel and invoke wisdom and guidance from GOD himself. Bad men, or men morally weak would not have done this. And we doubt not those prayers were heard and answered. To this occult influence perhaps is to be attributed the ready acquiescence in a verdict that by very many, because of prejudgment, was not anticipated. If not this then to the entire satisfaction with the conduct of judge, solicitor and counsel, and entire confidence in the intelligence and integrity of the jury, we must credit this acquiescence.

LYNCHING IS A CRIME, A HORRIBLE crime, for which we have neither excuse nor palliation. But how much better is murder under the forms of law, than murder without the forms of law? Just such reckless writing as our contemporary employs, if persisted in, must create a sentiment that acting upon weak or willing juries will deny impartial trial to one charged with crime and make an arraignment for crime equivalent to a warrant for execution.

A friend writes this:

"I was much interested in the short sketch of the New England Primer which recently appeared in the PRESBYTERIAN (April 19th, I think). The reading of the Primer was among the first efforts of my boyhood. In addition to what was given in the sketch please allow me to send the following:

"Queen Esther comes in royal State,
To save the Jews from dismal fate.

Proud Korahs troop
Was swallowed up.

"There was a picture of the two bears tearing the rude children who insulted Elisha; and I think there was a poetical dialogue between Satan and a youth. But what impressed my youthful mind more than anything else was the picture of John Rogers as he was tied to the stake to be burned at Smithfield during the reign of Queen Mary. His wife and nine children were near him and I think one of them was a babe in her arms.

"There were several verses of poetry attached, which was said to be Roger's farewell address to his family. I am unable to recall (from memory) a single verse. Is there any one among the readers of the PRESBYTERIAN who can reproduce them? If there is I will take it as a favor if they will have them published. I am inclined to believe that the Roman Catholic Church was helped forward "a bit" when the American people decided that the Primer was too antiquated to continue longer in print."

We are glad to have this reminiscence and will be pleased to publish the farewell address referred to above if sent to us. We suppose every copy of the "New England Primer" cannot have disappeared from the earth.

QUITE A STIR HAS BEEN CREATED IN Georgia by the action of a presiding elder in removing from his charge, and suspending from the ministry, a member of the North Georgia Conference who accepted the position of editor of a political newspaper. Now on the face of the matter it would seem hard for an editor of a political paper to faithfully perform all the duties that reasonably might be required of him as a pastor. But newspaper editing per se need not, we should think, interfere with a minister's duties any more than farming or any other secular occupation taking time and requiring mental application. Of the case in hand we know nothing so definite as would justify expression of opinion.

UNDER THE WILL OF MRS. JOHN C. MERCER her late residence, furnished a half hour's ride from Philadelphia, beautifully located, is a home for not more than twelve disabled Presbyterian ministers. The occupants must not use tobacco in any form. The periodicals and railroad tickets to the city, at stated times the use of a carriage, with food and clothing, and to those who need it some pocket money, are furnished. The manager utilizes the ground around the Home and sufficient means to support the Home were provided.

Christianity commands us to pass by injuries; policy, to let them pass by us.

The Presbyterian.

A SWEET THOUGHT.

When the first passover drew near,
Which darkened Egypt's land with fear,
A young and gentle Hebrew maid
Was on a bed of sickness laid;
And to her hot and fevered brain
An anxious thought gave added pain.

And oft in restless tones she cried:
"O, father is the blood applied
Upon the door and lintel high
That bids the angel pass us by?
I am the eldest born, you know;
On me would fall the fatal blow."

They tried to soothe her troubled thought
With the assurance that she sought;
And strove with every tender art,
To calm and ease her frightened heart.
But still her cry came like a prayer,
"Say, are you sure the blood is there?"

Her father lifted her at last,
And o'er the threshold with her passed,
That she herself the door might view;
No blood was there, her fears were true!
The midnight hour was passing by,
And death's stern messenger drew nigh

"Bring me the blood," the sick girl said,
Her childish voice rang sharp with dread.
They brought it at her quick command,
She dipped it in her thin white hand,
And stroked the lintel and the door,
Just as the angel passed before.

A moment there in doubt he stood,
And looked upon the undried blood,
Then passed along his death marked way
While safe, though weak, the maiden lay,
Held closely to her father's breast,
And smiled her thanks for peace and rest.

O, careless children of to-day
How many of you all can say,
You know the saving blood is there?
How many strive in anxious prayer
Till doubt and fear and deep distress
Give place to peace and blessedness.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

We resume publication of our correspondents report:

SATURDAY MORNING, NINTH DAY

The report on Colored Evangelization was then take up before a full house. Dr. Otts' substitute was tabled, after some discussion and the committee's report was well-nigh unanimously adopted. Rev. A. L. Phillips was given the privilege of the floor and in the ten minutes remaining before adjournment made an earnest, vigorous, eloquent address. I am sure this cause will receive a heartier support then lever before by every member of this Assembly. Bro. Phillips speech ought to be worth $20,000, and the opposition manifested helped rather than hindered, by awakening interest and by its utter failure to prove the slightest ground for its criticism. It is no violation of confidence to say that in the "executive session" of the Assembly, the very fullest and freest opportunity was given for criticism of the work. And when after all the intimations that had been made it was announced that the criticisms were all in, the Assembly smiled a broad and universal smile and re-elected Brother Phillips with a heartness whose meaning was unmistakable. We trust that the work has received a new impetus. This much need not have been said except that some unjust criticisms have been published before, and one of the Nashville papers gave a partial report of the meeting which might make a false impression.

The "interlocutory session" as our brother called it (not by accident) took up the whole of

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The election of Dr. Phillips has already been noted. Rev. S. H. Chester, D. D., acting Secretary of Foreign Missions, having already proved his eminent fitness for his post at Nashville was elected without the shadow of opposition. So also was Dr. Hazen, Secretary of Publication.

Dr. Richardson was elected Secretary of Education. The expenses of the office have been reduced, an ad interim committee on the whole subject of Beneficiary Education was appointed, and the statement was made that Dr. Richardson would only consent to serve during this year.

Dr. Craig, was elected Secretary of Home Missions. An excellent rule was adopted making (after this year) the first of September the date for the ending of the term for which the Secretaries are elected, so that whenever the Assembly desires to change its officers or its policy three months notice will be given to the incumbent.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

The report of the Executive Committee on Foreign Missions was heard. Dr. White, Chairman, Rev. A. T. Graham, acting for him. The report was long and for the most part perfunctorily discussed. The Assembly was tired out. The manual, after the most careful work on the part of the ad interim committee, was not quite acceptable to the Executive Committee, and was referred to them for another year. In the discussion concerning the manual Rev. T. R. Sampson, was given the privileges of the floor and gave some evidence of his wonderful grasp of the whole subject of Foreign Missions.

On the question of the disposition of our property in Greece Dr. Kalopathakes was heard, from (as usual) through lengthy epistles addressed to Rev. Joshua Phipps, who supported the Doctor's contention with much ardor. The substitute to which he was speaking, however, the transferrence of the property to the Greek Church, was quietly, but firmly placed upon the table. There are some things the Assembly can never settle for its successor. This is one of those things.

The question in which the North Carolina delegation was intensely interested was the election of a Field Secretary. Unfortunately the case was badly managed. The committee offered a recommendation to the effect that the Executive Committee be empowered to elect a Field Secretary. The duties of the Secretary were defined with painful exactness. We were told very much as to what he was not to do. Excessive caution aroused suspicion. The cry of "Board" was raised, and by one who was strongly in favor of an election by the Assembly. It was afterward discovered that there was strong support in the Assembly for the election of a Field Secretary—but it was found out too late. The item in the report was stricken out almost without a chance for discussin.o We are persuaded that the need of a Field Secretary will be manifest ere another Assembly meets and the one man who will fill that place, we in North Carolina already know.

Sunday morning dawned bright and clear. The churches were will filled and many able sermons were listened to with interest and profit. Fifteen Presbyterian churches were occupied by the commissioners.

MONDAY MORNING—TENTH AND LAST DAY.

After devotional exercises and the approval of the minutes, the report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures with reference to Dr. Woodrow's relation to Augusta Presbytery was taken from the docket. The answer that he be considered a member of Augusta Presbytery, with full rights and privileges, notwithstanding his residence in Charleston Presbytery, the rejection of his letter of dismission by that Presbytery and his failure to return his letter to Augusta Presbytery, was adopted by the Assembly.

The motion to amend the Revised Directory by substituting "in" for "into" in the Baptismal Formula, was, in the absence of Dr. Howison laid upon the table. This is not as important a matter as the famous iota that was left out of the Nicene Creed.

The committee on Foreign Correspondence recommended our withdrawal from the Pan Presbyterian Alliance, as it is popularly known. This is another of those things that is a standing order for each Assembly. After a brief conference by the friends of the Alliance it was agreed that the best way to put the question out of the way with as gentle a rebuke as possible was to lay the motion on the table.

The report on Home Missions was adopted with slight amendments. The "Home Missionary" was discontined. A motion to unite the "Home Missionary" and the (Foreign) "Missionary," together with a motion to transfer the Invalid Fund to the Assembly's Home and School at Fredricksburg, were referred to an ad interim committee. Both measures received the most favorable consideration. Co-operation in Home Missions with the Northern Assembly came up with a motion by Dr. Daniel to appoint a conference committee of three, as the subject. Dr. Craig, Dr. W. H. Woods and elder James Coulter, of Baltimore, was appointed as the committee.

There were several overtures asking for the establishment of a Bureau of Information, so that vacant churches could be informed of ministers without charge or desiring a change of field, and ministers of churches. The Assembly's Home Mission Committee is constituted such a Bureau and the Synodical and Presbyterial Committees are asked also to help in this work. The supplying of many of our churches might be accomplished through this agency.

The report on Young People's Societies with its substitute—the ad interim committee's report was taken from the docket, and stirred the last breeze of debate. Dr. Daniel moved that the whole question be indefinitely posponed, and so the debate was three-cornered. Rev. J. D. McLean, made a vigorous speech against postponement and in favor of immediate action. He said that sessions everywhere were looking to the Assembly for something definite and final—that the movement had already got beyond their control in many instances and that they needed help. He was especially opposed to any affiliation of Presbyterian societies with those of other denominations. Mr. Elwang urged postponement. He said that he stood exactly on the committee's ground with regard to woman's place in the Church, but that he had some good women in his own church (from the North) and that they would speak sometimes and he thought too stringent action might disrupt his church.

His remarks upon womanism brought Dr. Walden to the front, who argued vigorously against postponement, as a virtual giving up of the whole question. He said that womanism (Webster does not give the word) was making its inroads into our Southland with the W. C. T. U. as its right wing and the Y. L. C. E. as its left wing. That we were upon the threshold of times that would try men's(?) souls and that the doctrinal principles of Presbyterianism were at stake. He should not be place-hunter or place-seeker—Mr. Elwang took this as a reference to himself and so did the Assembly. He declared that Dr. Walden was not displaying a Christian spirit and for this he was called to order by the moderator. But the Assembly is a fair minded body and it resented the accusation of Dr. Walden whether intentionally direct or not.

A man who desires to remain in his own field and to manage abuses which he condemns, in a prudent manner, is not a place-hunter. Dr. Walden soon moved a slight amendment to the report. It was unimportant. Ordinarily it would have been carried by the affirmative weight. It was voted down almost unanimously and the emphatic no was of the nature of a rebuke, for this, the only unpleasant episode of all the sessions of the Assembly.

Rev. Egbert Smith made a strong speech. He noted the fact that while the Methodists had their Epworth League and the Episcopalians their St. Andrew's Brotherhood, the Presbyterian and Congregational bodies had no denominational society for young people and therefore the Christian Endeavor Society had been adopted by Presbyterians and Congregationalists more largely than by the other churches. He appealed to the Assembly to direct by its control the overflowing energy of our young people, springing as it did from love to Christ and desire to work for Him. We should have an authoritative constitution. Dr. Daniel withdrew his motion to postpone and the report of the ad interim committee was adopted without change and by a large majority.

AFTERNOON.

Elder J. W. Moore called up his resolution with regard to irresponsible evangelists. "The Assembly enjoins our Presbyteries, pastors and church sessions to prevent the unscriptural and unconstitutional practice of permitting unlicensed persons to preach in our churches." A motion to table was lost, and after some discussion the resolution was adopted. Mr. Moore was jubilant over the passage of his paper, but we doubt whether it will accomplish much. It may serve as an excuse for those who need backing in refusing to have an "unlicensed person" in their pulpits.

The report of the committee on Education was adopted. A carefully prepared manual containing many of the deliverances of the Assembly was referred to the ad interim committee. It was a pity that it could not have been adopted at once.

The committee on Theological Seminaries Dr. Rosebro, chairman, made an encouraging report.

There were seventy-four students at Union Seminary during the session. Diplomas granted to sixteen. The death of Dr. Thomas E. Peck, for thirty-three years connected with the Institution, was regretfully noted. Dr. C. R. Vaughan has been elected Professor of Systematic Theology in his place. Columbia reports fifty-three students and thirteen graduates; $24,000 additional endowment has been secured and Rev. S. M. Smith, D. D., will take some classes in homiletics and elocution. Clarksville (S. W. P. U.) reports thirty-four divinity students and has conferred the degree of Bachelor of Divinity upon seven. Louisville in its first year received thirty-one students and gave the B.D. degree to four. One hundred thousand dollars was given as a permanent endowment by Mr. A. J. Alexander, of Versailles, Ky.

The report recommended the confirmation of the newly elected professors, the confering of the B. A. degree by Union and Columbia, the securing of adequate instruction in elocution by the seminaries where it is not taught, and a four years course with terms of six months each. The report was adopted.

A strong paper with reference to the lottery evil was adopted.

Dr. Mills was allowed to enter his protest against the Assembly's action in the Woodrow case.

One of our Northern brethren visiting the Assembly expressed his surprise that on so many questions the votes were so evenly decided. It was replied that we did our own thinking and wore our sovereignty under our own hats. Dr. Summey offered a resolution that was carried unanimously and by a rising vote, the resolution of thanks to the pastor and officers of the Moore Memorial church, to the families of the city, the ladies of Moore Memorial, First, Second, Westminster, Cottage, McNeilly, Edgar, Woodland Street, Ben Avi and Glen Leven Presbyterian churches for their midday hospitality, to the courteous churches of sister denominations, to the daily papers, the railroads, and the various institutions which have sent invitations to the Assembly. Dr. Summey gracefully inserted a well-deserved compliment to Dr. Graham, the moderator, for his fair and impartial rulings. The moderator made few mistakes. His decision was appealed from only once and then the appeal was lost by a large majority. Perhaps he was too ideal a presiding officer, a liberal "servant of the house." A little more of bossism would have facilitated business somewhat, and a little less courtesy to troublesome members would not have been resented. But every member of the Assembly regarded him with equal esteem for his wisdom and fairness and affection for his gentleness and charity. The motion to adjourn was made. The moderator before putting the motion returned his thanks to the brethren for the honor they had put upon him and for their consideration and forbearance in his trying position. He complimented the Assembly upon its close application to its work, upon the little time lost in unnecessary discussion and upon its decisions in the great questions submitted to it. He felt sure that hasty words had been regretted and atoned for. He trusted that there would be a renewal of their pleasant associations and fraternal intercourse sometime on earth, if not there vould be when we all adjourned to Our Father's House. The motion to adjourn was carried by an almost inaudible vote. Something was the matter with our voices. The moderator read the form of dissolution called an Assembly to be composed in like manner and to meet in Dallas, Texas, May 16th, 1895, and closed with prayer for the approval and blessing of the great Head of the Church.

So ended the 34th Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church. The moderator says it was the best Assembly he ever attended, but then it was the Assembly that elected him. Your correspondent knows that it was the best Assembly he ever attended as a commissioner. We believe its decisions on all the great questions will commend themselves to the common-sense of the Church at large. One of our severest critics has since told me that the Assembly was "unusually judicious."

And so we turned our backs upon Nashville, city of Presbyterian churches—beautiful for situation—the very center of the blue-grass region of middle Tennessee—the home of beautiful women and gallant Southern men—a cultivated Christian community, with that open-handed hospitality which permits no sense of obligation, but only the grateful recollections of delightful fellowship. And so from "Maryland and Texas" we scattered to our churches and our homes—not yet from Maine to California."

Leo XIII.

Though neither our readers nor ourselves have the least sympathy with the system of religion of which the present Pope is the chief, yet the following sketch given by the Rome correspondent to the Baltimore Sun not a great while ago, we think will prove interesting:

In personal appearance Leo XIII has a marked resemblance to those meagre figures of saints, worn to a shadow from a life of fasting and asceticism, which Fra Angelico so loved to delineate—single figures with solemn faces full of profound thought or deep devotional expression, standing out against a background of brilliant blue or bright gold. The Pope seems to have only sufficient body left to house the spirit that longs to be at rest. He was always more or less delicate, and one of the most cogent objections he urged in the conclave against his being elected to the Papacy, when it became evident that the votes were tending toward him, was that his delicate health would in a short time render a new conclave necessary. And when I saw him for the first time as pontiff, a few weeks after his election, I considered that his span of life in such a most wearing and responsible position would be counted by months rather than by years.

HIS APPEARANCE IN ST. PETER'S.

He is, perhaps, seen at his best during those grand though infrequent ceremonies which take place in St. Peter's, and at which he assists, the central figure, the cynosure of all eyes. When seated in the crimson, high-backed sedia gestatoria, which is borne up by long poles resting on the shoulders of eight bearers who are clothed in crimson damask, he may be said to look his best as, with a slight swaying motion, he is carried along through the vast crowds. By the sides of the chair, or sedia, up near his head, are carried the large fans (flabelli) of white peacock feathers, which give such an air of splendor to the spectacle; and, held over his head by eight poles, borne by distinguished noblemen, is the canopy of white and pearl-gray silk, which as it moves in the sunlight shows changing tints as varied and delicate as those on a dove's breast. The Pope, seen on such an occasion, is waxy pale in complexion. The great sign of life and vigor is the brilliancy of his eyes, which, with piercing glance, seem to take in the whole vast crowd, and to see and observe each individual face. The heavy, huge tiara which he wears at such ceremonies, with its three crowns studded with pearls, seems to oppress him by its weight and bulk. His hand trembles with nervousness or the burden of years as he lifts it up from the superincumbent weight of the great cope, which enwraps him from the shoulders to the feet, and extends it to bless the people as he passes. At audiences, which, with unwearying good nature he still continues to give, being seen closer, he looks all his age, which is now reaching the close of his eighty-fourth year. The constant surprise of those who see him and hear him speak in that strong, deep voice, with the slow and clear enunciation, for which he has always been distinguished, is that a man of such age preserves so well the brilliancy of mind, the vividness of memory, the keenness of intellectual grasp which were his characteristics from his early years. His latest encyclical on the study of the Sacred Scriptures shows that his powers of mind are undiminished by age or lessened by use.

Such are the qualities and characteristics of the individual who wields power in the Vatican. However well he may be served and assisted by the brilliant minds around him, the acts he does, and the letters he issues, and the addresses and discourses he makes, are wholly and solely the outcome of his own mind and the results of his own intellectual operations.

PROMISE.

He is with thee! With thee always,
All the nights and all the days:
Never failing, never frowning,
With His loving kindness crowning,
Turning all thy life to praise.

He is with thee! Thine own Master,
Leading, loving to the end;
Brightening joy and lightening sorrow,
ALL to-day, yet MORE to-morrow,
King and Saviour, Lord and Friend.

An Encouraging Thing.

One of the most encouraging things that we can say about a dispensation of God is, that we do not understand it. Men mostly imagine that they can understand God's goodness in caring for his loved ones,—when that care shows itself in their health, wealth, and generally fulfilled desires. But when God's care shows itself in sickness, poverty, and distress, they say they cannot understand it. Truly, if one of these forms of divine dealing can be understood, the other can; and if one cannot, neither can the other. We cannot understand the fulness of the meaning of "He careth for you." "If we could thoroughly understand anything, that would be enough to prove it undivine," says George MacDonald. So, when the understanding unconditionally surrenders to implicit trust, the whole man glorifies God.—Sunday School Times.

The Employments of Heaven.

BY THE REV. D. J. BURRELL.

In recent excavations among the sepulchres of Peru, mummies of the Incas has been found dating bacck 3,000 years. They were known to be Incas by the fact that sceptres were elapsed in their bony hands. Near by were found the bodies of warriors, the how and quiver full of arrows lying by their side. There were ladies of fashion also, their dust crumbling in the midst of vast wardrobes, whose texture, like their wearer's bones, vanished at the touch. In some of the tombs lay skilful artificers, with the implements of their trade near by. In one was a housewife, kinswoman of her in Proverbs 31, for here were the long needles and the coarse woolen yarn with which she had made unto herself "coverings of tapestry" and "scarlet for the household."

In these revelations of the ancient Peruvian tombs we may learn—what God's acre in every land and age discovers—that men believe by intuition not only in life after death, but in a life of activity, whose tasks and employments, so far from being totally different from those of the earth, shall be so like them as to make our apprenticeship here an education for work hereafter. Our books and workman's tools, the spindle and distaff, the brush of the painter; why not bury them with the dead? If there is to be a resurrection of hands and brains, why shall they not repossess the implements wherewith they were skilled to work?

We know but little of the glorified estate of those who have passed through the gates into the city, that is to say, we know but little definitely. "It doth not year appear what we shall be." But of one thing we are assured: The saints shall not be idle. They are God's servants in heaven as they were on earth, and they still "do Him service." They have been translated from a busy life (for only the laborers shall receive the penny at evenning) to a still busier life, and one infinitely more fruitful in results.

We are reminded, however, that heaven is spoken of as a place of eternal rest: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." But this is not the rest of mere passivity or indolence. Ah, no! A rest from the trials and heartaches and disappointments of this present world. No more fainting, gasping for breath, languishing on sick beds; no more endless nights; no scourge, nor fagot, nor anathema; this is heaven's rest: "There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest,"

But to cease from effort; who desires that? Assuredly it is not the inheritance of the divinely blest. For heaven is life—abundance of life, a well of living water gushing up in the soul; but cessation from labor is death. Idle feet, hands folded over the breast, a placid smile frozen on the lips—no flush, no eagerness; this is death. The soul revolts at it. We crave exertion. The happiness of heaven will largely consist in the best and most economical adjustment of all the forces of human life to the great purposes of God. No man or woman will labor out his sphere. None will miss his calling. Toil will become pleasure because the employment of each one will be suited to his capacity and taste. All trades and professions will be equally respectable and enviable. The hewer of wood and the carver of statutes will belong to the same guild of "ancient and honorable workmen," and will rejoice alike in the approving smile of Him who assigns their tasks. So the redeemed will rest in service.

"Rest is not quitting the busy career;
Rest is the fitting of self to its sphere.

"'Tis the brook's motion, clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean after its life.

"'Tis loving and serving the highest and best,
'Tis onward, unswerving. And that is true rest."

And that is heaven's rest.

No doubt the chiefest joy of heaven will be its worship. Oh, the blessedness of those that dwell in thy tabernacles; they will be still praising thee; "They sit no longer beside the gate; they stand not in the porches; they minister not in outer courts:"—out within the vail, before the effulgent Presence, they swing their golden censers and strike their harps. And they shall look upon His face. "It was only the shadow of that glory which Moses saw; the outer folds, the waving skirt and fringes of the light wherein He dwelt." But the redeemed shall look upon His face! And they shall sing praises, each one having a golden harp. "Let those sweet consenting voices, those bursts and gushes of ethereal melody, reach thy heart, O soldier of the Cross, and breathe a new spirit into thy warfare! For what these heavenly singers are thou shalt be when thou takest off thine armor!" These are doubtless the highest joys. And yet, if heaven is nothing more than this; if it offers no relief from a continual ecstasy of praise and adoration; if the æons are to be spent in gazing fixedly at the divine splendor; or in singing only, "Holy! Holy! Holy!" our human nature must be wholly reconstructed in order to enjoy it. Out of that monotony of pleasure would grow up (according to the analogy of this world) a most exquisite pain. We cannot stay in our mountains of communion.

But we are nowhere taught that redeemed souls are kept forever at this, or at any other single occupation. It is true that worship yonder never ceases, it is like the fire upon the great brazen altar of the tabernacle which never went out. Day and night the throne is compassed and with worshippers; day and night the songs continue; but not always upon the lips of the same singers. Worship there, mayhap, is like our worship here—a stated service. A saint or an angel coming back from an alloted task—perhaps from an errand of mercy to some poor suffering one on earth, a praying mother, or a weeping child, or a soldier dying alone—goes up to the temple and chants his hallelujah, just as the knight of the olden time brought his torn standard from the wars and hung it on the church pillar while he knelt and joined in the chorus of the gloria. I cannot conceive how a finite soul could take pleasure in living without diversity of employments. "Two offices have the angels," said John Flavel. "Superius canere et inferius vigilare;" to sing above, to watch beneath. I am glad that God has promised this variety, in the full exercise of mental and spiritual vigor, to all those who are redeemed by the power of His grace. The service of the great temple will be only one of the pleasant duties assigned to them. At other times they may find their joy in wandering in pastures and by still waters. Or, again, they may be sent to wing their way, perhaps from star to star, on errands of their Master, as Gabriel flew with swiftness that rivalled the velocity of light down to the Babylonish plain, laying his hands upon the prophet at the time of the evening oblation. Whatsoever their employment may be, so much is certain, each at any given time will be assigned to that for which his tastes and endowments have qualified him. The poet no longer "lisping in numbers," will bring to his task a purer mind and bolder fantasy. The student will bend over the inexhaustible scroll of divine philosophy, charmed with a wisdom which has no peradventure in it.

"Ever filled and ever seeking, what they have they all desire;
Hunger there shall never fret them nor satiety shall tire;
Still enjoying while aspiring, in their joy they still aspire."

The devout astronomer will verify his speculations, perhaps, by journeying through space to the remotest systems of the universe. Paul and Peter will, each after his own method, preach the glorious Gospel still; and will watch as years and centuries pass by, with hopeful eyes, the conflicts of the Church militant; and the ripening of the handfuls of corn which they planted in the tops of Lebanon. Thus heaven will be the seat of great enterprises and the center of an universal commerce. Its citizens shall be ten thousand times ten thousand and thousand of thousands; and every one shall be busy in his appointed place and way, serving God.—Christian Intelligencer.

If Christ Should Come!

A phrase or a suggestion sometimes flashes a white light upon the life. Am I doing just what I should wish to be doing should Christ suddenly step to my side and manifest his supervising presence to me? We should be ready for his coming at any time, and, as faithful and obedient servants, should live each moment as if he were at our side. For this is the actual fact, were we sufficiently observant spiritually. Never for a moment are we from under the divine watchfulness and inspection. To remember this, and to live with the spiritual discernment and apprehension, is to be under the constant restraint and direction of God.

When the Lord Jesus Christ became incarnate and dwelt among men, the divine presence was especially emphasized. When he went away from earth he promised to come again, and the Christian world, ever since, although not knowing the day nor the hour, has been expecting his coming. Various as have been the forms of this expectation, the fact has been before the minds and hearts of Christians of all ages, impressing them most powerfully and winning them to an attitude of reverent and spiritual expectancy. Though generations have passed away, and still Christ has not come again, as many of them expected him, they walked softly before God during their earthly life and then went to find their hopes all realized as they met Christ at the door of death. But, so far as we know, Christ may return at any time and assume the authority of his kingdom in this world in person.

Suppose that Christ should thus step into the home, the office, the shop; should walk upon the street, step into the halls of legislation, enter the court room; should take his seat in the pulpit, or walk through the Sabbath-school, or stand before the prayer-meeting; should take his place in the parlor, the kitchen or at the table—what would there be in our daily lives and relationships that would be pleasing or displeasing to him?

No one can dispute, except the atheist, that everything in the whole round of daily life should be in absolute accordance with the law of God. In our secret thoughts and emotions everything should be arrayed as before God's great white throne, and nothing should be permitted to enter our souls' secret depths that defileth or that worketh abomination or that maketh a lie. Should Christ stand before us to-day, searching our souls' profoundest depths, what would he find? Let our souls answer.

Our speech should be under the law of the kingdom, in truthfulness and delicacy, in purity and kindness, in implicity and loyalty. Our conduct should be in all honesty and carefulness, in all cleanliness and Christliness, seeking to do what God would have us to do. Our homes should be characterized by the purity and beauty and gentleness and goodness we know were the elements of the home at Nazareth. Should Christ step in to inspect our lives and homes, would he find all in readiness for his coming? Happy that individual and that family found in the attitude of expectancy and grace.

Our civilization should be a transcript of the law of God. When society is regenerated, and the entire life of the world renovated, there will be nothing unwholesome or wicked in the whole earth. How evils would scatter if Christ should come to our nation, and if nothing should remain except that which is right in his sight. How hideous shapes of iniquity and transgression would lift themselves as shadows of the night, and roll away into the caverns of perdition! How the saloons and gambling-houses and places of lust and death would disentangle their hideous shapes, and hasten from his presence, How time-serving and public corruption and plotting and falsehood and cruelty and selfishness would roll away into the abysms of death!

This is to be our business! We are to seek to introduce Christ everywhere. We are to preach every sermon as if he were in the pulpit inspecting every word and every motive. We are to write and publish every line as he would have us. We are to conduct every meeting and direct every movement in the Church, and cast every vote as he would direct were he beside us in person.

Let the thought of the holy presence solemnize us not into severity, but into sweetness. Let us live and act as though each day and moment were, not our last upon earth, but as if they were under the very shadow and smile and glance of the Almighty.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Ever Popular Widow.

There is no gainsaying the fact that the widow is the most popular woman who flits across the maelstrom of social life. But the law of compensation sets a price on all the favors of fate, and the widow, however gloomy or shining her environment, is no exception to the rule. Are you a loved and loving wife, with the strong right arm of the best of men to shield and protect you from the world and its calumny? Then know that the removal of that arm means your own transformation in the eyes of the world to a person answering to an entirely different description. The world steps up higher in order to obtain a better point of view, and it ferrets out motives for action where no motive exists, and it regards you with suspicion where there is no cause. The world has an evil eye, and the lens through which it observes distorts the objects passing before it. The world has a vivid imagination also, and a predisposition to mistake its imagination for its memory. It is one of the traits for which popularity compensates, or vice versa, that the world keeps an eye on widows, and that their every action is fraught with interest. In the environment of widowhood woman must needs pay the price.

Dickens immortalized Mr. Weller by putting in his mouth the words "Samivel, beware of the vidders." The expression has been handed down and will continue to be, like any other wise old saw that creates capital as its goes, even when there is small foundation to build on. George Washington and Napoleon Bonaparte both married widows, each of whom had two children, a boy and a girl, and it is a coincidence in history that neither of them bore children to their illustrious lords.

Keep Your Promise.

Many people promise anything you ask of them, but make a small matter of keeping their promises. They enter into engagements with you to do this or that, to meet you or call on you at a certain time, or do some favor for you, and utterly fail to fulfill their engagements. This is a very serious matter, this lack of fidelity to promises and engagements. Surely we ought to keep sedulous watch over ourselves in this regard. We ought to be faithful to the promises we make, cost what it may. It is a noble thing when we find one whose promises we are as sure of as of the rising sun; whose simplest word is as good as his oath; who does just what he says he will do at the moment he says he will do it. That is the kind of faithfulness God wants.—J. R. Miller.

St. Andrews Church, Wilmington:—Communion at this church on Sunday last. Since last quarterly communion twenty persons have been received on examination and five by letter.

Degrees Conferred:—Davidson College has conferred the degree of D. D., on Rev. T. R. Sampson and Rev. R. F. Campbell, of Asheville, Rev. Egbert W. Smith, of Greensboro, and Rev. J. H. Boyd, of Charlotte.

Rev. T A. Wharton:—The congregation of Steel Creek church was not so satisfied and comfortable after service Sunday morning, as before. At the close of the sermon, Rev. T. A. Wharton, the pastor, announced that he had a call to a church in Virginia, and that he was going to look the land o'er and if he liked the people and they liked him, he would accept the call. Mr. Wharton has been pastor of Steel Creek church for several years. The church under him has grown to be the most powerful country church in the county. His departure would indeed be a source of regret, not only to his immediate congregation, but the Presbyterians of the county.

Danbury, Colored, Church:—Rev. C. Miller writes: Organization of colored church at Danbury, on Monday night, June 11th. Rev. C. Miller, as evangelist by special authority of Orange Presbytery, and assisted by Rev. S. G. Walker, organized a colored Presbyterian church at Danbury. Sixteen names were presented who had been previously received by Bro. Walker. One other was received by profession of faith and the organization was effected according to the form of the Book of Church Order, with seventeen members; six males and eleven females. A ruling elder was elected, ordained and installed, and the new church began its existence as an organization. By vote of the congregation, at the suggestion of Bro. Walker, the church was named Clark Memorial, in honor of a benevolent gentleman in Brooklyn, N. Y., who has materially aided the colored people of Danbury and the work of Bro. Walker in various ways. Their church building is up, covered and weatherboarded. The windows will soon be put in. He has only part of the money necessary to put in the floor and nothing tor the ceiling or painting. Will not some friends furnish the means for this purpose? A contribution of $50 at this time would be most acceptable. Bro. Walker expects that Mr. Clark will furnish the seats and pulpit.

Charlotte:—The pastors of the three Presbyterian churches in Charlotte, have for six weeks been holding a series of meetings at the chapels at the different cotton mills in the city which have resulted in a good many professions of faith and much good in reviving and stimulating the members of the church who attended. Sixteen additions to Graham Street church and several to the others have been some of the results. It has demonstrated the fact that where Presbyterianism is carried to the masses, it will be embraced. We thank God and take courage

DOMESTIC.

A young colored man, Nathaniel Carter, was ordained to the ministry of the Lutheran church on last Sunday, and on next Sunday will be installed as pastor of the Church of Our Saviour, the only colored Lutheran in or near Baltimore.

The Episcopal Diocese of Central Pennsylvania held its 23d annual session in St. James' Episcopal church, Lancaster. The church is one hundred and fifty years old.

In the death of Rev. Dr. John Edgar, the Presbyterian Church, North, and the cause of education sustains a great loss. He was born of Scotch parentage in the North of Ireland in 1842. He had been president of Wilson Female College eleven years, up to the time of his death.

Independent; The curious report comes to us, on apparently good authority, that at a late conference in Cleveland three Polish priests, representing 50,000 Polish Catholics, agreed to accept Dr. Edward R. Knowles, of Worcester, Mass., as bishop-elect, and that this makes eight priests in all thus far. The Kolasinski schism has come to an end, we understand; but here is a new schism which may be much more portentous, and give Mgr. Satolli something to do.

REMINISCENSES.

Kind words from the Editor prompt me to prepare for him an "olla podrida," ingredients for which are furnished by an "Historical Sketch of the Presbyterian Church of Fayetteville, N. C., by Rev. A. L. Phillips, Pastor, February 3d, 1889," recently sent to me by an unknown donor, to whom "gratias."

PASTORS.

A slight mistake in the author's notice of myself, furnishes occasion for a word of warning to young Ministers. I did not "seek relief from some pulmonary trouble." I suffered from what has been usually styled, "Clergyman's sore throat," and Rheumatism in the chest, superinduced by sheer imprudence. As I fancied that I had "an iron constitution" and "an iron will," I preached three times on the Lord's Day, delivered an address on Foreign Missions, on the first Monday evening in each month; another on Sunday Schools on the second Monday evening in each month; delivered a lecture at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting each week; and occasionally preaching for my brethren in the Presbytery on Friday and Saturday at open air meetings; besides exerting my voice in singing. Rain, snow, sleet, biting cold were not allowed to hinder work. One instance may suffice to illustrate my great imprudence. As Dr. Foote had notified me of his purpose to plead the cause of Foreign Missions at Fayetteville, I made an appointment at Bluff Church, for the same day. I went, with my young wife on Saturday afternoon to Mr. Murphy's, nine miles from Fayetteville. At midnight, rheumatism seized me, causing very great pains, and rendering all my limbs perfectly rigid. I refused to allow Mrs. Murphy to be called up until daybreak. I was then surrounded by bottles full of hot water. Flannels wrung out of boiling water and wetted with spirits of turpentine, were applied to my chest. Folds of thick brown paper saturated with strong vinegar were applied to my back, and hot irons passed frequently over them. My limbs were rubbed with spirits of camphor. These active operations were unremittingly continued until 10 o'clock. I then took breakfast, called for my horse and buggy, although rain was falling, and regardless of place and remonstrances, rode to the church and conducted the services. That was my last service for a very long time. Dr. Robinson, Sr., insisted on examing my throat; forbade my preaching again without his permission, and urged the session to grant to me six month's leave of absence. I was laid aside from the work of the Ministry for three and a half years, thus "paying dearly for the whistle."

The second pastor, Rev. Andrew Flinn, was afterward pastor of the church in which I was brought up in Charleston, with which I united in 1831, and in which I was licensed in 1857. When I was just six years old, he took me by the hand and conducted me to the first male teacher, under whom I was placed and under whose training I continued to be for seven years, not dreaming that the little boy whom he held by the hand, was destined to be one of his successors in the pastorate at Fayetteville.

The first pastor, Rev. John Robinson, I met under trying circumstances at Synod, Lincolnton, in 1839. Father Penick, of Rocky River, Cabarrus county, was Moderator, and sent Brother Watts to me to say that "he wished me to preach the action sermon on the Lord's Day." I remonstrated on the score that I was the youngest man in Synod, and that I could not think of standing up on such an occasion before that venerable body. "You might as well make up your mind to do it," said Brother Watts, "Father Penick will take no denial." It so turned out. Dr. Robinson was requested to sit by me in the pulpit and conduct the sacramental services. A more striking contrast is seldom seen in the pulpit. I was fully six feet in height, but Dr. Robinson was at least six feet six. I was slender, Dr. Robinson was broad shouldered and brawny. I had a boyish face, passing for twenty even when thirty-two. Dr. Robinson wore the sombre aspect of age, and was adorned with that "crown of righteousness, the hoary head." I felt exceedingly small in such a presence. Although I could not say, as Croly, in the tragedy of Cataline makes his hero say: "Talking is not my trade," yet, feeling as my old friend, Rev. John Douglas, when he said to me. "I always like to have some backing," I made use of a written sermon at that time.

Of the sixth pastor, Rev. W. D. Snodgrass, whom I never saw, I have pleasant reminiscences. While he was psstor of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Mr. Bedell was Rector of the Episcopal Church, in Fayetteville. They were on intimate terms, having been collegians together. The spirit of Bishop Meade, who was a very low churchman, pervaded the churches of Virginia and North Carolina, at that time. A fraternal feeling subsisted between the churches in Fayetteville, as well as between their Ministers. At the second service on each Lord's Day, the houses of worship were closed aternately. On our Lord's Day, the Presbyterians with their pastor would attend the services at the Episcopal church. On the next, the Episcopalians with their rector would attend the services at the Episcopal church. But, more than this. "A Brotherly Society" was organized, to meet weekly for prayer and religious conversation. The two aforementioned ministers, with numbers of members of their respective charges constituted that "Society." They had a Recording Secretary whose duty it was to keep an accurate account of their proceedings. Soon after I went to Fayetteville, dear, Brother Miller, one of the session of our church showed me the book of records and granted to me the privilege of reading it. Would, that a like fraternal spirit existed to-day. But, alas! the silly contention for Apostolical Succession has stilled the voice of brotherly love.

Perhaps, this much will suffice for the present.

THE SECRET OF GOOD GOVERNMENT AT THE UNIVERSITY.

The special committee appointed by Gov. Carr to investigate the condition and government of the University made their report at the recent Commencement. The committee was composed of Rev. J. L. Stewart, of Clinton, chairman, D. G. Worth, Esq, of Wilmington Lieut. Gov. R. A. Daughton, Judge W. T. Faircloth and R. T. Gray, Esq., of Raleigh. They say:

"After careful enquiry and investigation the committee confidently believe that at no period in the history of the University has the general deportment of the students been better or their habits of study more commendable. In this connection it gives the committee great pleasure to say that drunkenness has almost entirely disappeared. They were assured by a number of persons of extensive observation that they had not seen a case of it for years. It seems to the committee that these good results come chiefly from three causes:

1. The Character of the University Government.

2. The influence, direct or indirect of inter-collegiate games.

3. The influence of the Young Men's Christian Association.

The government of the University seeks to influence the student to govern himself by appealing to his sense of right and to his ambition for a fair name, discarding espionage in all its phases. Such influences must tend to the development of a high type of character; and, in the judgment of the committee, have resulted in the good order now prevalent.

In regard to the effect of the inter-collegiate games upon the habits of study and order, some of the committee had entertained grave doubts as to whether such effect was wholesome. Perhaps this view extensively prevails in the State. Upon mature reflection and an investigation as extensive as could under the circumstances be given to the matter, the committee, now fully endorse "wisdom of the introduction and encouragement of these exercises."

In regard to the financial management the committee say: "The books of the Bursar have been faithfully and accurately kept. No evidence of extravagance or mismanagement appears."—News and Observer.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D C., June 13th, 1894.

The bill providing for the opening on Sunday of several of the Government buildings in this city was discussed at the summer stated meeting of the Presbytery of Washington City, held this week, and resolution unanimously adopted disapproving of any legislation having for its object the opening of public buildings on the Sabbath. It was proposed that every minister in the Presbytery should preach a special sermon against this bill, but it was decided that the bill had not developed support enough to make that necessary. It is probable also that the powerful sermon preached against the bill last Sunday by Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland was considered by his brother ministers to be all that was needed on the subject at present. The Presbytery also adopted a resolution approving the action of the last General Assembly opposing the appropriation of public funds for the support of sectarian or denominational schools. It must not be understood that the other Washington ministers are in favor of Sunday opening. On the contrary; it is doubtful if three Protestant ministers could be found in the entire District of Columbia willing to endorse the Sunday opening of Government buildings, although several Catholic priest have done so. If there was the slightest indication that the bill in question was in danger of becoming a law the ministers would quickly begin an organized fight against it. The adoption of the resolution by the Presbytery was more in the nature of a declaration of principle, than a fight against this particular bill, and the only reason there have been no similar resolutions adopted is that there has been no other meeting of ministers since the bill was introduced.

Should a man who engages in the sale of intoxicating liquors, either at wholesale or retail, be allowed to retain his membership in Church? It would seem that there should be but one answer to this question from church members, but strange as it may appear, there are several churches in Washington in which there is a radical difference of opinion among members as to what answer should be. It seems that nearly all of the Protestant churches have rules against liquor-selling by members, and yet, if my information be correct, and it ought to be as it comes direct from members of the churches concerned, there are disagreements amounting almost to open factions in several of our churches because their ministers insist that those rules shall be adhered to and that certain members be compelled to choose between the profits of their liquor business and their church membership, and there are said to be other churches in which all attemps to raise the question are hushed up because of the big contributions made by men who derive profit from the liquor traffic. Indeed, there was public meeting of all of the ministers of one of the most numerous denominations in Washington, and in the country, held here not many months ago at which this liquor question was dodged instead of being squarely met. How the devil must chuckle—pardon the Ram's Horn-ism—when he sees the churches temporizing with the liquor traffic for what there is in it. But it was just the same a few years ago with the various lottery schemes, now happily shut out of all, or or nearly all, Protestant churches. The church drove the gamblers out and eventually the church will drive the rum-sellers out. No man can be a gambler and a Christian, nor can any man be a rum seller and a Christian.

To Some Ministers and Elders of Concord Presbytery.

Dear Brethren:—Our treasurer is sending to you notices of the delinquencies of your churches on Presbyterial Home Missions. Do please urge upon your people the importance of raising the whole of their apportionments as they are our only dependence for meeting the quarterly appropriations that will be due the last of this month. The August collections will all be needed for the next two quarters. Brethren, whose salaries, when fully paid, do not amount to more than $600 are always embarrassed when these quarterly appointments are not promptly paid.

Scotland Neck Democrat: The first corn that has been shipped to this place perhaps since 1891, was a car-load from Louisville, to M. Hoffman & Bro., last week. With such fine corn lands as are found in our back country the corn ought to be raised here.

Charlotte News: Last Tuesday afternoon D. Gus Dorton, of Flows, Cabarrus county, was squirrel hunting in the woods. He ran a squirrel into a hole in the fork of a large Spanish oak and climbed up to stop the hole, intending then to cut the tree down. While he had his head through the fork his foot slipped, and there he swung by his neck, his head being caught in the fork. Mr. Dorton remained in his perilous and painful position for about an hour when he was found by Mr. Peter Best and taken down.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

Third Quarter.—Lesson I.

July 1.—The Birth of Jesus.

Luke ii. 1-16. Commit vss. 10–14.

Golden Text. Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. Luke ii. 11.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. The preliminary studies will be best pursued in the form of daily readings:

SUNDAY.* The Lesson.

MONDAY. The Annunciation to Zacharias. Luke i. 5–25.

TUESDAY. The Annunciation to Mary and her visit to Elizabeth. Luke i. 26–56.

WEDNESDAY. The Birth of John. Luke i 57-80.

THURSDAY. The Genealogies. Matt. i. 1-16; Luke iii. 23–38. Mark in Luke the names common to Matthew and read some explanation of the differences.

FRIDAY. The Divine Origin. John i. 1-18.

SATURDAY. Matthew's account. Matt. i 18–25.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson. The circumstances that led to the Birth in Bethlehem, vss. 1-6; the surroundings of the Birth, vs. 7; the shepherds and their vision, vss. 8, 9; the angel's message, vss. 10–12; the heavenly choir and its song, vss 13, 14; their action and discovery, vss. 15,16. Read also vss. 17–20.

Third Step. Study with your helps any points requiring explanation.

Vs. 1. Caesar Augustus. First Emperor of Rome. He was the nephew and adopted son of Julius Caesar, and upon the assassination of the latter. formed with Lepidus and Mark Antony the triumvirate that crushed Brutus and Cassius. Afterwards Lepidus retired and Antony and Octavius (the original name of Augustus) contended for the mastery. The battle of Actium (B. C. 31) decided the issue in favor of Octavius, and the death of Antony (B C. 30) left him undisputed master of the Roman world.

Taxed, rather enrolled. It was a census of the empire such as William the conquror made of England, which is recorded in "Doomsday Book."

Vs. 2. Cyrenius. The Greek form of the Roman name Quirinius. There is a historical difficulty involved here that has never been satisfactorily solved. Quirinius is known to have been proconsul of Syria twice—once from 750–753 A. U. C., and again in 757. Neither of these periods corresponds with the probable time of the birth of Christ. But he is known to have gone east as early as 749 and may have been in charge of the census, which is all that is necessarily implied in the original. At any rate Luke's historical accuracy has been so often vindicated when it has been called in question that we need not hesitate to accept his statement here.

Vs. 3. Every one to his own city. This was not the Roman method but the Jewish. It was the policy of the Romans to follow native customs as far as possible.

Vs. 4. The City of David, i. e. The city of his birth and of his family inheritance. See Ruth i. 1, 20; ii. 1; iv. 11, 18–22; 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 13. In David's life-time the citadel of Zion that he took from the Jebusites was called the City of David. 2 Sam. v. 7.

Lineage of David. See Genealogy in Matt. i. This probably gives not the natural descent, but the succession of kings, or rightful heirs to the throne. This would necessarily come to Jesus through Joseph his legal father. The genealogy in Luke iii, is his natural descent from father to son. It is strange that neither gives the descent of Mary, our Lord's only human parent, but this was in accord with Jewish custom, and from her going up with Joseph it is probable that she was of the same family. Some even infer that Mary and not Joseph was the heiress to the lost throne, and that Matt. i. 16 is an oriental way of saying "Jacob was succeeded by Joseph as husband to his (Jacob's) daughter Mary of whom was born Jesus."

Vs. 6. The days were accomplished. It was no surprise to them, that she was thus taken when away from home, but the Roman decree was inexorable.

Vs. 7. First born. Luke writing long afterwards would not have used this expression had Mary not had other children. The perpetual virginity of Mary is only a figment of the Roman Church, with not a shadow of foundation in history. The "Lord's brethren" were her sons.

Manger ..... inn. The manger was the stone trough in which cattle were fed. The inn was an eastern "khan" or caravansary, which has a number of rooms opening on a large courtyard, in which strangers lodge, buying their own food. When these are full, as in this case, they must camp in the open court, or take refuge among the sheds for the cattle. There is nothing to indicate that they were too poor to get lodgings. Afterwards when the wise men came from the East they found them in a "house."

Vs. 8. The same country, i. e., the country around Bethlehem.

Shepherds. It ought not to be necessary to say, but the mistake is made so constantly in hymns, pictures and narratives, that these shepherds were not the "wise men," and saw no "star." The shepherds were Jews and were spoken to by an angel and came that night and found Jesus in the manger. The "wise men" were Gentiles from the far east, and followed a star to Jerusalem where they found out from prophecy where Jesus was to be born. Their visit was after the presentation in the Temple, and they found them in a "house." Fortunately our studies this year are not confined to one Gospel and take in both events.

Vs. 9. And lo! Up to this point everything has been so natural and apparently commonplace, that we have been in danger of forgetting the great significance of the central fact—of forgetting that this child is not only a King, but the King of kings, and that even the decrees of the great Augustus must work out the plans for His birth that have been declared by prophets long ago. The exclamation "And lo!" prepares us for the heavenly side of the narrative about to be unfolded. No comments on the following verses can bring out more plainly than the simple narrative itself, Heaven's interest in this event, and its immense significance to the earth.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the narrative and compare it with ours:

SUMMARY. In accordance with a decree of Augustus that a census should be taken of his empire—which in Syria was executed under the superintendence of Quirinius—Joseph and Mary, who was with child, went up to their ancestral city Bethlehem according to the method of the census. There Mary brought forth her first-born Son, and having swaddled him laid him in a manyer, as the crowded condition of the khan prevented their finding better accommodation than that afforded by the cattle sheds. That night the shepherds keeping their flocks on the neighboring plains were startled by the appearance of an angel who announced to them the birth of the Saviour, and directed them where to find him. The glad tidings were taken up by a great multitude of angels singing glory to God and proclaiming a reign of peace among men. The shepherds went and found as it had been told them.

Fifth Step. Study the topics suggested in the light of God's word.

1. The Incarnation foretold.
   A Divine Child to be born. Is. ix. 6.
   Of the house of David. Is. ix. 7. compare xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6.
   Born of Virgin. Is. vii. 14.
   In Bethlehem. Mic. v. 2, 3.
   The Announcement. Luke i. 31–35.
2. Doctrine of the Incarnation.
   Christ was eternal God, John i 1, 2. Compare vss. 14, 17, 18, identifying the "Word" with Jesus Christ. See also John viii. 58; 1 Tim. iii. 16.
   Christ was a perfect man. Luke ii. 52; Heb. ii- 16–18.
   Thus He was a perfect revelation of God. John xiv. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 4, 6; Heb. i. 3.
   And the perfect model of man. John xiii. 15; 1 John ii. 6
   And the perfect mediator between God and man. 1 Tim. ii 5; Heb. iv. 14–16.

Sixth Step. Meditate upon and lay to heart the practical teachings of the lesson. God's great love to the world, John iii. 16; the duty and privilege of receiving Christ—no room for Him in the inn, typical of the world's reception of Him, John i. 11, 12; the fruit and mission of the Gospel, Luke ii. 14. Therefore, Let us go, by faith, even unto Bethlehem.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Give a brief statement of the historical situation when Christ came; then draw out the story of the lesson, and make it as graphic as possible in the minds of the scholars, by adding significant touches to their statements. Take up the Bible reading on the prophecies of the Incarnation, and then on the Doctrine of the Incarnation. Clinch all by Shorter Catechism, Qu. 20, 21, 22.

*When the readings are used in the morning, take each one a day later.

Prize Questions.

Answers to Questions of May 31, (delayed) was received from Mary Knox Johnson, 67, 68a, 69.

NEW QUESTIONS.

☞The following rule must in future be observed. If we ask a question such as No. 58, "What other daughter of a Pharaoh is mentioned in the Bible?" it is not sufficient to answer "1 King's iii. 1." You must answer, "Solomon's wife. 1 Kings iii. 1." But if we ask a question like No. 59, "Where have we a description of the King's Daughter? the correct answer is simply, "Ps. xlv. 9–15." In other words, where we ask for a reference, only give a reference, but when we ask for a statement, it is not enough to give the reference and leave us to infer the statement. You must give your own statement, and then add the reference as your authority for the statement. Those giving a correct reference without the statement will only be allowed half value.

71. What three well-known women of the O. T. are associated with Bethlehem?
72. At what great event before the birth of Jesus did the angels sing?
73. What event on earth brings joy to the angels now?

On the afternoon of June 10th, 1894, in Greensboro, N. C., in the 50th year of her age, Mrs. R. C. BROOKS. She was a consistent member of the Westminster Presbyterian church. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. LOIS. A. CRABTREE,

Born Feb. 26th, 1821, died June 1st, 1894.

This most estimable and now sainted "elect lady" was born in Hyde county. In her youth she removed to the town of Washington, county seat of the adjoining county, where most of her long life was spent. She was favored in becoming a member of the household of Joseph Potts whose fame was so long in the Church and the memory of whose sweet saintliness abides like a benediction in the congregation in which he was a bishop for more than fifty years.

In the dew of her youth she dedicated herself to Christ, uniting with the church in Washington, at sixteen years of age. during the ministry of the Rev. Munroe Allen in the year 1837. Of this church she remained a loyal, loving member for fifty-seven years.

In 1844, she was married to Capt. S. D. Crabtree; of this marriage there are three surviving children Albert, Eleanor, (Mrs. L. H. Castex, of Goldsboro) and George. Mrs. C. was comparatively early left a widow with these three children, the oldest but a lad and the other two very young; with the diligent and efficient aid of her oldest child she was able to rear the little household until they were able in turn to take care of her; these children have treated her with a beautiful filial reverence, ministering to her, faithfully and lovingly. She made her home with her oldest son Albert until the breaking up of his household by the death of his devoted, lovely wife in August, 1888, at which time she removed to Goldsboro, N. C., to live with her daughter; on the journey she met with an accident from which she never recovered and which filled her last years with pain and trial. It is the testimony of those who were privileged to wait on her closing years that this period of severe trial was borne with Christian patience and uncomplaining submission to her Father's will. In her last days the Gospel Hymn, "Is my name written there?" was much on her lips—the sentiment had been for many years in her heart and life—it was her chief concern for herself and her loved ones—there are few people in this world who could more honestly and heartily sing:

"Lord I care not for riches,
Neither silver, nor gold;
I would make sure of heaven,
I would enter the fold."

This was her constant prayer for her children and possibly her only care and concern; undoubtedly it was the one supreme, dominating desire of her heart. May a gracious God crown her heaven with its fulfilment!

Hers was a simple life with nothing of note; she loved her God, she loved her Saviour, she loved His Church; "she served her generation by the will of God," quietly, unobtrusively, humbly, faithfully for more than half a century; and she has gone home to the God who loves such service here and rewards it abundantly there.

On June 6th, 1894, near Red Springs, Rebeson county, N. C., at the home of her parents, Henry and Susan Johnson, Miss ANNA ELIZABETH, in her 43rd year. From early childhood she had been a great sufferer, and loved ones have the blessed assurance that she has gone where "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

On May 15th, 1894, Mr. JAMES W. REID, in the 78th year of his age. The deceased was a ruling elder in New Hope church for forty years. It was my pleasure to serve this church in the pastoral relation, fifteen years (my first pastoral charge), and I now want through the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN to testify to his faithfulness, efficiency and exemplary conduct as an elder in God's house. He was so punctual in his attendance upon the public means of grace and sessional meetings that when absent (which was seldom) the people would say that "Mr. Reid must be sick." The Presbytery often commended him for the neatness and accuracy of the sessional records of that church, he being clerk of session. It was a matter of great joy to him when persons would apply for church membership. And he almost invariably would take part in examining such persons on their religious experience. He would also give them wise and beautiful council upon their reception. He was very judicious in the exercise of discipline. He was noted for his Christian liberality to benevolent objects and pastor's salary. The last conversation he had with me on this subject, he said "that if he had his life to live over he would give more liberally to the Lord's cause." In the last few months of his life, he was severely afflicted personally and in his family, but he endured all those afflictions with Christian patience and submission. His faith was strong and unwavering, he, died as he lived trusting in Jesus. He leaves an invalid wife, one son, and one daughter, Mrs. Dr. Robinson, to mourn his death and absence.

DAILY WORK.

In the name of God advancing,
Sow thy seed at morning light;
Cheerily the furrows turning,
Labor on with all thy might.

Look not to the far-off future,
Do the work which nearest lies;
Sow thou must before thou reapest,
Rest at last in labor's prize.

And the Master shall come smiling
At the setting of the sun,
Saying as He pays thy wages,
Good and faithful one, "well done."

The memorial tablet to Jenny Lind in Westminister Abbey, London, was unveiled recently by Princess Christian in the presence of a select gathering of old friends and admirers of the great singer. A small niche in the "arcading" of the south transept, by Poets' corner, just beneath Rotbiliac's well-known monument of Handel, was the spot appropriately chosen by Dean Bradley for the exquisitely chiseled medallion which formed Birch's last completed work. It could not have been better placed, nor could a more illustrious songstress have been named for the honor of being the first musical artist, other than a composer, whose lineaments have been exposed upon the walls of our ancient fane. Jenny Lind was not only distinguished in her art, but was a noble-hearted and charitable woman. The compliment thus bestowed is consequently gratifying in every sense. On the medallion are the words: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and they are also inscribed above upon the marble dedicated to the immortal composer himself. It was but fitting, therefore, that the unveiling ceremonial should be accompanied by the sounds of that sublime air.

A Syrian Wedding Ceremony—Madam Layyah Barakat, a native of Beyrout, near the mountains of Lebanon, Syria, gives a reproduction of a wedding in her own country this afternoon at a lawn fete at Walbrook. Madam Barakat is assisted in this ceremony by sixteen young ladies and gentlemen of Fayette street Y. W. C. T. U. She has the wedding costumes of the Holy Land, and a tent under which the ceremony is performed enhances the effect. She fled to this country some years ago to escape the massacre of the Christians in Egypt, where she was living at the time, and arrived in Philadelphia with her husband and a young child in her arms, without money and speaking just two words of English—the name of the pastor of a church in Philadelpha, the children of which educated her in Syria, and "chestnuts," suggestive of the street in which they lived. She has been of great assistance in the work of the Foreign Missions and temperance work. She comes to Baltimore at this time under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

An Ornament for Chicago.—Mrs. Henry Field, of Chicago, has given a pair of magnificent bronze lions to ornament the front of the Fine Arts Insitute, of that city, and that, in addition to her late husband's splendid $300,000 collection of modern French paintings. The lions have just been cast after models by the artist Edward Kemeys, who modeled the wild animals on the pedestals at the Exposition and they are said to be remarkably fine. They are conceived as guarding the building. The one at the south side of the main entrance is represented as having his attention attracted by something in the distance which he is closely watching. The other one is represented as having discovered something which displeases him, and he has his back up, and is ready for a roar and a spring. They cost $18,000.

Things Useful.

Lime Juice Better than Vinegar.—This vegetable acid should be placed on the dinner table instead of the vinegar bottle, as regularly as salt, while as an ingredient for sauce, for almost every kind of food, it has no eqnal. As a salad dressing, to mix with oil, it is more wholesome than vinegar.

Creole Rice Bread.—Two cups of white Indian meal, one cup of boiled rice, three eggs, one ounce of melted butter, one and a quarter pints of milk, one teaspoonful of salt, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder; beat the eggs, without separating, until very light, then add them to the milk, then add the meal, salt, butter and rice; beat thoroughly, add the baking powder, and mix well. Grease three round shallow pans, turn in the mixture, put quickly in the hot oven, and bake for thirty minutes. Serve hot.

An Infallible Cough Remedy.—To 10 cents of pure honey, add one teaspoonful of hartshorn (not ammonia) and the juice of two lemons. Drink a wine glassful three times a day, and take also a small sip, whenever the tickling sensation in throat begins.

Jellied strawberries are made by melting two ounces of gelatine in a little cold water; squeeze the juice from a quart of currants, and add the gelatine and sweeten; stem a pint and a half of ripe strawberries, mix in the currant juice, turn into a mold set on ice to harden, and serve with cream.

Blackberry Cake.—One cup of sugar, three-quarters of a cup of butter, three tablespoonfuls of sour cream, one tablespoonful of soda, three eggs, one and two-quarters cups flour, one cup blackberry; bake in three layers and put icing between; put the soda in the cream and stir well; put it in the cake, just before the berries, which should be the last thing put in.

A PALE FACE comes from poor blood. Your blood needs to be enriched and vitalized. For this there's nothing in the world so thoroughly effective as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Children who are weak, thin, pale, and puny are made strong, plump, rosy, and robust by the "Discovery." It's especially adapted to them, too, from its pleasant taste. It's an appetizing, restorative tonic which builds up needed flesh and strength.

In every blood-taint or disorder, if it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I will say that I used the "Medical Discovery" for my little girl, and she is entirely well. I cannot praise your medicines too highly. You may rest assured that you will always have my support.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal

Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"I DON'T CARE."

Girls and boys, I wish to tell you
Of a foe you entertain;
I have seen you with him often,
And the fact has caused me pain.
For he only seeks the ruin
Of your lives so young and fair—
He's a foe, cool, sly and cunning,
And his name is "I don't care."

Have you ever thought, dear children,
"That "I don't care" is a thief,
Taking from you time and order,
Candor, friends and all save grief?
Don't you notice the bold falsehoods
That he daily tells to you,
And that makes you say "I don't care,"
When at heart you really do?

He at first will only cause you
To forget yourself, and dare
To answer parents, friends and strangers
With the rude words, "I don't care."
But be warned! He'll plant within you
The true spirit of his name;
Then he'll disappear like magic,
Leaving you to bear the shame.

Break the habit, children, break it;
Do not use the common phrase;
Smaller things than this have started
Many a life in reckless ways.
Guard your words, your thoughts, your actions;
To yourselves be true, and dare
Not let the good of life slip by you
With a reckless "I don't care."

The Wonderful Fly.

One rainy day when Tommy was looking out of the window he saw a fly buzzing against the pane.

"I'll catch that fly," said he; and his fat little fingers went pattering over the glass, until at last he chased the fly down into a corner and caught it.

"Let me go!" said the fly.

"I won't!" answered Tommy.

"Do let me go! You hurt me; you pinch my legs and break my wings."

"I don't care if I do. You're only a fly—a fly's not worth anything."

"Yes, I am worth something, and I can do some wonderful things. I can do something you can't do."

"I don't believe it," said Tommy. "What can you do?"

"I can walk up the wall."

"Let me see you do it;" and Tommy's fingers opened so that the fly could get off.

The fly flew across the room, and walked up the wall and then down again.

"My!" said Tommy. "What else can you do?"

"I can walk across the ceiling," said the fly; and he did so.

"My!" said Tommy again. "How do you do that?"

"I have little suckers on my feet that help me to hold on. I can walk anywhere, and fly too. I am smarter than boy," said the fly.

"Well, you're not good for anything, and boys are," answered Tommy, stoutly.

"Indeed, I am good for something. I helped to save you from getting sick when the days were hot. Flies eat up the poison in the air, and if we flies had not been around in the summer to keep the air pure, you and baby would all have beeen very sick,"

"Is that true?" asked Tommy in great surprise.

"Yes, it is true; and now I will tell you something else. You are a bad, bad boy."

"I am not," cried Tommy, growing very red in the face. "I don't steal, or say bad words, or tell what is not true."

"Well, you are a bad boy anyhow. It is bad to hurt flies. It is bad to pull off their legs and wings. It is bad to hurt anything that lives. Flies can feel, and it is bad to hurt them. Yesterday you pulled off my brother's wings."

"I never thought of that," answered Tommy, soberly. "I won't do it again. I'll never hurt a fly as long as I live, and be sure that I'll never hurt you."

"You won't get a chance," answered the fly, as he walked across the ceiling.

Daisy's Hat.

BY CATHARINE S. ALBERS.

"Oh, mamma!" cried Daisy, "just look here! I can't go to school any more without a new hat."

"What my dear, what has happened now?"

"My hat blew off, and a dog got it and chewed it all up before I could catch him."

"I am sorry, but I don't know what to do, for I haven't the money to get you another. Willie needs shoes, and we have but one loaf of bread in the house, and no butter to put on it; I am afraid you will have to stay home for awhile."

"Well, of course, we have to have things to eat, and Willie must have his shoes," Daisy said more pleasantly, and seeing her mother's tired look, said: "Let me run those seams up on the machine; I know your back is tired."

"Well, you may, dear, and I will whip this bit of lace on while the daylight lasts; the kerosene is gone, and we will have to make the best of the day."

The next day, as Daisy could not go to school, she helped her mother finish a dress for a lady who lived in one of the handsome houses in the city. She helped Willie with his lessons, straightened the house and saved her mother's steps in various ways. By three o'clock the dress was finished, and her mother said:

"Daisy, if you will take this dress to Mrs. Newton you will have done enough for one day. You are great help and comfort to me. I thank God every day of my life for giving me such a helpful daughter."

Daisy's mother tied a silk handkerchief over her daughter's head, as she had no hat; and as she did so said:

"You need not hurry, dear, but take your time, for this is such a lovely spring day."

It was two miles to the city, and Daisy walked rapidly. When she reached the elegant house, Mr. Newton (who had sprained his ankle, and so was at home) told her that Mrs. Newton had gone down town, but he thought she would be home soon. While he read his paper Daisy looked and wondered at the rows and rows of books around the room. She had never been in such a beautiful room, and did not know what a library was. Presently Mrs. Newton came in.

"I have brought you some strawberries," she said to her husband, "but they are not wild ones; the marketman said it is a little early for them."

Then, turning to Daisy, she said:

"Since Mr. Newton has been sick he fancies that he wants some wild strawberries; he used to enjoy gathering them so much when he was a boy."

"I just did!" responded that gentleman, "and I would give a dollar for a quart now."

"Oh, no, you wouldn't" said his wife, laughing.

"Well," he said, "I would give fifty cents anyway.

Mrs. Newton looked at the dress Daisy had brought, and said it was all right. After receiving the money for it, Daisy left.

"Now," she said to herself, "I know how I can earn money to get me a hat; I know where the wild strawberries are."

She picked leaves off the trees as she went along and made a pretty basket. She found the berries ripe, so she filled her basket. On her way back she picked some pretty pink "May blossoms" and covered the berries. Mr. Newton was delighted, and not only paid her the dollar, but made arrangements with her to bring him two quarts at twenty-five cents each three times a week as long as the berries lasted.—Herald and Presbyter.

Ted and the Gardner.

"I s'pose," said Ted, sitting down easily on the wheelbarrow, and resting his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands, "I s'pose you see a good many nice things out doors first and last."

The gardner was mending his hoe, which had a fashion of losing its head when it hit a hard weed.

"Yes, I s'pose I do," he answered. "I never get tired of watching honey bees for one thing, they're the knowingest lot of critters you ever see—like folks considerable."

"O, tell me about them," said Ted, who was always hungry for stories. "I've never been very near ours, 'cause mamma's afraid I'll get stung."

"Wal, you might, till you git acquainted with 'em like. I was a-noticing of 'em not long since with a strange bee. They pestered it to get its honey; you see they didn't want to kill it, 'cause then they couldn't get it, but they hectored it till it dropped its load out of its pockets and flew off."

"Pockets! what kind? like mine?" said Ted, putting his hands in them.

"No, not quite; but hairy places on their sides. The hairs hold the honeycomb in, you see."

"O, yes, but do go on please," said Ted.

"Wal, they git a load, and put it into their pockets, first one side then the other, till they're full. It's funny to see them run up a stalk of timothy and get dusty all over from it. They dust themselves off with their feet and pat the dust into their pockets. When they are loaded they take a bee line for home."

"O, what is that?" asked Ted.

"Straight as they can go. If you move the hive a little ways, they'll bump up ag'in it and then fly off and try it again, till they hit the opening.

"O, go on," said Ted, who was afraid the hoe would be finished before the bee story.

"They air out the hive hot days by gittin' round the open places and then fluttering their wings like all possessed. I put a piece of paper in the top of the hive one day, and it blew, 'round as if it was in a little whirlwind."

"O, isn't that funny though," said Ted—he meant queer. "I mean to get acquainted with 'em myself I do think outdoors is a great deal more interesting than school," he added with a sigh.

"Wal, you see folks that can't go to school have to use their eyes; but it's nice when you can do both."

"Yes, I s'pose so," said Ted, doubtfully.

Say Soes.

There is a wise proverb which says that "it takes a good many shovelfuls of earth to cover the truth.

It takes a servant girl about two hours longer to clean the front windows of a house than it does the back ones.

The most rational modes of keeping physical decay or deterioration at bay, and thus retarding the approach of old age, are avoiding all rich foods and using much fruit, especially apples.

When Ponce-de-Leon sought to find
The fountain giving back lost youth,
It may be that he had in mind
That draught which seems to make a truth
Out of the fable ages old,
For drinking it the old grow young:
It is, indeed, a draught of gold,
Surpassing all by poets sung.

The druggist meant is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, of course. It is a most potent rejuvenator of the weakened and debilitated system. It drives out all poison, all impurity, enriches the blood, and makes the old and worn out feel young and vigorous. Ponce-de-Leon didn't discover it, but Dr. Pierce did, and he rightly named it when he called it a "Golden Discovery."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure permanently constipation, indigestion and headaches. All dealers.

There is a plant in Jamaica called the life plant, because it is almost impossible to kill it or any portion of it. When a leaf is cut off and hung up by a string it sends out white thread-like roots, gathers moisture from the the air and begins to grow new leaves. Even when pressed and packed away in a botanist's herbarium it has been known to outgrow the leaves of the book in which it was placed. The only way to kill it is by the use of a hot iron or of boiling water.

If any one has testified to what drink does in the way of providing necessaries and comforts and happiness to those who indulge in it, we have never seen the evidence.

DARKNESS AND NO LIGHT.

We are often asked. Does the true Christian have doubts, difficulties and spiritual distress? Is the life of the Christian an unclouded day? Is it the privilege of the Christian to be always rejoicing? Is it the duty of the Christian to live without any misgivings of acceptance and assurance of salvation? The words of the prophet ISAIAH, fiftieth chapter and tenth verse give us an answer—"Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the LORD and stay upon His GOD."

There can be no mistake about the persons referred to. It is not spoken of reprobates or even of backsliders, but of the trembling and careful children of GOD. They are described in unmistakable terms. Those that fear the LORD, they are designated. This might be said of those who have a dread of GOD'S power and wrath and stand in awe of His majesty and His might. It might describe any who merely dread His displeasure. But it means rather filial fear, the anxiety and carefulness of the child not to displease or disobey the loving and gracious FATHER, as may at once appear in the next clause, "That obeys the voice of His servant." Obedience is not only the proof of loyalty and the test of devotion in the Old Testament but the evidence of discipleship in the new, the mark by which the world is to know the children of GOD. The servant is primarily the prophet speaking in the name of the LORD. It is also every inspired or authoritative teacher of GOD'S will specially our LORD JESUS CHRIST, who as the Servant of the LORD is our MASTER in all things. This fear and obedience are Old Testament phrases equivalent to the New Testament teaching of the apostle, "Repentance towards GOD and faith towards our LORD JESUS CHRIST," as the sum of practical divinity.

The experience of such is set forth as not only possible but real to very many, and to all at some time. They may walk in darkness and have no light. This is not the constant and should not be the normal life experience of GOD'S children. We should rather seek to have the assurance of faith by the sure work of the LORD. Nevertheless such, may have spiritual darkness. It may come from natural temperament. We are born of different dispositions. One has a joyful tendency, another can with difficulty suppress sadness. One is irascible, another patient. One is quick of movement and of decision, another phlegmatic. Not allowing this we are in danger of doing great injustice to earnest and tried souls. We see what is hastily done, or rashly spoken, or sadly mourned. We do not see what is sustained and repressed, or what effort is made to be composed, and calm, and what desire there is and prayer to be joyful. The struggle and frequent despondency at failure do not appear. It may come from disease or an unwelcome East wind. The best of friends with good intentions by too rich food or unsuited to the digestion may send the dyspeptic to his closet, lamenting his low state of piety and his cheerless religion when he has to contend with physical conditions, the healthful cannot understand. Ordinarily a sound body is a promoter of religious joy in the soul, strong in the LORD. Here is a reason for the despondency of a Cowper, a comfort when our friends are morose, or a light on hypocritical death bed scenes. Some may even, in unbalanced reason, and unhinged faith, take their own life. Let us pause and pray. This darkness may come by reason of severe affliction. A good man, seeing his child suffer, may not be able to see GOD'S hand, and may almost suffer an eclipse of faith. It may not be the same for all. What darkens one horizon may not hide the scene from another. It may be from accumulation of sorrow. Sickness may open the door for neglect of friends and the harm of enemies. It may be followed by business troubles and the death of loved ones. What one of us can pass through this and walk always in the light of unclouded day? It may come through temptations and spiritual conflicts. SATAN assails at weak points, and the temptation may prevail. There may be conflicts in domestic affairs and public responsibilities. If we are not overcome we will waver and feeling unsteady may at least wonder if we are safe and question our confidence. It may come to some in the dread of future possibilities by the discouragements of present hindrances and failures. What man has not had soul-sickness and spiritual shadows from the business and hardships of the times? It may arise from mental difficulties and intellectual doubts in dealing with even sacred subjects. It may be that weak faith and faint hope have come from want of entire consecration or from some sin unconfessed. Be the source what it may, there is the possibility. The latter part of the verse which awaits a further writing may be taken for present and felt need and, as fully received, a solemn and sufficient refuge, when we walk in darkness and have no light.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT CARNOT.

The news that comes this, Tuesday morning, as we seat ourselves for converse with our readers is certainly of the most startling character. On Sunday night last at 9.25 o'clock as MARIE FRANCOIS SADI-CARNOT, President of France, was on his way to the theatre at Lyons, he was stabbed by an Italian named CESARE GIOVANNI, and died at 12.45 p. m. He was on a visit to Lyons in connection with the international exhibition, and was to have received an ovation at the theatre on the night of his death.

As the President rode along in his landau receiving the plaudits of the crowd who thronged his way, the assassin mounted the step of his carriage, and just as M. CARNOT holding his hand in one hand was saluting with the other a gleaming knife descended and the president fell back in deathly paleness upon his seat. The prefect of Lyons who was seated beside M. CARNOT, struck the assassin full in the face and prevented a repetition of the blow. The fiend was instantly seized by those of the populace who saw the deed, and would have been instantly killed, but for his rescue by the police. By superhuman efforts and after the securing of mounted guards in reinforcement they succeeded in getting the assassin to prison. He is a beardless young man, and has not been long in the country. His conduct indicated indifference rather than either fear or defiance. While answering other questions freely he positively refused to assign any motive for the deed, saying he would answer only before a tribunal.

The excitement in Lyons as the news spread is indescribable. Every one on the streets was shouting "Death to the assassin" and frantic efforts were made to get him away from the police. At the Grand Theatre, which was overcrowded, the delay was inexplicable until the news was made known. Then the most intense excitement prevailed. Women screamed and many of them fainted. The intended performances came abruptly to an end, of course, and the people poured into the street only to increase the excitement then existing. Attempts were made to sack the Italian consulate and Italian shops and homes were only saved by special patrolling for their protection.

CARNOT, was grandson of the famous CARNOT, who as a member of the Legislative Assembly, voted for the death of LOUIS XVI., and filled so many places of trust and of power in the bloody French revolution and in the days of NAPOLEON. The late President assumed office in 1888, and his first term would have expired in January next. He was thoroughly French and had proved a popular as well as an able leader. His private life was blameless. His popularity would seem to have been specially with the people of the better class. He had made himself unpopular with the socialists by some acts of his administration, and it is supposed the clergy for a like reason for not his especial friends.

The news of the assassination was communicated to the U. S. Senate and the House of Representatives on Monday forenoon in the following note:

"The shocking intelligence has been received that the President of the French Republic met his death yesterday at the hands of an assassin. This terrible event which has overtaken a sister Republic cannot fail to deeply arouse the sympathies of the American nation, while the violent termination of a career promising so much in aid of liberty and in advancing civilization should be mourned as an affliction of mankind.

GROVER CLEVELAND."

In each house resolutions of sorrow and of sympathy with France presented by the respective chairmen of the Committees on Foreign Relations were adopted, and as a further mark of respect the houses adjourned.

The British court will go into mourning a week, as they did in the case of President GARFIELD.

Italy and Germany also sent appropriate telegrams to the French government and to Mme. CARNOT.

We must note the fact that stands out so prominently that all these things occurred on the Sabbath—what we call the Sabbath—for there are no Sabbaths in France. There is no need for moralizing, we pass on to call attention to the singular fact that it is not the despots of the earth who seem to invite the assassin's knife, but those who are regarded as humane and beneficent rulers—or if not so, those who seemed specially to seek popularity by compliance with the moods of the masses. The tyrants of the earth seem to impress with a fear which protects them. They overawe the cowardly fiends and are safe. Russian rulers of the past were tyrants beyond all tyrants yet they lived safely and died in their beds. It was reserved for the good ALEXANDER, who gave his people a liberty they knew not how to use, to die by the assassin's hand, and the present Czar, much-defamed though he be, is a beneficent ruler, as Russian autocrats would count, and yet his every hour is one of peril.

In our own land, LINCOLN and GARFIELD, support our contention as being men humane and kindly in their natures, and CARTER HARRISON as one who went to the very extreme of pandering to the wishes of the mobs, one of whom took his life.

When the coffin containing the remains of M. CARNOT arrived at the Elyssee Palace, in Paris, some men were seriously hurt in lifting it from the hearse. Among those who witnessed the arrival of the remains at the Elyssee was the President's coachman. When he saw the coffin he fell insensible and died without recovering consciousness.

HERE AND THERE.

We clip from the Southern Presbyterian:

THE NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN of last week says editorially, "Our good brother the editor of The Southern Presbyterian who favors organic union says," and then goes on to quote what was written concerning the men in our Church who oppose organic union. The Southwestern Presbyterian also puts down the editor as leaning decidedly towards organic union. While thanking our contemporaries for their expressions, we would say that our position is one which involves wider questions than merely organic union with the Northern Presbyterian Church.

If called on to vote to-day for or against organic union, we would unhesitatingly vote against it, because we do not believe that the two Churches are in a state to warrant it. There are serious questions to be considered, there are real difficulties in the way; but we should like to see the Churches addressing themselves to the task of considering those difficulties, and preparing their hearts and consciences for closer—if not organic—union. If union ever comes, it will come probably along the line of Federation. One huge Assembly in which our Southern Church would always be in a minority, would not commend itself to us. Perhaps a re-grouping of the whole Presbyterian Church into Western, Central, Eastern and Southern Churches, each controlling its own judicial affairs, each managing its own property and its own institutions of learning, but all represented in a triennial General Assembly with the management of Foreign Mission, Home Mission work so far as aid and counsel and contributions were needed, and Publication with a view to lessening expenses, but with no time given to judicial cases, would work out something like substantial union, with that local control so dear to all Presbyterians. We certainly yield to no one in hearty love for our own Church, and full acquiescence in her distinctive principles. But we do not believe that any Church of Christ was called into existence to bear testimony against political deliverances, to plume itself on its orthodoxy in the "Woman question," or on its absolute perfection as compared with other bodies of like faith and order.

WE ARE GLAD TO PUBLISH THE ABOVE. It is clear our statement was too definite. The brother may be in favor of Organic Union in the future, meantime he holds views to which very many opposed to Organic Union probably would not object. Our error was an inference—a very natural and proper inference we think from what he had said. However, we now understand each other. We dislike to object to anything our contemporary has said, but really think the slur contained in the last sentence mars the effect very seriously. We fear our brother was not entirely serene when he penned it.

A WEEK OR TWO AGO WE DISCUSSED the subject of "Cranks" in a running way and illustrated with Dr. PARKHURST. The following which we clip from the N. O. Picayune supports our views as then expressed:

"It is timely to ask who is entitled to most the credit for such a rehabilitation of public virtue and crushing charge upon the rogues who imagined themselves solidly and securely intrenched behind Tammany breastworks, says the Boston Transcript. Who but the lately almost friendless clergyman, Rev. Dr. PARKHURST, who at one time was sneered at and ridiculed as one hardly capable of a sound judgment, threatened with bodily injury, dogged by police spies, and about the most unpopular man in New York city! How things have changed with him in that respect: Now the wealthiest capitalists and most prominent men of New York acknowledge the inestimable service he has rendered the metropolis, and are proud to work with him in almost any capacity. He has well-earned the short trip to Europe upon which he sailed, leaving the cause of municipal purification in excellent hands. If Tammany is defeated at the next election, and the New York police so purged of rottenness as to warrant the term of the "finest," it will be chiefly owing to the indefatigable, courageous and self-denying labors of the Yankee minister of the Gospel, who was so despised when he set out upon his crusade against official iniquity in New York city.

THE CIVIL MARRIAGE BILL IN THE Austrian House of Magnates has been annoying legislators greatly, even threatening to unmake cabinets. The Roman Catholic clergy of course approved the bill and the Emperor seconded them, but the latest news is that it has passed its second and third reading, after the house had adopted an amendment, to which the government agreed, providing that the new law shall not interfere with the religious duties of parties who are civilly married.

JUST WHAT THIS MAY MEAN DOES not at present appear, but possibly it may be intended to prevent release from the obligation in Roman Catholic marriages to raise children in that church. In any event the bill is progress in the right direction and will eventuate in freedom in time.

SAYS THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN: "The best families, the most useful families and the happiest families in every congregation are those in which family worship is regularly maintained, the church paper taken and carefully read and the work of the church often talked about."

A FRIEND KINDLY LOANS US A COPY of the New England Primer, Improved—with the Assembly's Shorter Catechism added. It looks very natural. Rev. JOHN ROGERS, the first martyr of Bloody Mary's reign is there enveloped in flames with the executioner before him and his wife with the "nine small children and one at her breast," as they moved our soul something over fifty years ago.

THERE IS A GOOD DEAL OF WISDOM in the following suggestion of our Washington City correspondent:

Washington newspapers have been as a rule creditably free from sensationalism of the dangerous sort, but one of our dailies this week published a long article, purporting to give the details of an anarchist plot to blow up the Capitol and other public buildings with a new and powerful explosive, which certainly belonged to the dangerous class, whether true or false. If known to be true such information should be given to the authorities, not the general public; if known to be false the publication of such matter is criminal, as it alarms the nervous and timid to an extent that might result in death or insanity. Fortunately in this case the speedy denial of the police authorities prevented anything like a general alarm being aroused.

AND HERE IS SOMETHING FROM THE same source which does not accord with generally received ideas. We are not sure that representatives are "growing better all the time." That might press rather hard on the reputations of those of the olden time; still we believe there are among them very good men, as goodness is usually accounted, and as a whole the Congress is not so bad as usually painted. But hear our correspondent:

The one gratifying feature about the investigation now being conducted by a committee of Senators concerning scandalous charges made against senators in connection with the sugar schedule of the tariff bill is that the testimony so far taken has utterly failed to show that there is either reason or justice in the practice that has grown all too common in the columns of newspapers as well as in private conversation, of assuming that our public men are as a rule knaves ever ready to feather their own nests regardless of public interests. Your correspondent's long residence in Washton and constant familiarity with the careers of public men has convinced him that they are growing better all the time. The standards of public honor and honesty are higher to-day than ever before. Our public men, take them as a whole (of course there are some black sheep), are more religious, more temperate and more refined than ever before, and I rejoice at anything that is calculated to impress those facts upon the country.

HE LEADETH ME!

He leadeth me!
O blessed words that come
Down thro' the dusky corridors of time
And run like silver thro' the hearts of men—
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
O living words that give
Strength to the weary, courage to the faint
Power to resist all evils that assail—
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
O living words! His hand
Is ever stretched to lift me when I fall,
To help me when I doubting, hesitate.
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
At times the way is steep
And weeds in tangled masses trip my feet;
Yet still I struggle onward, for I know
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
Not always do I see
His blessings when he gives them. Yet I feel
His presence near me in the shadowed way
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
With loving hand he guides
Me, when I from the narrow way have strayed,
And gently back to life and love and light
He leadeth me!

He leadeth me!
Yes, back to Paradise,
"Beside still waters and in pastures green"
Into the blessings of the "Promised Land"
He leadeth me!

POPULAR TALKS ON LAW.

The Right of Petitioning.

BY WM. C. SPRAGUE.

The march to Washington of the so-called commonweal armies for the purposse of petitioning Congress for the redress of grievances, calls public attention to this subject as it has not been called since the days before the civil war.

The right of petitioning the sovereign is a right that lies deep bedded in English law, and is recognized, among English speaking peoples, as a fundamental right, by constitutions, by statutes and by courts. Blackstone names it as one of the subordinate rights appertaining to every individual. In England petitions are extant of the date of Edward I., or as far back as the first regular Parliament, 1,265. In the reign of Henry IV., about the year 1400, petitions began to be addressed to the House of Commons in considerable numbers. In 1837, the year of the accession of Victoria, there were presented to Parliament 10,831 petitions, signed by 2,905,905 persons. In 1859, 24,386 petitions, signed by 2,290,579 persons. In 1867, 12,744, petitions, signed by 1,145,216 persons. In 1860 the Commons expelled several members for being Abhorrers (a name given to the Court party in England, the opponents of the Addressers, so called from their address to the king praying for the immediate assembling of the Parliament, which was delayed on account of its being adverse to the Court) and resolved that it is the undoubted right of the subject to petition for the calling of a Parliament, and that to traduce such petitions as tumultuous and seditious is to contribute to the design of altering the Constitution.

In Russia, Blackstone tells us, the Czar Peter established a law that no subject might petition the Throne until he had first petitioned two different Ministers of State. In case he obtained justice from neither, he might then present a third petition to the prince, but upon pain of death if found to be in the wrong; the consequence of which was that no one dared to offer such third petition, and grievances seldom falling under the notice of the sovereign, he had little opportunity to redress them. Continuing, Blackstone says: Care must be taken lest, under the pretense of petitioning, the subject be guilty of any riot and tumult, as happened in the opening of the memorable Parliament in 1640; and to prevent this it is provided by the statute passed in the reign of Charles II. that no petition to the king or to either House of Parliament, for any alteration in Church or State, shall be signed by above twenty persons unless the matter thereof be approved by three justices of the peace or the major part of the grand jury in the country; and in London, by Lord Mayor, aldermen and Common Council; nor shall any petition be presented by more than ten persons at a time. Under these regulations, it is declared by a statute passed in the reign of William and Mary that the subject has the right to petition, and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal. The statute of Charles II. made the punishment for an offense against this act a fine to any amount not exceeding £100, and imprisonment for three months. At the trial of Lord George Gordon the whole court, including Lord Mansfield, upheld this statute, although it was generally contended throughout the country that the article of the bill of rights which declares that it is the right of the subject to petition the king, and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal, had virtually repealed the statute.

The state of disturbance and political excitement in England after the peace of 1815 produced further regulations and restrictions of the right of petitioning. The people in the manufacturing districts having little employment from the general stagnation of trade, devoted themselves with intense ardor to political discussions, and in some places the partisans of reform, assuming that their demands would not be acceded to, were preparing for the alternative of open force. Under these circumstances the Legislature thought fit to forbid all public meetings consisting of more than fifty persons, unless in separate townships or parishes, by the inhabitants thereof, of which six days' previous notice had to be given to a justice of the peace, signed by seven resident householders. The act also provided for the dissolution of any public meeting by proclamation of a chief officer of the peace, and persons refusing to depart were liable to seven years' transportation. Persons attending such meetings with arms, bludgeons, flags, banners, etc., were subject to fine and imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years.

But as the mischief was temporary, the restrictions upon the right of meeting to deliberate upon public measures were limited in their duration and have mostly expired, those enactments which were designed to prevent such meetings from being perverted to objects manifestly dangerous to the peace of the community only continuing in force.

The offense sought to be cured by the statute of Charles II. above referred to, was the offense of tumultuous petitioning, which was carried to an enormous height in the times preceding the "grand rebellion."

PASTORS.

The notice of Dr. Snodgrass brings to mind an anecdote, narrated by Rev. A. W. Leland, D. D., in the presence of the writer, at a dinner, given in honor of his daughter, who had just been married to Rev. Edwin Cater, class-mate of the writer, in the Theological Seminary Columbia, S. C. Dr. W. was a huge "Body of Divinity," and the impersonation of gravity, yet, a streak of humor permeated his massive composition While speaking of a recent visit to his friend, Dr. S., at Albany, N. Y., he said; "A tale, concerning us, is going the rounds, for the authenticity of which I do not vouch; but, there is no reason, why you should not hear it. They say, that, having been invited to occupy the pulpit of Dr. S., on the morning of the Lord's Day when about to announce my text, I turned a little towards Dr. S., a remarkably fleshy man, I said, with measured words and marked emphasis: "If any man think he hath whereof he may boast in the flesh—I more; and, that, in the afternoon of the same day, Dr. S., looking significantly at me, announced, in lugubrious tones, his text: "Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting." Though not a glean of fun shot across the weighty Doctor's visage, the guests at the table illustrated the "buccas scloppis tumidas," of Flaccus.

An anecdote of my immediate predecessor, Rev. J. W. Douglas, may not be amiss, being suggestive. None of the Elders, save my venerable Brother, Salmon, had declined to offer prayer, when called upon at the weekly prayer-meeting. The pastor, being determined, that his Brother S., should "take up his cross," said, as usual, at a prayer-meeting: "Let us pray" and when all present had knelt, he said: "Brother Salmon—lead us in prayer," and then bowed his head. The lady, by whom this incident was made known to me, said that she could not help looking towards Mr. S., and, that she had never seen a more pitiful expression of his face. He was looking appealingly towards the pastor; but, as the pastor could not see his beseeching looks, he was obliged to "lead in prayer." The ice was broken. He never declined again.

THE ELDERS.

A pastor never had a better set of counsellors, than those who composed the Session, when I went to Fayetteville—Anderson, Salmon, McNeill, Potter, Miller, Leete, McDonald. Much has been well and truly said of some of them, in the pamphlet before me. Three of the daughters of Mr. Salmon became wives of Presbyterian ministers. Two of the sons of Mr. McNeill became Presbyterian ministers, and one of his daughters, the wife of a Presbyterian minister. A daughter of Judge Potter also became a Presbyterian minister's wife. The eldest daughter of Mr. Leete (I think) spent forty years, as a missionary in Japan. I found the church alive on the subject of Missions and Education. In 1837, they gave to these objects, respectively, $605, $1,086. Mr. Miller had no children. Like Mr. Salmon, he was very much interested in Sabbath-schools. He denied himself the privilege of worshipping in the church at home, on the morning of the Lord's Day, and went to three different neighborhoods, once a month, where he had organized Sabbath-schools. On the foundations, which he had the privilege of laying, flourishing churches were afterwards built, the monuments of his self-denial and zeal. He had received only a common school training in Scotland; but the Spirit gave him utterance in prayer and exhortation, and made him instrumental in leading souls to Christ. Would, that all of our Elders were more like that plain, unassuming, godly man.

DISCIPLINE.

The history at hand does full justice to the Session of the Church. There was little demand for the exercise of it during my pastorate. But, I cannot refrain from mentioning an incident. The country at large was at that time alive on the subject of temperance. The subject had been much discussed in Fayetteville. The Session were determined to protect the Church. After having been their minister, three months, I determined to make an attack on the enemy in his stronghold, the grogshop, and with that in view, I prepared a sermon on the text: Eph iv: 28. "Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hand, THE THING WHICH IS GOOD, that he may have to give to him that needeth. In order to conceal my chief design, and to prevent the point of my weapon from being blunted, I treated the passage, textually. On the next day, I found out, as I have several times since, that I had been "hitting my head against a post." A very excellent man, a confectioner from Edinburgh, as was the almost universal practice, sixty years ago, kept a barrel of whiskey or tap in his store. The session had remonstrated with him, on the subject, but to no purpose. He was conscientious, and did not think, that he was committing sin in this matter. Assuming, that I had preached under the prompting of the session, and that the sermon had been intended for himself, especially, he wrote to the Session, asking for a letter of dismission from the church. At the meeting of the Session, I was called on for advice; but, respectfully declined offering it to those, who were so much my seniors. Being urged, I said: "Grant the desired letter; appoint a committee of one to deliver it; and make me your committee man." I called on the confectioner at his house and was kindly received. But, as soon as I had said: "I am sorry to say that I have come upon a painful errand," he raised his hand and said: "I am sorry that I wrote that letter to the session Ask them to send it back to me." The way being open, I told him that I had had no knowledge of his business, or of the remonstrances of the Session; that I had simply "preached the Word;" as I was solemnly bound to do. I then reasoned with him and pleaded with him. He yielded to entreaty, and was a devoted friend to me, as long as I was his pastor. To another, similarly engaged, who wished to unite with the church, I said: "We cannot make new terms of communion, but we do not like to have any members of the church engaged in selling whiskey. After a while he rolled the barrel of whiskey into the street; knocked in the head, and caused the liquor to pour in a stream over the pavement, to the surprise of his neighbors. He was afterwards a worthy member of our church. These two cases exerted a decidedly salutary influence in the community. Our church justified the "Watchword," assigned by others to Presbyterians. "Order, Order."

TOLLING OF THE BELL.

Five minutes before the time for the services to commence, 10.30 a. m., the sexton began to toll the bell. During that period, everybody entered the house of God and took his seat. Only strangers to our rule, ever entered later, so that the services were rarely disturbed by late comers. Sed sat.

What Liquor Costs.

Even the man who abhors it is compelled to pay for it.

The average wages earned in this country are about four hundred and fifty dollars a year.

The cost of the liquor traffic is over one hundred dollars a year to each and every family.

That tells the story!

Think of it! This nation wastes every year a sum equal to two per cent of its entire wealth.

The drink bill is over one billion dollars a year and it costs over three hundred million to take care of the crimes caused by it, and the sickness, the insanity, the paupers and the industrial disorders.

Thirteen hundred millions divided among thirteen million families is one hundred dollars for every family.

It hits the sober man as well as the hard drinker.

Don't fool yourself by thinking you don't pay any of that money because you don't drink.

Who pays the taxes? The drunkards don't.

Who loses when business is bad and times are hard? Not the drunkard.

Are you a grocer? How much more would you sell if there were no saloons in the neighborhood?

Are you a butcher? How much more meat would your customers buy if the saloons didn't take their cash?

Are you a shoe-maker? How many more shoes would would be sold if the saloons were shut?

Are you a baker? How many more loaves would you sell if liquor wasn't sold?

Are you a merchant? How much better would your business be if the money spent for liquor were spent hereafter for furniture, for carpets, for clothing, for houses, for flour, for provisions, for coal, for books, for shoes, for hats, etc., etc.

Are you a wage-earner? Then listen to this, for it is the frozen truth. If the saloons were shut up to-morrow, there would be within one month a call for two million workmen more than are employed to-day. The call would come from all lines of industry.

Take a single case. Here's a family spends ten dollars a year on shoes. They don't spend more because the head of the family is trying to support a saloon as well as his home. Shut up the saloon and the family will buy twenty-five dollars worth of shoes every year.

Easy to Do Hard Things.

It is often easier to do a hard thing than an easy one. An easy thing does not call for the gathering up of one's powers, as a hard one does; and the easy thing is let slip, where the hard one would be taken hold of with energy. It is the little things requiring attention day by day at one's office desk, or in one's home work, that are likely to be neglected, while the great demands on one's time are met manfully as they come. A good-hearted servant girl, who showed herself to better advantage than ever in a home where the critical illness of its head demanded work unthought of before, illustrated this truth in her cheerful remark, "I'm never quite contented in a house until something turns up." Many a person does best in an emergency. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much;" but it is not always true that he that is faithful in that which is much is faithful also in that which is least.—Sunday School Times.

It Held On.

Before my window is a beautiful green branch of a tree now in full spring dress. Only a few weeks ago and that same branch was loaded with ice—it seemed as it it must break. I remember one hour in which it seemed as if it could not keep up. I expected to see it give way, but it did not break, and today it is beautiful.

There are many in this sad world who are as my branch was—loaded with ice. It seems as if their sorrows were like hail storms, and how to keep up, how to hold on, seems to be the one vital question. If one such would read about my branch, let me say to you—don't break! Cling for your life to the one truth, that God has not forgotten you. He holds the wind in his fists, and the waves that now seem as if they would swallow you up, in the hollow of his hands. You may look up and say:

"Thou hast a charge no waves can wash away
And let the storm that does Thy work,
Deal with me as it may.

And so, by simple faith in God's goodness and love, you hold on, and when in the future, like the branch near my window, it will be all spring with you—you will remember your sorrows as waters that have passed away.

Hold on! it is not always winter; spring is coming. The birds are yet to sing on the very branch now covered with ice; only don't break! My branch did not have a will of its own, but we have wills, and God can energize them, and we must use our wills and say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." He never slays but to make alive. "Thou breakest down to build up, not destroy, Thou doest right, O Lord. Thou knowest best." Thus trusting, though you may bend to the blast, you will not break; you will hold on, and you will see your spring.—Margaret Bottome, in Advocate and Guardian.

TO GOD'S PEOPLE IN THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

BELOVED BRETHREN:—The recent General Assembly reappointed us to administer your work amongst the negroes. We have accepted the trust in reliance on you and in the confident hope that the grace of Christ will be freely given us to do the work aright. We take this early opportunity of laying before you the serious condition in which we find ourselves.

CLOSE OF INSTITUTE SESSION.

On May 31st, the institute (now by act of Assembly named "Stillman Institute") closed a most prosperous session. Twenty-six students were enrolled during the year—all Presbyterians. Three young men graduated and have gone forth with our blessing to preach the gospel. A splendid address was delivered by Rev. J. D. A. Brown, of Eutaw, Ala. The Institute expenses have been been full met.

THE PRESENT PRESSURE.

As we are now situated it will require $600 a month for the months of June, July, August and September to meet our necessary current expenses. We have now on our appropriation list the names of thirty colored ministers who are promised an average of $12 a month. The small sum is often the only sure means of support many of them have. The secretary's salary and traveling expenses are also included in the $600. To meet this expense we had June 1st, $7.42 in our treasury. Ordinarily our income for these months does not average much over $150 a month.

WAKE UP! LISTEN!

Will you consider for a few moments? 1. Chiefly within the short space of fifteen years we have gotten these results: colored ministers, 44; licentiates, 3; candidates, 23; churches, 66; elders, 130; deacons, 83; communicants, 1,505; added in last year, 217; Sabbath-school scholars, 1,749; whole amount of money raised by colored churches during last year, $2,451.

It is demonstrated beyond a doubt that we can bring many negroes into our Church with even the small efforts heretofore made. There are urgent calls for us to enter new fields and reap larger results.

2. The recent General Assembly adopted unanimously the following recommendation of its own standing committee: "That the administration of the work of the secrectary and Institute by the Executive Committee for the past year be approved, and that the committee be empowered to make such changes in the details of administration for the coming year, as economy, efficiency and progress may demand."

3. The Assembly declined to adopt the plan of the Birmingham Conference and "reaffirmed with emphasis that in the ultimate establishment and maintenance of a separate and independent African Presbyterian Church lies the surest and quickest way to the evangelization of the colored people." As in the past so in the future we shall prosecute this policy with all possible vigor and patience.

INTENSE EARNESTNESS.

Here we are, ready to do this work. We wish to send our secretary this summer into every colored congregation aided by us "to instruct, to comfort, and to stimulate them." His heart yearns to do this work. If he is turned aside from this purpose in order to raise money, we shall be greatly disappointed and are sure that the work will suffer in consequence. Here are our colored ministers whom we have educated and pledged to sustain, hindered in their work by the lack of bread for themselves and families. Here are the perishing thousands at our doors, poor, ignorant, superstitious, degraded, but longing for the light and hungering for God.

GOD LOOKS ON.

We stand in the presence of God to whom every one of us must give an account of himself, facing this duty, with this unequalled privilege passing away. O, brethren, is it not a shame that two hundred thousand people will not give a pitiful $600 month for this great undertaking? The time for discussion has passed by. The work is actually in progress. Shall it be sustained? Shall your committee be required to MAKE BRICKS WITHOUT STRAW?

Is it fair to call men to do a work without proper sympathy and support?

HAVE THE CHURCHES DEFAULTED?

During the year just closed only 781 churches, 31 Sabbath-schools, and eight societies contributed to this cause. Why did not the 871 non-contributing churches help? Have human considerations interfered? Are they not partakers of this trust? Surely they desire God's glory to be promoted amongst the poor and degraded. How will they answer God for this neglect? Is it from unbelief? If the gospel cannot save the negro, then farewell to all our hopes. Is it indifference? Let it be remembered that indifference is God's emetic.

THE END.

Finally, it has been many months since we appealed to the churches for support. We desire to get our income from the regular collections. But because they are not sufficient shall we remain silent? Nay, beloved brethren, we are constrained to let the matter now rest with you. Shall we be disappointed? Who will give $500 to start the movement afresh? Who will follow with $100? Let every body help. Why shall not the women's societies help us? And the Sabbath-schools? Let everybody help. Let us prove to our blessed Lord that all our professions of interest in this matter are not in vain. We speak earnestly, but the crisis is real, our need is actual. The call of God to higher and better work rings in our souls. We cannot forbear. We shall not be disappointed for our hope is in God and we trust His people.

We remain your brothers in Christ, E. H. Sholl, chairman; J. W. Lapsley, I. S. Handley, J. A. Bryan, John Barbour, J. H. Miller, R. D. Johnston, M. A. Mason, J. T. Searcy, E. P. Davis, A. L. Phillips, members Executive Committee Colored Evangelization.
